PREFACE.

It is a pleasant duty to testify to the assistance I have received from the colleagues who have been associated with me in the preparation of this work. Not alone have they checked and revised, and in many instances given valuable suggestions for the main part of the work, written by myself, but they have—subject to my plan and supervision—written a number of the articles in the CATALOGUE OF SUMMARY OFFENCES and CATALOGUE OF INDICTABLE OFFENCES. I feel that but for such assistance it would have been impossible for me to have produced the volume.

I am deeply indebted to a number of friends who very kindly helped me in a variety of ways. Mr. ST. LAURENCE DEVITT, of the Connaught Bar, collected a great part of the material for a couple of chapters in Part I; Mr. DIXON (of the D. M. P. Court) read the proofs of the chapter on the Dublin Metropolitan Police District; Mr. MICHAEL KAVANAGH, C. P. S., Wexford, Mr. LANG, C. P. S., Carrickmacross, and Mr. HARRIS, C. P. S., Kilmallock, assisted me by very valuable suggestions.

I shall feel very grateful to readers who will bring to my attention such errors or omissions as they may detect.

JAMES O'CONNOR.

ADDENDA ET CORRIGENDA.

Page 7, line 1.—Under the Corrupt and Illegal Practices Prevention Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 51), s. 6 (3) and s. 38 (5), a justice of the peace who is reported by an election court as having been guilty of corrupt practices at an election becomes ipso facto incapable of acting as a justice for seven years; and if, after he has been reported, he purports to act as a justice, his adjudication is void (R. (Mathews) v. M. Court, (1911) 45 I.L.T.R. 145).

Page 39, 2nd par.—The proposition submitted in the text, that imprisonment can be ordered on failure to pay the amount of a forfeited recognizance, has been laid down in R. (Carroll) v. Westmeath JJ., K.B.D., 24th April, 1911, as yet unreported.

Page 46, line 11.—For “Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1849,” read “Indictable Offences Act, 1848,” which statute refers to the preliminary hearing of indictable offences. The English statute as to summary offences is the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 1, enacting that “it shall be lawful for such justice or justices of the peace to issue his or their summons.” The general proposition in the text, that justices can exercise a reasonable discretion as to the issue of a summons in case of an offence triable summarily, is, it is submitted, well founded (see R. v. Bros, (1901) 18 T.L.R. 39; R. v. Kennedy, (1902) 86 L.T. 753).

Page 48 n.<sup>1</sup>—An inspector under the Food and Drugs Acts, immediately after the purchase of a pound of butter in a grocer’s shop, asked the shopkeeper whether that was his private address, and the shopkeeper replied in the affirmative, but the fact was that the shopkeeper resided elsewhere. Two summonses were issued against him and were served by being left in his absence with the wife of the tenant of one of the flats of the building of which the shop formed the ground-floor. The shopkeeper did not know that any proceedings had been taken against him until he received a notice that he had been convicted. Held, that the shop was not the defendant’s place of abode, as he did not live there, and that, as there was no evidence that he made the statement to the inspector with the object of evading service, he was not estopped from alleging that the summonses were not properly served, and therefore the conviction must be quashed (R. v. Lilley, (1911) 75 J.P. 95).

Page 90, line 32.—Where the consent of the Attorney-General is made a condition precedent to a prosecution, a conviction will be quashed where such consent has not been obtained (R. v. Bates, (1911) 27 T.L.R. 314).

Page 114, line 17.—The proposition submitted in the text is not well founded. A new licence can be granted for a part only of licensed premises (R. (Beirne) v. Limerick JJ., March, 1911, noted p. 1157, n.<sup>2</sup>); but a new licence cannot be granted in respect of each of two portions of the same licensed premises, so as to create two new licences in place of one (R. (Croghan) v. Mayo JJ., (1907) 2 I.R. 474).

Page 115, line 18.—The district inspector of the district where the applicant resides must be served; service on the district inspector of the district where the premises are situate is not sufficient. H., an applicant for a publican's licence, resided in police district K. She owned another house in police district B. The two houses were adjoining, though in different police districts. She sought the licence for the house in B police district. She had furnished and repaired the latter house, and her son and workmen had occasionally slept in it, but she had never slept in it. She served notice of application on the district inspector of B district, but not upon the district inspector of K district. Held, that the applicant's residence was not in district B, and that the service was bad (R. (O'Donoghue) v. Cork JJ., (1911) 45 I.L.T.R. 37).

Held, also (per Lord O'Brien, L.C.J.) that the house being in the country, the notice was bad because it omitted to specify the townland and barony (ib.).

Page 123, line 5.—The proposition, submitted in the text, that a transfer or renewal of a spirit grocer's licence can be granted at sessions other than the annual licensing sessions, is now laid down in R. (Robinson) v. Londonderry JJ., (1911) 45 I.L.T.R. 171. In the same case it was also laid down that the discretion vested in the justices to hear a renewal application at sessions other than the annual sessions is an absolute discretion, and that the existence of special circumstances is not essential to the exercise of such discretion in favour of the applicant for renewal.

Page 126, line 3.—In the town of Buncrana, on the shore of Lough Swilly, a large fish-curing industry was carried on, which, on Saturdays, was engaged in by several persons up till a late hour of the evening. In order to supply these persons on Saturdays, twelve publicans of the town applied to the magistrates for and obtained exemption orders under s. 11 of the Licensing Act, 1874. The principal fish-curing station was at the end of a pier, and the nearest of the licensed premises, in respect of which such order was granted, was about half a mile from the curing station. There were two licensed premises nearer, viz.: the railway refreshment room and the Lough Swilly Hotel,—but no exemption was applied for in respect of either of these premises, nor were the premises of a character likely to be resorted to or to supply the workers in the industry. Apparently there was no evidence of a direct nature of the necessity of the exemption order given on the application. Held, that the premises in respect of which the exemption orders were granted were in the "vicinity" of the industry, and that the magistrates had jurisdiction to make the orders (R. (Yeates) v. Donegal JJ., (1911) 45 I.L.T.R. 158).

Page 207, line 7.—There may be a right of way over the property, including the railway line of a railway company, and if a claim to such right is honestly raised, the jurisdiction of the justices to decide a question of trespass is ousted (Arnold v. Morgan, (1911) 103 L.T. 763).

Page 229, line 11.—In R. (Yeldham) v. Wicklow JJ., (1911) 45 I.L.T.R. 181, the K.B.D. held that they had no jurisdiction to quash a warrant issued by justices to enforce payment of town improvement rate, but the point was not argued, nor was the attention of the court called to R. (Hynes) v. Clare JJ., (1911) 45 I.L.T.R. 76.

Page 361, line 8 from foot.—In Henry v. Strahan, 45 I. L. T. & S. J. 186, the King’s Bench Division (Palles, C.B., and Madden, J.) held that service of a summons under the Cruelty to Animals Act, 1849, could be effected by serving the summons in any county in Ireland (though not the county of the justice issuing the summons in the adjoining county), inasmuch as such service was expressly authorized by s. 15 of the statute. But there was no appearance for the defendant, and the attention of the court does not seem to have been directed to the fact that s. 15 has been repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1892. The case, however, shows that as regards statutes passed prior to 1851, enacting a particular procedure, such procedure may be still in force notwithstanding the provisions of s. 10 of the Petty Sessions Act.

Page 460, line 27.—The defendant sold a pint of milk which was found to be deficient in milk-fat to the extent of 8 per cent. The justices found (a) that the milk supplied was as demanded—a pint of new milk as produced by the proper and honest milking of healthy and well-fed cattle; (b) that there had been no tampering with the milk, and that it was sold in the same condition as it came from the cow, and was of the nature, substance, and quality of new milk; (c) that the defendant neglected no precaution to procure that the produce of the cattle should be of the highest standard. Held, that, having regard to these findings, the conviction of the defendant could not be supported (O’Driscoll v. Dolan, (1911) 45 I.L.T.R. 144).

Page 466, line 4 from foot.—A limited company can be guilty of the offence of giving a false warranty under s. 20 (6) of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899 (Chuter v. Freeth and Pocock, Ltd., (1911) 27 T. L. R. 467).

Page 467, line 19.—The respondent, a milkman, sold to one Emma Bennett, in the street, at the doorstep of her house, some milk which purported to be pure milk from one cow, and poured it from a can into her jug. Bennett then went into her house and shut the door. The appellant, an inspector of weights and measures, who witnessed the transaction, immediately asked to be served with some milk from the same can, and was told by the respondent that it was diluted. The appellant immediately knocked at Bennett’s door, which was opened by her, she still having the jug in her hand. The appellant took a sample from the milk in her jug. On analysis it was found to contain thirty per cent. of added water. The respondent was accordingly summoned under sect. 3 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1879, which provides that an “inspector of weights and measures . . . may procure at the place of delivery any sample of any milk in course of delivery to the purchaser,” and that in the event of the milk proving on analysis to be adulterated, proceedings may be taken in the same manner as if the inspector had purchased it. The justices found that the milk was in the same condition when the sample was taken by the appellant as when it was poured into Bennett’s jug. They held, however, that at the time when the sample was taken the delivery to Bennett was complete and the milk was no longer “in course of delivery” to her within the meaning of sect. 3. They accordingly dismissed the information. Held (Pickford and Lush JJ., Lord Alverstone, C.J., dissenting), that there was evidence on which the justices could so find, and the appeal was accordingly dismissed (Helliwell v. Haskins, (1911) 27 T.L.R. 463).

Page 497, line 7.—The defendant carried on a sale of goods by means of a “wheel of fortune” in a house open to the public. Held, that the “wheel of fortune” was a lottery, and was a game, and that the defendant was guilty of having used the premises as a common gaming-house, contrary to 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 2 (Munro v. Kelly, (1911) 45 I.L.T.R. 179).

The two summonses were heard together, and, as the evidence on each was the same, the appellant’s counsel consented to their being dealt with simultaneously. The appellant was convicted and fined on each summons. At the next general licensing sessions the appellant applied for a renewal of his licence, which, however, the justices refused on the ground that the licence had, under s. 3 of the Act of 1872, been forfeited, inasmuch as the appellant had been convicted twice for offences against the section. Held, that the justices were wrong in so holding, inasmuch as a “second offence” within the section means an offence committed after a previous conviction (R. v. South Shields JJ., (1911) 27 T.L.R. 330. Quære, was the second conviction good, having regard to the first conviction on the same facts (ib.).

The defendant failed to conform to the regulations made under the Act of 1908, in that he sold a poisonous substance in a bottle which was not labelled with his name and address. The plaintiffs sued the defendant for the recovery of a penalty under s. 15 of the Pharmacy Act, 1868, which provides that any person who shall sell poisons, not being a registered pharmaceutical chemist, or chemist and druggist, shall be liable to pay a penalty which may be sued for. Held, that the defendant was liable to pay a penalty under s. 15, and none the less so because the facts showed that he had also committed an offence under s. 15 of the Act of 1868 (Pharmaceutical Society v. Jacks, (1911) 2 K.B. 115).

On the 9th of October, the veal, when in the possession of Kershaw, was seized by the respondent, an inspector of nuisances, on the ground that it was unsound and unfit for food. On the 10th of October it was condemned by a justice of the peace and destroyed. The veal was in fact unsound and unfit for the food of man at the time of its sale and seizure. The appellant was charged with an offence under s. 117 of the Public Health Act, 1875, as amended by s. 28 of the Act of 1890, corresponding to s. 133 of the Irish Act of 1878. On behalf of the appellant it was contended that as the veal at the time of the seizure was not the property of nor in the possession of the appellant, nor on her premises, no offence had been committed. Held, that, by virtue of s. 28 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, the conviction was right, although the seizure of the meat was elsewhere than on the premises of the appellant (Salt v. Tomlinson, (1911) 27 T.L.R. 427).

The defendant was not the owner of the pit, but the edge of his land by exposure and erosion had worn away, and now formed part of the top of the pit. From the lie of the land the existence of the pit was a danger to persons lawfully using the highway. Held, that the local authority were entitled, under s. 30 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907, to require the defendant to fence the pit in order to prevent danger therefrom (*Carshalton U.D.C. v. THE various matters within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace in Ireland may be classified as follows :—

- (A) Jurisdiction out of sessions ;<sup>1</sup>
- (B) Criminal jurisdiction at general or quarter sessions in cases tried therein with a jury ;<sup>2</sup>
- (C) Jurisdiction at petty sessions :—(1) to determine certain criminal or quasi-criminal cases in a summary way,<sup>3</sup> (2) to determine certain matters of a civil nature, e.g. under the Small Debts Act,<sup>4</sup> and (3) to grant certain licensing certificates ;<sup>5</sup>
- (D) Jurisdiction at quarter sessions to determine certain appeals<sup>6</sup> and in connection with certain other licensing certificates, &c.<sup>7</sup>

Before the reign of Edward 3, persons called conservators of the peace were chosen by the freeholders of the county, but by 1 Ed. 3, st. 2, c. 16, it was enacted that thenceforth in every county certain persons should be assigned, that is, by commission, to keep the peace. The statute 34 Ed. 3, c. 1, gave them power to hear and determine felonies and trespasses done in their county, and in the 36 Ed. 3, c. 12, they are styled justices of the peace. “ The power of justices of the peace is traced to a statute of Edward 3, which was made the foundation of the commission of the peace, though some have thought it did not warrant the crown in granting so large an authority. We cannot question the validity of the commission, which has been in operation for centuries ” (per Lord Denman in R. v. Dunn, (1840) 12 A. & E., at p. 617).

Justices of the peace are of two classes, according as they are appointed by (a) statute, or (b) the Lord Chancellor.

Justices by statute.

By section 3 (4) of the Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898, the chairman of every county council shall, during the term of and by virtue of his office, be a justice of the peace for the county. By section 26 (1), where an urban or rural county district in any county contains a population, according to the last published census for the time being, exceeding five thousand, the chairman of the council for the district shall, unless a woman or personally disqualified by any Act, be during the term of and by virtue of his office a justice of the peace for the county; but, except when sitting in quarter or general sessions, shall act only within the petty sessional district or districts comprising the county district, or any part of the county district.<sup>1</sup> By section 26 (2), the chairman of the council of any urban county district who is not a justice of the peace under section 26 (1), and also the chairman of the commissioners of any town, shall, if not a woman or personally disqualified by any Act, be a justice of the peace in like manner as if he had been appointed by the Lord Chancellor under section 29 of the Towns Improvement (Ireland) Act, 1854. By subsection 4, the power of the Lord Chancellor under section 29 of the Towns Improvement Act, 1854, to select a commissioner to act as justice of the peace shall cease. By subsection 5 it is declared that this section shall apply to a borough not having a separate commission of the peace, with the substitution of mayor for chairman, but shall not apply to any other borough.<sup>2</sup> Section 29 of the Towns Improvement (Ireland) Act, 1854, enacted that a justice appointed pursuant to the provisions of that section should have the jurisdiction and authority of and be a justice of the peace within the boundaries of the town as specified for the purposes of the Act, and for such purposes only provided such town be not situate within the Dublin metropolitan police district.<sup>3</sup> The purposes of the Act are the determination of the offences set forth in section 72 of the Act, comprising a number of offences against good order in the streets of towns within the statute, besides other miscellaneous minor offences (see Stevenson v. O'Neill, (1877) I.R. 11 C.L. 134, 140).

A chairman of a council who is a justice by virtue of the Local Government Act must, if he has not already done so, take the oaths required by law to be taken by a justice of the peace ('s. 3 (4), s. 26 (3)), that is, the oath of allegiance and the judicial oath (see 31 & 32 Vict. c. 72, s. 6). On re-election, the oaths need not be retaken ('s. 95 (1)). Every such chairman in his capacity of justice, but not otherwise, is subject to the same restrictions, qualifications, and power of removal by the Lord Chancellor as any other justice of the peace (s. 95 (2)). Justices by He need not renew the oaths upon the demise of the Crown (R. statute. (Harvey) v. Tyrone JJ., (1901) 36 I.L.T.R. 106, 2 N.I.J.R. 59),<sup>1</sup> and is entitled to act as a justice until his successor has accepted office and subscribed the declaration required by Article 37 of the Application of Enactments Order of 22nd December, 1898 (R. (Scott) v. Londonderry JJ., (1903) 2 I.R. 101, 3 N.I.J.R. 1). A chairman of town commissioners who is a justice of the peace by virtue of section 26 (2) is not qualified to take part in licensing business at quarter sessions (R. (Gilchrist) v. Tyrone JJ., (1899) 34 I.L.T.R. 9), or, it is submitted, in adjudicating upon such applications for licensing certificates as come before justices at petty sessions.

The inspector-general of the Royal Irish constabulary and deputy inspectors-general are justices of the peace by virtue of their office (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 13, ss. 5 & 7). A county court judge is a justice of the peace for the county or riding to which he is appointed (14 & 15 Vict. c. 57, s. 2). Under the Municipal Corporations (Ireland) Act, 1840, 3 & 4 Vict. c. 108, the mayor of a borough is a justice of the peace for the borough, and has precedence in all places within the borough<sup>2</sup> (s. 84).

A divisional justice of the city of Dublin is a justice of the peace for the counties of Dublin, Wicklow, Kildare, and Meath (5 Geo. 4, c. 102, s. 9).

Resident Magistrates are appointed by the Lord Lieutenant, and hold office during his pleasure (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 13, ss. 31–33), and are styled “Resident Magistrates” (see 16 & 17 Vict. c. 60, 37 & 38 Vict. c. 23). A Resident Magistrate is a justice of the county<sup>3</sup> or counties for which he is appointed, and must take the oaths required to be taken by a justice of the peace (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 13, s. 31).

The salaries and allowances of Resident Magistrates are fixed by 37 & 38 Vict. c. 23, as follows:—Class I, consisting of twenty, £625; Class II, consisting of thirty-two, £550; Class III, consisting of the remainder, £425; and each is in addition entitled to £100 a year for travelling within his district, and to such allowances for absence from home and for other travelling as the Treasury sanctions.

Justices are also appointed by the Lord Chancellor under his seal, and the instrument giving them their authority is called the Commission. Justices for the city of Dublin receive their appointment from the Lord Lieutenant, on receipt of whose warrant the commission is issued to them. No commission is issued to the persons who are justices by virtue of their office.

Appointment
by the Lord Chancellor.

The form of the Commission is as follows:—

George V, by the Grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, and so forth, to A. B., C. D., &c. [the names of the members of the Privy Council, the Judges, and King's Counsel],<sup>4</sup> are first inserted in every commission, and after them the justices of the county]. Greeting.

<sup>4</sup> Every King's Counsel is mentioned, and is entitled to act as justice for any county on taking the necessary oaths. The Recorder of every borough is a justice of the borough (Municipal Corporations (Ir.) Act, 1840, s. 166).

Commission.

Know ye, that we, reposing special trust and confidence in your fidelity, prudence, and care, have appointed, and by these presents do appoint you and every of you, jointly and severally, our justices to keep our peace in our county of _____, and to keep and cause to be kept all ordinances and statutes made for the good of our peace, and for the conservation of the same, and for the quiet rule and government of our people, in all and every the articles thereof in our said county (as well within the liberties as without) according to the force, form, and effect thereof; and to chastise and punish all persons offending against the form of those ordinances and statutes or any of them in the county aforesaid, as according to the form of those ordinances and statutes shall be fit to be done, and to cause to come before you or any of you all those persons who shall threaten any of our people in their person, or with burning their houses, to find sufficient security for the peace, or for their good behaviour towards us and our people; and if they shall refuse to find such security, then to cause them to be safely kept in our prison until they have found such security.

We have also assigned, and by these presents do assign you or every two or more of you, of whom the aforesaid A. B., C. D., &c., we will shall be one, our justices in and throughout the county aforesaid (as well within the liberties as without) to inquire by the oath of good and lawful men of our county aforesaid, and by all other lawful ways and means) by whom the truth of the matter may be better known, of all and all manner of treasons,<sup>1</sup> murders, manslaughters, burnings, unlawful assemblies, felonies, robberies, witchcrafts, enchantments, sorceries, magic arts, trespasses, forestallings, regratings, engrossings, and extortions whatsoever, and of all and singular other misdeeds and offences of which the justices of our peace can or ought lawfully to inquire by whomsoever or howsoever done or committed, or that hereafter shall happen howsoever to be done or committed in the county aforesaid, and also of all those who presume by unlawful assemblies to be disturbers of our peace and of our people within our said county, and also of all those who in the county aforesaid have either gone or ridden, or that hereafter shall presume to go or ride in companies with armed force against our peace to the disturbance of our peace, and also of all those who in like manner have lain in wait, or hereafter shall presume to lie in wait to maim or kill our people, and also of all inn-holders, and of all and singular other persons who have offended, or attempted or hereafter shall presume to offend, or attempt in the abuse of weights and measures, or in the sale of victuals against the form of the ordinances and statutes or any of them in that behalf, made for the common good of our kingdom of Ireland and of our people thereof in the county aforesaid; as also of all sheriffs, bailiffs, seneschals, constables, gaolers, and other officers whatsoever who in the execution of their offices about the premises or any of them have unlawfully demeaned themselves, or that hereafter shall presume unlawfully to demean themselves, or have been or hereafter shall be careless, remiss, or negligent in the county aforesaid, and of all and singular articles and circumstances, and all other things whatsoever by whomsoever, and howsoever done or perpetrated in the county aforesaid, or that shall hereafter there happen howsoever to be done or attempted in anywise more fully concerning the truth of the premises or any of them, and to inspect all indictments whatsoever so before you or any of you taken, or to be taken or made before others late justices of the peace in the county aforesaid, and not as yet determined, and to make and continue the process thereupon against all and singular persons so indicted, or which hereafter shall happen to be indicted before you until they be apprehended, render themselves or be outlawed; and to hear and determine all and singular the matters aforesaid (treason excepted) according to the laws and statutes of our Kingdom of Ireland as in the like case has been used and ought to be done; and to chastise and punish the said persons offending and every of them for their offences, by fines, ransoms, amerciments, forfeitures, or otherwise as ought and hath been used to be done according to the laws and customs of our Kingdom of Ireland, or the form of the ordinances or statutes aforesaid, and to discharge our gaols of all prisoners therein detained and imprisoned for felony.

Provided always that if a case of difficulty upon the determination of any of the premises shall happen to arise before you or any two or more of you, then do not you or any two or more of you proceed to give judgment thereon, except Form of Commission.

it be in the presence of one of our justices, of one or other bench, or one of the barons of our Exchequer, or of one of our counsel learned in the law.

And we therefore command you and every of you that you diligently attend the keeping of the peace, ordinances, and statutes, and all and singular other the premises; and at certain days and places which you or any two or more of you as aforesaid shall in that behalf appoint, you make inquiries upon the premises; and hear and determine all and singular the premises (except as before excepted), and perform and fulfil the same in form aforesaid, doing therein that which to justice appertaineth according to the laws and customs of our said Kingdom of Ireland, saving to us the amerciments and other things to us thereof belonging.

We also command by virtue of these presents our sheriff of our county aforesaid, that at certain days and places which you or any two or more of you shall make known to him as aforesaid, he cause to come before you or any two or more of you as aforesaid, such and so many good and lawful men of his bailiwick (as well within liberties as without), by whom the truth of the matter in the premises may be better known and inquired of.

Lastly we have assigned you the aforesaid (here the name of the person appointed Custos Rotulorum) keeper of the rolls of our peace in our said county; and therefore you shall cause to be brought before you and your said companions at the said days and places the writs, precepts, processes, and indictments aforesaid, that the same may be inspected, and by a due course of law determined as aforesaid. Witness our Lieutenant-General and General Governor of our said Kingdom of Ireland, at Dublin, the

Each justice of the peace is required to take an oath of allegiance and the judicial oath (31 & 32 Vict. c. 72).<sup>1</sup>

FORM OF OATH OF ALLEGIANCE.

I, _____, do swear by Almighty God that I will be faithful and Oath of bear true allegiance to His Majesty King George V, his heirs and successors, allegiance.
according to law.

FORM OF JUDICIAL OATH.

I, _____, do swear by Almighty God that I will well and truly Judicial serve our Sovereign Lord, King George V, in the office of justice of the oath.
peace for the county of _____, and I will do right to all manner of people after the laws and usages of the realm without fear or favour, affection or ill will.

New magistrates, appointed by ordinary commission of the peace, can be sworn in before the persons authorized as above mentioned on production of their commission.

The chairman of county and district councils and chairman of town commissioners, who become magistrates under the Local Government Act for the term of and by virtue of their office, and who are not named in the ordinary commissions of the peace, can also be sworn in as magistrates before the persons authorized as above mentioned, on production of a certificate from the secretary or clerk of the council that such person has been elected chairman, and has made the declaration accepting office. Such certificate, save in the case of the chairman of a county council, should also state whether the population of the district according to the last published census is above or below 5000. The certificate and signed copy of the oath should be transmitted at the earliest opportunity to the Clerk of the Crown and Hanaper, Four Courts, Dublin.

Boroughs
having separate commissions of the peace.

By section 157 of the Municipal Corporations (Ireland) Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 108), justices of the peace may be appointed for each borough mentioned in Schedule A. to that Act to which a commission of the peace shall be granted, and also for the towns of Galway and Carrickfergus, such justices to reside in the borough or within seven miles thereof. A separate commission of the peace was granted previous to the statute to Galway and Carrickfergus, and since the statute to Belfast, Clonmel, Cork, Drogheda, Dublin, Kilkenny, Limerick, Londonderry, Sligo, Waterford. The Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898, s. 17, abolishes the separate commission of the peace for Galway and Carrickfergus, and provides that the borough justices of these towns shall be justices for the counties of Galway and Antrim respectively. Every county justice is a justice for any borough within the county to which a separate court of sessions of the peace has not been assigned (Municipal Corporations Act, 1840, s. 173; ; but in boroughs to which a separate court of quarter sessions has been assigned, the borough justices have exclusive jurisdiction as to matters arising within the borough (ib.). Separate courts of quarter sessions were assigned to Belfast, Cork, Drogheda, Dublin, Kilkenny, Limerick, Londonderry, Waterford, Galway, and Carrickfergus. Drogheda and Kilkenny are now urban county districts (Local Government Act, 1898, s. 40), and by Order in Council of 22nd December, 1899, they became quarter sessions districts; and consequently they are no longer boroughs within section 173, and the county justices have jurisdiction therein.

In a borough which has no separate court of quarter sessions, the borough justices and county justices have co-ordinate jurisdiction at petty sessions in respect of matters arising within the borough; and it is submitted that the mayor has no right of precedence at petty sessions (see Lawson v. Reynolds, (1904) 1 Ch. 718; Ex parte Mayor of Birmingham, (1860) 30 L.J.Q.B. 2).

Fees.

A fee of £2 is payable by a justice newly appointed by commission: no fees are payable by justices deriving their authority from statute.

Disqualifica-

Certain persons are disqualified, wholly or partially, from acting as justices. A bankrupt or arranging debtor is disqualified from acting until he has been newly assigned<sup>1</sup> (Debtors Act (Ireland), 1872, s. 21). A bankrupt is disqualified from being appointed or acting until his adjudication is annulled, or he obtains his discharge and a certificate that his bankruptcy was caused by misfortune without any misconduct on his part (Bankruptcy Act, 1883, 46 & 47 Vict. c. 52, s. 32 (1), see also s. 32 (3)).<sup>2</sup> Other persons disqualified are—sheriff or under-sheriff during tenure of office (7 Wm. 3, c. 13, s. 3, Ir.); clerk of crown and peace (40 & 41 Vict. c. 56, s. 13). A justice is not disqualified by being appointed coroner (Davis v. Pembroke-shire JJ., (1881) 7 Q.B.D. 513). A person who is convicted on indictment or information of any corrupt practice at a parliamentary election is disqualified from holding any public or judicial office for seven years from the date of his conviction (Corrupt and Illegal

Practices Prevention Act, 1883, s. 6). "Judicial office" includes the office of justice of the peace (ib., s. 64). Every person who is reported by an election court or election commissioners to have been guilty of any corrupt or illegal practice at an election<sup>1</sup> shall be subject to the same incapacity as he would be subject to if he had at the date of such election been convicted of the offence of which he is reported to have been guilty (ib., s. 38 (5)), and where such person is a justice of the peace he shall be reported by the Attorney-General to the Lord Chancellor, who shall have the same right, in case of a person acting as a justice of the peace by virtue of being a mayor of a borough, to remove him as if he were named in a commission of the peace (ib., s. 38 (6), s. 69 (7, 8)). Where upon the trial of a municipal election petition, it is reported by the election court that any corrupt practice, other than treating and undue influence, has been proved to have been committed by or with the knowledge and consent of any candidate, or that the offence of treating or undue influence has been proved to have been committed by any candidate, that candidate shall be subject to the same incapacities as if at the date of the said report he had been convicted of a corrupt practice at a parliamentary election (Municipal Elections (Corrupt and Illegal Practices) Act, 1884, s. 3).<sup>2</sup>

tion.

Section 23 of the last-mentioned statute makes the provisions of s. 38 (5), (6) of the Corrupt and Illegal Practices Prevention Act, 1883, ante, applicable to municipal elections.

No property qualification for the office of justice of the peace is required.

Property
qualification
not necessary.
Determination of the office.

The office of justice of the peace subsists only during the pleasure of the King, and is determinable (a) by express writ under the great seal discharging the justice from his office; (b) by writ of supersedeas, which suspends the power of the justices, but does not totally destroy it, as it may be revived again by writ of procedendo; (c) by a new commission which virtually, though silently, discharges all the former justices that are not included therein, for the two commissions cannot subsist at once (Nun and Walsh, 2nd ed, p. 8); or (d) as stated in the preceding paragraph. The office is not vacated on the demise of the Crown, and the oaths need not be retaken to the new Sovereign (Demise of the Crown Act, 1901, 1 Ed. 7, c. 5; opinion of the judicial committee of the Privy Council, noted, 74 J. P. 389 (Aug. 13, 1910)).

The usual practice to obtain a commission is to apply through the lieutenant of the county, who forwards particulars of the application to the Lord Chancellor, in whose absolute discretion the appointment rests. In the city of Dublin, application should be made (through the Under Secretary) to the Lord Lieutenant, with whom the appointment rests.

Application
sion.

A justice of the peace cannot act as a juror at any sessions of the peace, or in any civil bill court, or recorder's court, within the jurisdiction of which he is a justice (Juries (Ir.) Act, 1871, s. 29).

Not to act as jurors.

The Custos Rotulorum, as the name signifies, is the titular keeper of the rolls, or records of the county. The office is granted by the Lord Lieutenant (1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 17, s. 3), usually to the Lieutenant of the county; and always to one of the commission of the peace for the county. Formerly the appointment to the clerkship of the peace was in the gift of the Custos Rotulorum (Forbes v. Lloyd, (1876) I.R. 10 C.L., at p. 559). Now, by 40 & 41 Vict. c. 56, s. 8, the offices of the Clerk of the Crown and Clerk of the Peace are united, and the appointment is in the gift of the Lord Lieutenant.

The Lord Lieutenants of counties in England were originally appointed, about the time of Henry VIII, to keep the counties in military order. In Ireland power was given by 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 17,<sup>1</sup> to the Lord Lieutenant to appoint Lieutenants of counties to have the same powers as governors of counties theretofore had (raising militia, &c.), and also such powers as are prescribed in the patent of appointment. The appointment is vested in the Lord Lieutenant under the Militia Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 49, ss. 29, 53); and the Lieutenant of the county may appoint deputies, subject to the sanction of the Lord Lieutenant (ib., ss. 30, 53). The jurisdiction and power of the Lieutenants over the militia, yeomanry, and volunteers, save as to militia ballots, are taken from them and vested in the Crown (Militia Act, 1882, ss. 5, 54), and the only powers now vested in them are those prescribed by the letters patent, including the same powers as are vested in sheriffs for the preservation of the peace, e.g., raising the posse comitatus. The qualifications of a deputy lieutenant are:—being a resident peer or heir-apparent of a peer, or possession of or being heir-apparent to landed property value £200 a year, or possession of income of £200 a year (s. 33). Under the Militia Act, 1882 (ss. 29, 53), and the Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898, s. 69, Lieutenants are appointed for the Cities of Dublin, Cork, Limerick, Waterford, Belfast, and Londonderry.

The term “stipendiary magistrate” is an English term, meaning a paid magistrate appointed for any city, town, liberty, borough, or place in England, outside the London metropolitan police district (11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 29). It sometimes occurs in statutes common to England and Ireland, and, when it does so, it apparently will not include a Resident Magistrate unless the statute contains a definition to that effect, or the construction of the statute clearly requires such an extended meaning. Thus a Resident Magistrate is not a stipendiary magistrate within section 5 of the Licensing Act, 1872 (R. (Jackson) v. Tipperary JJ., (1894) 28 I.L.T.R. 107); and it is submitted that the same remark applies to section 16 of the Criminal Justice Act, 1855, and section 547 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894. It has been held that the expression includes a Dublin divisional justice for the purpose of the Married Women (Maintenance in case of Desertion) Act, 1886 (R. (Redding) v. Swift, (1909) 2 I.R. 302), and it is submitted that it includes, and means only, a Resident Magistrate within section 17 of the Prevention of Crime Act, 1871, and within section 2 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Ir.) Act, 1862. “Stipendiary magistrate” is expressly defined by section 610 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (for the purposes of that section), to mean a Resident Magistrate, and a similar definition is given by section 77 of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, for the purposes of that Act. As to use of the term in the Extradition Act, 1870, see p. 302.

The court of quarter sessions is an inferior court of record, and has power to imprison for contempt committed in the face of the court (Ex parte Pater, (1864) 5 B. & S. 299; R. v. Lefroy, (1873) L.R. 8 Q.B. 134; and has an inherent power of adjournment (Keen v. R., (1847) 10 Q.B. 928; R. v. Westmoreland JJ., (1868) L.R. 3 Q.B. 457).<sup>5</sup>

Justices assembled at quarter sessions have power, derived from their commission, to try, with the assistance of a jury, criminal causes sent forward to the sessions. The words of the commission are “do assign you . . . our justices in and throughout the county aforesaid to inquire by the oath of good and lawful men of our county aforesaid . . . all and all manner of treasons, murders, manslaughters, burnings, unlawful assemblies, felonies,” &c., and to “hear and determine all and singular the matters aforesaid, treason excepted.”<sup>6</sup>

<sup>5</sup> In Keen v. R. the defendant pleaded guilty to a misdemeanour at the quarter sessions, and was bound by recognizances to appear for judgment at the next quarter sessions, and judgment was respited. At the next April sessions judgment was further respited until the June sessions, when judgment was given. Held, that the court had power to respite cases from one session to another. “The sessions may adjourn the case, although the sessions itself is not adjourned” (ib., per Erle, J.). In R. v. Westmoreland JJ., a presentment in respect of certain prisons came before the court of quarter sessions, in pursuance of advertisements duly published, as required by the statute in that behalf. The presentment was considered, and it was resolved that the matter should be referred to a select committee, to report to the next ensuing sessions. At the next ensuing sessions an order was made, no fresh notice having been given. Held, that a fresh notice was not necessary, as it was competent for the justices to adjourn the matter. As to adjourning licensing applications, see p. 116.

<sup>6</sup> As regards treason, an indictment for treason may be found by a sessional grand jury, but the quarter sessions have no power to hear the case. The jurisdiction is to inquire, but not to hear and determine (Hayes, 728).

Criminal

But while the quarter sessions have, in terms, powers almost as wide as those of the assizes, in practice, cases of murder and other cases of great gravity or difficulty are sent forward to the assizes; and in any case proper to be sent to the assizes, but, per incuriam, returned to quarter sessions, the chairman of quarter sessions will adjourn the case to the assizes on the application of the Crown solicitor.

By statute, the following offences are not triable at quarter sessions:—poaching at night by bodies of armed men (9 Geo. 4, c. 69, s. 9); frauds by agents, bankers, or factors under ss. 75 to 86 of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 87); offences of personation in order to obtain property against the False Personation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 36, s. 3); corrupt practices at parliamentary elections (17 & 18 Vict. c. 102, s. 10; 46 & 47 Vict. c. 51, s. 53); offences against the Official Secrets Act, 1889, Prevention of Corruption Act, 1906 (6 Ed. 7, c. 34), and Punishment of Incest Act, 1908, 8 Ed. 7, c. 45, s. 4 (2). In cases which are triable as properly at quarter sessions as at assizes it is the duty of the justice to return the cases for the earliest trial. If a bill be found at quarter sessions, and for one reason or another (e.g., the disagreement of a jury) the case is sent forward to the assizes, there is an authority to the effect that, at assizes, a fresh bill must be found (R. v. McCabe, (1841) 2 C. & D. 235, Perrin, J.); but this decision, it is submitted, is not sound, and in a case tried at Waterford spring assizes (1909) the prisoner was tried before Palles, C.B., on a bill found by a grand jury at the preceding quarter sessions (R. v. James Breen, unreported).

If there is no other justice of the peace present, the county court judge may himself proceed with the criminal and other business of the quarter sessions. He is, by virtue of his office, chairman of the justices at quarter sessions (14 & 15 Vict. c. 57, s. 2); but his position gives him, strictly speaking, no greater right than any other justice (see remarks of Palles, C.B., in R. (Kennedy) v. Antrim JJ., (1903) 2 I.R., at p. 675, 37 I.L.T.R. 130). In cities which have Recorders, the quarter sessions are held before the Recorder sitting as sole judge (3 & 4 Vict. c. 108, ss. 164, 168).

accused to come up for sentence.

The appellant was convicted at quarter sessions on an indictment for larceny, and was required to enter into a recognizance under the Probation of Offenders Act, 1907, to appear for sentence when called upon. The recognizance contained conditions, and for a breach of one of these the appellant was subsequently called upon to appear before the quarter sessions for sentence. It was contended on behalf of the appellant that s. 6 (5) of the Probation of Offenders Act, 1907, only applied to persons bound over to appear for conviction and sentence, and did not apply to a person bound over to appear for sentence only, and therefore that there was no jurisdiction to pass sentence upon the appellant. Held, that, apart from any statutory provisions, the quarter sessions had power to bind over the appellant to appear for sentence when called upon, and that that court had jurisdiction to pass sentence upon the appellant quite apart from the provisions of s. 6 (5) of the Act of 1907 (R. v. Spratling, (1910) 27 T.L.R. 31). "To bind a convicted prisoner over to appear for sentence when called upon is only to postpone sentence, and in the meantime release the prisoner on bail. This power has constantly been acted upon, and we see no reason to doubt that it exists; and that the jurisdiction to pass sentence still remains in the court. We must not, however, be taken to decide that the court can postpone sentence sine die against the will of the prisoner" (ib., per Pickford, J.; see also Keen v. R., p. 9 n., supra).

A case may be reserved by the quarter sessions for the Court of Crown Cases Reserved (11 & 12 Vict. c. 78, s. 1).<sup>1</sup>

In each year the general quarter sessions of the peace (save for the city of Dublin and the county of Cork) shall be held as follows:—the Easter Sessions on any of the fourteen days next after March 25th; Summer Sessions on any day between the fourth day and the twelfth day next after the last day of Trinity Term, both days inclusive; the October Sessions on any of the fourteen days next after October 8th; the Hilary Sessions on any of the fourteen days next after December 26th (14 & 15 Vict. c. 57, s. 21). Special provision is made for the county of Cork by ss. 23, 24 of the same statute, and for the city of Dublin by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 108, s. 164.

The Clerkship of the Crown and Clerkship of the Peace were formerly distinct offices. The Clerk of the Peace held the same position towards the court of quarter sessions as the Clerk of the Crown held to the assizes. The two offices were united by 40 & 41 Vict. c. 56, s. 8, but the offices are still held separately by the officers who occupied the offices before the date of the passing of 40 & 41 Vict. c. 56.

The chief duties of the Clerk of the Crown and the Peace are:—

(1) At assizes and quarter sessions, the calling over of the panels, swearing of the juries, arraignment of the accused and receiving the verdict.

(2) Charge of the county records, which he has as representative of the Custos Rotulorum, and also of documents deposited pursuant to standing orders of Parliament (7 Wm. 4 and 1 Vict. c. 83, s. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 9), Fishery Bye-Laws (5 & 6 Vict. c. 106, s. 92), and of Acts and documents deposited pursuant to the Lands Clauses and other Acts.

(3) Duties as clerk to chairman of quarter sessions and registrar of civil bill court, and in civil bill proceedings, including taking accounts in equity and other matters.

(4) Duties regarding licences to private asylums, and publican's licences.

(5) Duties as to jury lists, parliamentary registration and fines, forfeitures and recognizances.

(6) Registration of ejectment decrees.

Jurisdiction out of sessions.

THE jurisdiction of justices out of sessions may be classified as follows:—(1) the examination of persons charged with indictable offences, the taking of informations, and returning for trial or the refusal of informations and discharge of the person charged, with which alone this chapter is concerned; (2) the binding over to keep the peace and be of good behaviour, dealt with in a separate chapter (p. 33); (3) power to determine cases not within the Petty Sessions Act (see p. 41), and a very limited class of cases within that Act as to which, see p. 45; (4) miscellaneous powers and duties, such as visiting prisons, powers of arrest, in case of riot, &c. (dealt with in a separate chapter, p. 144).

What is an indictable offence.

Offences are divided into (a) treasons, (b) felonies, (c) misdemeanours. The distinction between felonies and misdemeanours is very ancient. The list of felonies at common law comprised the more serious offences, which in olden times were punishable by death; and to this list have been added certain felonies by statute. Some of the chief distinctions, for practical purposes, between felony and misdemeanour are:— 1, powers of arrest are wider in case of felony than misdemeanour;<sup>1</sup> (2) in felonies the prisoner has twenty peremptory challenges, in misdemeanours, only six; (3) more than one distinct felony cannot, subject to certain statutory exceptions, be joined in the same indictment, whereas in misdemeanour any number of charges may be made in the same indictment; (4) differences as to bail;<sup>2</sup> (5) a conviction of felony, with a sentence of imprisonment with hard labour, or imprisonment without hard labour, exceeding twelve months, works a forfeiture of any public office (33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, s. 2); (6) to compound a felony is itself a criminal offence; it is doubtful if compounding a misdemeanour is criminal (Russell, 7th ed., 580, Dillon v. O'Brien, (1887) 20 L.R.I. 317). All felonies are punishable on indictment.<sup>1</sup> A misdemeanour is any offence less than a felony, and all such offences are punishable by indictment, unless where the statute otherwise declares, or makes the offence punishable merely in a summary manner.<sup>2</sup> The general rule is that where an Act of Parliament creates an offence and prescribes no remedy for it, the offence is an indictable misdemeanour (per Charles, J., in R. v. Hall, (1891) 1 Q.B. 767), which will be punishable either by fine, or by imprisonment without hard labour, or both, within the discretion of the court; and the offender may also be required to find sureties to keep the peace or be of good behaviour (Russell, 7th ed., 249).<sup>3</sup>

What is an indictable offence.

The steps in connection with the preliminary investigation of indictable offences outside of Dublin metropolitan police district (as to which see p. 319) are now regulated by the Petty Sessions Act, 1851, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 93. Such investigation usually takes place in open court and at petty sessions. But there is nothing whatever to compel a justice to hold such inquiry at petty sessions, and the statute expressly enacts that the place where the investigation of indictable offences is held is not to be deemed an open court, and gives the justice power to exclude the public (s. 9 (2)). Any one justice may conduct the inquiry.<sup>4</sup> The justices may meet privately in their chamber, when a crime of a serious character has been committed, to consider the proper course they should pursue; and an application for a writ of prohibition to prevent their doing so will not be granted (R. v. Dublin JJ., (1875) I.R. 9 C.L. 85).

Place of preliminary investigation not a court.

Speaking generally, two matters must concur to give a justice jurisdiction: (a) the offence must be committed within the county (or borough) for which the justice is in commission; (b) the jurisdiction must be exercised within the county (or borough), so that both the justice and the offender must be within the county (or borough).<sup>5</sup>

Limits of jurisdiction.

A justice has jurisdiction throughout the entire county for which he is in commission<sup>6</sup> and not merely in the district for which he

<sup>2</sup> There are certain breaches of statute not punishable either by indictment or summarily. For instance, a breach of duty by an overseer within section 51 of the Parliamentary Registration Act, 1843, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 18, was held not to be punishable as an indictable misdemeanour, but to subject the offender to a fine by the revising barrister, or a right of action by the person aggrieved (R. v. Hall, (1891) 1 Q.B. 747). "It seems to be a good general ground that, wherever a statute prohibits a matter of public grievance to the liberties and securities of a subject, or commands a matter of public convenience, as the repairing of common streets of a town, an offender against such statute is punishable, not only at the suit of the party aggrieved, but also by way of indictment for this contempt of the statute, unless such method of proceeding do manifestly appear to be excluded by it. Where a statute makes a new offence which was no way prohibited by the common law, and appoints a peculiar manner of proceeding against the offender, as by commitment, or action of debt, or information, &c., without mentioning an indictment, it seems to be settled to this day that it would not maintain an indictment, because the mentioning the other methods of proceeding seems impliedly to exclude that of indictment" (Hawk., B. 2, c. 25, s. 4, referred to by Charles, J., in R. v. Hall, supra, at p. 753).

<sup>3</sup> In the CATALOGUE OF INDICTABLE OFFENCES each offence will be stated to be a felony, or misdemeanour, as the case may be. Save as provided by statute, there is no limitation of time to a criminal prosecution on indictment.

<sup>4</sup> But in doubtful cases of felony one justice alone should not act: see 9 Geo. 4, c. 54, s. 1, APPENDIX OF STATUTES.

usually acts or is appointed; he can, therefore, while acting in one petty sessions district, commit for trial on a charge arising in another district (R. v. Beckley, (1887) 20 Q.B.D. 187).

The limits of a justice's jurisdiction, however, have been enlarged by various statutes. Thus, a justice has jurisdiction whenever information shall be given to him that any person has committed, or is suspected to have committed, any offence within the limits of jurisdiction of such justice, or that any person has committed, or is suspected to have committed, any offence out of the jurisdiction of the justice, either in Great Britain or Ireland, or the Channel Isles or Isle of Man, and that such person is residing, or being, or is suspected to reside, or be, within the limits of jurisdiction of such justice; or that any person has committed, or is suspected to have committed, any offence whatsoever on the high seas or in any creek, harbour, haven, or other place in which the Admiralty of England or Ireland have or claim to have jurisdiction,<sup>1</sup> or on land beyond the seas for which an indictment can be legally preferred in the United Kingdom of England and Ireland,<sup>2</sup> and such person is residing, or being, or is suspected to reside, or be, within the limits of the jurisdiction of such justice (Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 10).<sup>3</sup> As to proceeding against an offender in a foreign country, see the Extradition Acts, 1870 to 1906; and as to persons found in one part of His Majesty's dominions and accused of an offence in another part, see the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, 44 & 45 Vict. c. 69; both noted in the chapter, FUGITIVE CRIMINALS.

Moreover, a justice for any county may act as such in all matters arising within such county, although he may at the time happen to be in an adjoining county, provided he shall be also a justice for such adjoining county (Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 7 (1)). A justice for any county may in like manner act as such in all matters arising within such county, although he may at the time happen to be in any city, town, or place, being a county of itself, situated within or adjoining to such first-mentioned county, whether he shall be a justice of such city, town, or place, or not; but nothing herein contained shall extend to empower any justice for any county, not being also a justice for any such city, town, or place as aforesaid, or any person acting under him, to act, or intermeddle in any matters arising within any such city, town, or place (ib., s. 7 (2)).<sup>1</sup> Limits of jurisdiction.

<sup>2</sup> Apart from statute, there is no jurisdiction in an Irish court to take cognizance of any crime committed on land outside Ireland, whether by a British subject or an alien. By statute, jurisdiction has been given to try in England or Ireland the following offences, committed out of the United Kingdom:—Treason (33 Geo. 3, c. 45 (Ir.)); murder or manslaughter by a British subject on land out of the United Kingdom (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 9); offences against the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 90, ss. 16, 17); the Explosive Substances Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 3, s. 7); the Official Secrets Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 52, s. 6); the Commissioner of Oaths Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 10, s. 9); bigamy by British subject outside England and Ireland (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 57). See Russell, 7th ed., 27.

Whenever any townland belonging to one county shall be included in any petty sessions district of the adjoining county under the provisions of this Act, any justice having jurisdiction in such petty sessions district shall have the like jurisdiction in such townland, although he may not be a justice of the county to which such townland belongs; and any committal to any gaol or bridewell of such last-mentioned county, or any other magisterial act done by any such justice, in any case in which the offence or cause of complaint shall have arisen in such townland, shall have the like force and effect as if such justice was also a justice of such last-mentioned county. And all constables or other persons apprehending any person whom they lawfully may and ought to apprehend by virtue of their office or otherwise in any such county or place as aforesaid, may lawfully convey such person before any justice for such county or place whilst such justice shall be in such adjoining county or place as aforesaid, and such constables or other persons are hereby authorized and required in all such cases to act in all things as if such justice were within the county or place for which he shall so act (Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 7 (4)).

The Whiteboy Act, 15 & 16 Geo. 3, c. 21, s. 24, provides that if any justice of the county where any offence is committed happens to be in another county, he, or any justice of such foreign county, may, upon proper information, issue his or their warrant to arrest any person offending against the Act; and the person arrested shall be brought before such justice, who upon examination may commit, bail, or discharge him, as the case shall require, and shall return the examinations and recognizances to the next assizes for the county in which such offence is alleged to have been committed. Whiteboy (Ir.) Act, 1776.

The 50 Geo. 3, c. 102, enacting penalties on persons administering or taking oaths for seditious purposes, empowers (s. 8) all magistrates of the adjacent counties at large, respectively, to execute the Act within the several counties of cities or counties of towns in Ireland, except the county of the city of Dublin; and authorizes the magistrates of such counties of cities and counties of towns to execute the Act in the adjacent counties at large. Unlawful Oaths (Ir.) Act, 1810.

By 3 & 4 Vict. c. 108, s. 173, the justices of the peace for the county in which any borough is situated to which a separate court of sessions of the peace has not been assigned, shall exercise the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in and for such borough as fully as for the said county; and no part of any borough, in and for which a separate court of sessions of the peace is holden, shall be within the jurisdiction of the justices of any county from which such borough, before the passing of that Act, was exempt. By 5 & 6 Vict. c. 46, s. 4, justices of a county at large to which any part or district of any county of a city or county of a town shall have been added, shall exercise the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in and for such part as fully as for such county at large. Municipal Corporation (Ir.) Act, 1840.

Where any felony or misdemeanour shall be committed on the boundary or boundaries of two or more counties, or within the distance of five hundred yards of any such boundary or boundaries, or shall be begun in one county and completed in another, every such felony or misdemeanour may be dealt with, inquired of, tried, determined, and punished in any of the said counties, in the Justices (Ir.) Act, 1842.

same manner as if it had been actually and wholly committed therein 9 Geo. 4, c. 54, s. 26).

Where any felony or misdemeanour shall be committed on any person, or on or in respect of any property, in or upon any coach, waggon, cart, or other carriage whatever, employed in any journey, or shall be committed on any person, or on or in respect of any property, on board any vessel whatever, employed in any voyage or journey upon any navigable river, canal, or inland navigation, such felony or misdemeanour may be dealt with, inquired of, tried, determined, and punished in any county through any part whereof such coach, waggon, cart, carriage, or vessel shall have passed in the course of the journey or voyage during which such felony or misdemeanour shall have been committed, in the same manner as if it had been actually committed in such county; and in all cases where the side, centre, or other part of any highway, or the side, bank, centre, or other part of any such river, canal, or navigation shall constitute the boundary of any two counties, such felony or misdemeanour may be dealt with, inquired of, tried, determined, and punished in either of such counties through or adjoining to or by the boundary of any part whereof such coach, cart, waggon, carriage, or vessel shall have passed in the course of the journey or voyage during which such felony or misdemeanour shall have been committed in the same manner as if it had been actually committed in such county (s. 27).

Shipping Act,

For the purpose of giving jurisdiction under this Act, every offence shall be deemed to have been committed, and every cause of complaint to have arisen, either in the place in which the same actually was committed or arose, or in any place in which the offender or person complained against may be (Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, 57 & 58 Vict. c. 60, s. 684).

Where any district within which any court, justice of the peace, or other magistrate has jurisdiction either under this Act or under any other Act or at common law for any purpose whatever is situate on the coast of any sea, or abutting on or projecting into any bay, channel, lake, river, or other navigable water, every such court, justice, or magistrate shall have jurisdiction over any vessel being on, or lying or passing off, that coast, or being in or near that bay, channel, lake, river, or navigable water, and over all persons on board that vessel or for the time being belonging thereto, in the same manner as if the vessel or person were within the limits of the original jurisdiction of the court, justice, or magistrate. The jurisdiction under this section shall be in addition to and not in derogation of any jurisdiction or power of a court under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts<sup>1</sup> Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, 57 & 58 Vict. c. 60, s. 685.

Where any person, being a British subject, is charged with having committed any offence on board any British ship on the high seas or in any foreign port or harbour or on board any foreign ship to which he does not belong, or, not being a British subject, is charged with having committed any offence on board any British ship on the high seas, and that person is found within the jurisdiction of any court in His Majesty's dominions, which would have had cognizance of the offence if it had been committed on board a British ship within the limits of its ordinary jurisdiction, that court shall have jurisdiction to try the offence as if it had been so committed (Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, 57 & 58 Vict. c. 60, s. 686).<sup>2</sup>

All offences against property or person committed in or at any place either ashore or afloat out of His Majesty's dominions by any master, seaman, or apprentice who at the time when the offence is committed is, or within three months previously has been, employed in any British ship shall be deemed to be offences of the same nature respectively, and be liable to the same punishments respectively, and be inquired of, heard, tried, determined, and adjudged in the same manner and by the same courts and in the same places as if those offences had been committed within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England (s. 687).

*Criminal Law

All indictable offences mentioned in this Act which shall be committed within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England or Ireland shall be deemed to be offences of the same nature and liable to the same punishments as if they had been committed upon the land in England or Ireland, and may be dealt with, inquired of, tried, and determined in any county or place in England or Ireland in which the offender shall be apprehended or be in custody, in the same manner in all respects as if they had been actually committed in that county or place; and in any indictment for any such offence, or for being an accessory to such an offence, the venue in the margin shall be the same as if the offence had been committed in such county or place, and the offence shall be averred to have been committed "on the high seas" (Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 115; Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), s. 72; Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 98), s. 50; Coinage Offences Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 99), s. 36; Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 68). Limits of jurisdiction

If any person without lawful excuse receives or has in his possession any property stolen outside the United Kingdom, knowing such property to have been stolen, he shall be liable to be indicted in any county or place in which he has, or has had, the property (Larceny Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 52), s. 1). Larceny Act, 1896.

Generally speaking, any member of the public may prosecute (see p. 43, where the question is discussed). The first step is to secure the attendance of the party charged. The justice may, in the case of an indictable offence, either issue a summons, or, if an information has been made in writing and on oath that the party has committed the offence, may issue a warrant for arrest (Petty Sessions Act, s. 11). It is submitted that the expression "indictable offence" comprises offences which may be tried either summarily or by indictment as well as offences which can be tried only by indictment. Where a summons will be equally effectual, a warrant should not be issued in the first instance, unless when the offence charged is of a very serious nature (O'Brien v. Brabner, (1885) 49 J.P. 227). The High Court refused to interfere where a magistrate, in the reasonable and bona fide exercise of his discretion, refused to issue a summons on the ground that the information did not disclose an indictable offence (Ex parte Lewis, (1888) 21 Q.B.D. 191). If a warrant is to be issued, an information in writing and on oath must previously be made (s. 10 (2)); but if it is intended that a summons only is to issue, the information or complaint may be made either with or without oath, and either in writing or not, according as the justice shall see fit (s. 10 (1)). The justice should himself hear the complaint before signing the summons (Dixon v. Wells, (1890) 25 Q.B.D. 249, and see p. 46). Though a summons only has been issued in the first instance, the justice may, before the time limited in the summons for the defendant's appearance has expired, the information being in writing and on oath, issue a warrant<sup>1</sup> (s. 11 (1)). If the information is taken upon oath and in writing, the justice may bind the informant by recognizance to appear at the court or place where the defendant is to be tried to prosecute or give evidence (s. 10 (3)). The written information should clearly charge an indictable offence, as otherwise the issuing of the warrant will be an act done without jurisdiction, and will render the justice signing it liable to an action, even though parol evidence may have been given before the justice of facts constituting an indictable offence (Lawrenson v. Hill, (1860) 10 I.C.L.R. 177, McDonald v. Bulwer, (1862) 13 I.C.L.R. 549; see also Cave v. Mountain, (1840) 1 M. and G. 257). But if the matters deposed to in the information disclose an indictable offence, the justice is under no liability should the information be false in fact. If there is any doubt as to whether the facts complained of constitute an indictable offence, it is safer for the justice to issue a summons merely. A police officer is under no liability for executing the warrant if it is good upon its face and within the jurisdiction of the justice issuing it (Russell, 7th ed., 738). The warrant should state that there has been an information in writing and on oath (Caudle v. Seymour, (1841) 1 Q.B. 889). The warrant is bad if the name of the person to be taken is omitted in the body thereof, though stated in the heading, (Hodgens v. Poe, (1866) 17 I.C.L.R. 383, I.R. 2 C.L. 52). The Christian name as well as the surname should appear (R. v. Hood, (1830) 1 M.C.C.R. 281. Where R. H. was arrested under a warrant, intended for R. H., but containing the name J. H., the arrest was held unlawful (Hoye v. Bush, (1840) 1 M. & G. 775, see Kelly v. Lawrence, (1864) 3 H. & C. 1). If the name is unknown, the offender may be referred to by description as well as the circumstances will permit, the warrant stating that the name is unknown (4 Chit., C.L. 10a.). But even if the warrant is void, the justice has jurisdiction to deal with the charge when the offender is brought before him under it (R. v. Hughes, (1879) 4 Q.B.D. 614). The warrant must be signed by the justice, cannot be signed in blank (Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 11, and need not be sealed /s. 36. Material alterations in the warrant by any person other than the justice, and after it has been signed by him, invalidate it (1 Hale, 577; see Housin v. Barrow, (1794) 6 T.R. 122). A warrant remains in force until it is fully executed, unless, as in the case of a warrant under s. 380 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, it is expressly provided that the warrant is to be in force only for a limited period (Paley, 8th ed., 371), provided the justice who signed it so long live (per Lord Kenyon, C.J., Dickenson v. Brown, (1795) 1 Peak N.P.C. 307).

In England a warrant is not avoided by reason of the justice who signed the same dying, or ceasing to hold office (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49, s. 37), but there is no corresponding enactment in Ireland.

Such warrant may be issued or executed on Sunday<sup>1</sup> Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 11), and may be executed either by day or night (Davis v. Russell, (1829) 5 Bing. 354). A constable may arrest a person on a warrant wherever he may be met with, and it would appear that for the purpose of effecting the arrest the constable may break open doors of a house, even when the house is the house of a third party; but before doing so, he should inform those in the house of the cause of his coming and demand admittance (2 Hawk, c. 14, s. 1), at all events in case of a misdemeanour (Launock v. Brown, 1819, 2 B. & Ald. 592). Upon an attachment for contempt in non-compliance with an order for the delivery of deeds, it was held that, the contempt being of a criminal nature, a sheriff was entitled to break open the doors of defendant's house to arrest the defendant (Harvey v. Harvey, (1884) 26 C.D. 644). When an officer has lawfully broken an outer door, he may also break any inner door where necessary to effect the arrest (1 Hale 458, Lee v. Gansel, (1774) 1 Cowp. 1). If a constable breaks into the house of a third person, to effect the arrest of an offender upon a warrant, he will be a trespasser if the offender is not within the house (2 Hale 117, Johnson v. Leigh, (1815) 6 Taunt 246). A constable should not handcuff a person arrested on a suspicion of felony, unless he has attempted to escape, or it is a necessary precaution to prevent him from escaping (Wright v. Court, (1825) 4 B. & C. 596); and it has been said that a person who is handcuffed without necessity has a right of action (R. v. Taylor, (1895) 59 J.P. 393, per Lord Russell of Killowen).

The warrant is addressed to the district inspector or head constable of the petty sessions district (Petty Sessions Act, s. 25); and he or any other constable to be appointed by him may execute same where the offender is within his district (s. 26).<sup>1</sup> Provisions are made for the execution of the warrant in cases where the offender is not within the district inspector's district, but is within the same county (s. 26 (2)),<sup>1</sup> and for certifying the warrant for execution out of the county (s. 26 (3)).<sup>1</sup> In case of emergency the warrant may be addressed to any constable of the county, who may execute it within the county, or in case of fresh pursuit of the offender, at any place in the next adjoining county (s. 26).<sup>1</sup> Warrants may also be backed or certified for execution in Dublin, in England, Scotland, Isle of Man, or Channel Islands, in manner set forth in sections 27 & 28 (see also supplementary provisions in 31 & 32 Vict. c. 107, s. 4, as to the Channel Islands). A warrant which requires backing, and is not properly backed for execution, cannot legally be executed (see R. v. Crompton, (1880) 5 Q.B.D. 341).

The constable must inform the person whom he is about to arrest under a warrant of the substance of it (Curtis's case, (1756) Fost 137). It seems doubtful if he is obliged to produce the warrant (2 Hale 116; 2 Bac. Abr. 172, Hall v. Roche, (1799) 8 T.R. 187), though it is "safe and advisable" that he should do so if required (Nun & Walsh, 2nd ed., p. 202); but a constable need not hand over the warrant, and may retake it by force from the party arrested should such party have got possession and refuse to give it up (R. v. Mitton, (1827) 3 C. & P. 31, see Gowing v. Walsh, (1859) 10 I.C.L.R. 431).

In the case of an arrest for any offence less than a felony, the officer should have the warrant in his possession at the time of the arrest (Galliard v. Laxton, (1862) 9 Cox. 127, R. v. Chapman, (1871) 12 Cox. 4); and otherwise the arrest is illegal, even though the party arrested should not demand to see the warrant (Codd v. Cabe, (1876) 1 Ex. D. 352). In the case of a felony,<sup>2</sup> inasmuch as a constable has at common law power to arrest on suspicion of a felony, an officer who knows of the issue of the warrant is justified in effecting the arrest (Creagh v. Gamble, (1888) 24 L.R.I. 458). In all cases where persons having authority to arrest or imprison and using the proper means for that purpose are resisted in so doing, they may repel force with force, and need not give back, and if the party making resistance is unavoidably killed in the struggle this homicide is justifiable (Russell, 7th ed., 813). Where a felon flying from justice is killed by an officer of justice in pursuit, the homicide is justifiable if the felon could not be otherwise overtaken; but if he may be taken without such severity, it is at least manslaughter in him who kills him, and the jury ought to inquire whether it were done of necessity or not. But where a party is accused of misdemeanour only, and flies from the arrest, the officer must not kill him, though there is a warrant to apprehend him and though he cannot otherwise be overtaken, and if he does kill him it will in general be murder, but it may amount to manslaughter if it appears that death was not intended (ib. 763; see also judgment of Bushe, C.J., in R. v. Finnerty, (1830) 1 Cr. & D.C.C. 166 n.). Any person who resists or wilfully obstructs a peace officer<sup>1</sup> in executing a warrant is guilty of a misdemeanour (1 Chit. Cri. L. 61), apparently not triable summarily (25 & 26 Vict. c. 50, s. 10; R. v. Kilkenny JJ., (1871) I.R. 5 C.L. 394). If the warrant is bad, or the arrest otherwise unlawful, the party will be justified in resisting arrest (Russell, 7th ed., 738).

The constable has a right in every case of arrest, whether for felony or misdemeanour, to seize and retain property or documents found in the possession of the accused which will form material evidence (Dillon v. O'Brien, (1887) 20 L.R.I. 300). A constable should not take property not in any way connected with the offence charged (R. v. O'Donnell, (1835) 7 C. & P. 138; R. v. Kinsey, (1836) 7 C. & P. 447; R. v. Bass, (1849) 2 C. & K. 822); and orders have sometimes been made, before trial, directing that property found on a prisoner be restored or made available for him (R. v. Barnett, (1829) 3 C. & P. 600, R. v. Rooney, (1836) 7 C. & P. 515; but see R. v. Pierce, (1852) 6 Cox C.C. 117). If the constable is unable to effect the arrest under the warrant, he is to return same to the justice issuing it with a certificate of the reason why it has not been executed, and the justice may examine him upon oath touching the non-execution of the warrant, and reissue it, or other warrants for the same purpose from time to time (Petty Sessions Act, s. 33). The only right of searching the person of a prisoner seems to be the implied right to search for weapons, &c., where the doing so is reasonable for the protection both of the prisoner and of others, having regard to the nature of the prisoner's conduct and language (Leigh v. Cole, (1853) 6 Cox 332). If a justice makes an order directing a medical examination to be made of the person of a prisoner, both he and the party executing the order will, unless the examination is made with the consent of the person examined, be guilty of assault (R. v. Boulton, (1871) 12 Cox 87; Agnew v. Jobson, (1877) 13 Cox 625).

A corporation can be indicted at common law,<sup>2</sup> both for non-feasance (R. v. Mayor, &c., of Liverpool, (1802) 3 East 86, and R. v. Mayor, &c., of Stratford-on-Avon, (1811) 14 East 348, breaches of statutory duty to repair highways; R. v. Birmingham & Gloucester Ry. Co., (1842) 3 Q.B. 223, breach of an order directing accommodation works to be built) and for misfeasance (R. v. Gt. Northern of England Ry. Co., (1846) 9 Q.B. 315, nuisance on the highway).<sup>3</sup> The Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 14, contemplates that the preliminary investigation of an indictable offence shall take place in the physical presence of the accused, and, as this is impossible in the case of a corporation, the opinion is expressed in Lord Halsbury's "Laws of England" (vol. ix., p. 313, n. (g)) that the proper course in a case where a corporation is charged with an indictable offence is to send up a bill to the grand jury in the first instance. It is, however, submitted that in cases in which the defendant has the option to be tried either summarily or by indictment (e.g., under the Merchandise Marks Act), a summons should be issued in the first instance. As to service of such summons, and procedure against a corporation in respect of summary offences, see p. 48. As a corporation cannot appear in person, and at assizes and quarter sessions appearance by attorney is not allowed, an indictment against a corporation must be removed into the King's Bench by writ of certiorari, when the appearance will be compelled, if necessary, by appropriate proceedings (formerly by distress infinite, or by attachment in the nature of a pone, Grant on Corporations, 284).<sup>1</sup>

If the party against whom a warrant is to be executed is already in prison, resort must be had to a writ of habeas corpus, under which he will be brought up from day to day to appear on the investigation of the charge (Ex parte Griffiths, (1822) 5 B. & Ald. 730).

necessary.

The power of justices to enforce the attendance of witnesses is limited, in case of indictable offences, to witnesses for the prosecution (Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 13), and apparently a prisoner has no strict right to examine witnesses on his behalf (see p. 23, post). The provisions as to securing the attendance of witnesses by summons are the same as in the case of summary offences (as to which see p. 53), except that in the case of an indictable offence, where the justice is satisfied by information in writing and on oath that it is probable the witness will not attend without being compelled to do so, he may issue a warrant for the witness in the first instance (s. 13).<sup>2</sup> A writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum is required where the witness is in custody. The witness may be required to produce documents (s. 13 (1)). A justice has power under section 7 of the Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1879, to make an order for the prosecutor to inspect and take copies of entries in the books of a bank at which the defendant keeps an account (R. v. Kinghorn, (1908) 2 K.B. 949).

attendance of
witnesses.

Where a statute (e.g., Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, s. 2 (6)) directs that on the hearing of a charge the defendant shall be informed of his right to be tried on indictment, a summary conviction, even on a plea of guilty, is bad if the defendant is not so informed (R. v. Cockshott, (1898) 1 Q.B. 582).

The hearing.

When the accused person is brought before the justice, the deposition<sup>3</sup> of each witness shall be taken in writing and on oath in presence of the accused, who shall be at liberty to cross-examine, and <sup>1</sup> The distress infinite was part of the procedure on a distringas, which issued to the sheriff, commanding him to distrain the land, goods, and chattels of the corporation, so that they might not possess them till the court ordered to the contrary. On the return of the writ without obedience, an alias distringas issued, and then a pluries distringas, after which a writ of sequestration might be resorted to (Grant, 286). The pone seems to have been a writ attaching the goods by way of pledge, per vadium (Bouvier's Law Dictionary). As to contempt of court by a corporation, see p. 32.

<sup>2</sup> As "any" warrant may be backed for execution to any place in Ireland, or to England, Scotland, the Channel Isles, or the Isle of Man (Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 27), it would seem that, in indictable offences, the attendance of a witness can be secured under a warrant, though the witness lives out of the jurisdiction of the justice issuing the warrant. The attendance of such witness can also be secured by subpoena issuing out of the Crown Office, disobedience to which is punishable by attachment (R. v. Greenaway, (1845) 7 Q.B. 126). The issue of a Crown office subpoena is the course commonly adopted. Three names may be inserted in one subpoena. A copy should be made and delivered personally to each witness, at the same time showing him the original (Archbold, 24th ed., p. 478, and cases there cited). As to the difficulty, in summary cases, of enforcing the attendance of witnesses residing out of the county, see p. 53.

<sup>3</sup> The term "information" is applied to the statement grounding the charge, taken in the absence of the accused; the term "deposition" means each written and sworn statement taken at the inquiry in the presence of the accused. The deposition should be taken as nearly as possible in the words of the witness (Cohen v. Morgan, (1825) 6 D. & R. 8).

such deposition shall be read over to and signed by the witness and by the justice or one of the justices, who shall take the same (Petty Sessions Act, s. 14). It is submitted that the deposition of each witness must be signed by the justice<sup>1</sup> (see R. v. London Corporation, (1844) 5 Q.B. 555; R. v. Johnson, (1847) 2 C. & K. 354). If a witness refuse to be examined, the accused may be remanded for a period not exceeding eight clear days, and the witness may be committed from time to time, so that the entire amount of his imprisonment shall not exceed one month (s. 13 (5)). Witnesses may be bound over by recognizance to appear at the trial and give evidence<sup>2</sup> (s. 13 (6)). The deposition of a witness who dies before the trial is admissible in evidence at the trial (s. 14 (1)); but this, it is submitted, applies only to witnesses examined on behalf of the prosecution, when the Crown desire to put in the deposition at the trial.<sup>3</sup> The deposition should be taken in the presence of the accused, so that he may have an opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses. It is irregular for any part of the deposition to be taken in the absence of the justice and prisoner, although they be subsequently read over to the witness in presence of the justice and prisoner (R. v. Christopher, (1850) 4 Cox 76; R. v. Watts, (1863) 9 Cox 395). A police sergeant took a statement from a dying man, which he subsequently dictated out of a note-book to the petty sessions clerk, who wrote it down, and then went to the residence of the dying man and read it out for him in the presence of the accused, a justice and the police, and the witness said, "every word is true," and signed the deposition, the accused exercising their rights of cross-examination. The witness having died, Andrews, J., rejected the deposition<sup>4</sup> (R. v. Healy, (1901) 2 N.I.J.R. 73). One magistrate should not take up an inquiry commenced before another<sup>5</sup> (In re Guerin, (1888) 16 Cox 596). If a justice arrives late, and it is wished he should take part in the hearing, the witness should be resworn and the evidence given afresh. But where a magistrate fell ill, and in consequence the hearing had to be recommenced before another magistrate, the King's Bench Division refused to interfere with the discretion of the second magistrate, who proposed to allow counsel for the prosecution to recall some of the witnesses at the first hearing, reswear them, read their depositions already taken, directing them to correct the evidence if and where it was inaccurate, and to ask them any additional questions that might be thought advisable, and then to tender the witnesses for cross-examination (Ex parte Bottomley, (1909) 2 K.B. 14). The course commonly adopted of having the information read aloud to the witness, and then a new deposition <sup>1</sup> In England it has been held sufficient, on the construction of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42. if a number of depositions are fastened together, and the justice signs at the end of the last of the series, but this decision turns upon Form M in the schedule to 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, "the above depositions of C. D. and E. F. were taken and sworn before me," &c. (R. v. Parker, (1870). L. R., 1 C. C. R. 225). An earlier decision (R. v. Richards, (1866) 4 F. and F. 860) to the contrary effect was given without the form of the schedule having been brought to the notice of Cockburn, C.J., who decided both cases (per Cockburn, C.J., at p. 227 of R. v. Parker, supra).

<sup>3</sup> See also p. 24. In England, the deposition of a witness who has died may be put in evidence at the trial on behalf of, as well as against, the accused; see 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, s. 6.

taken verifying its truth, and amplifying or correcting it where necessary, and identifying the accused, is certainly not illegal, and is, as a general rule, free from objection. The only possible ground of objection seems to be that the reading of the information is, in effect, putting a long leading question; and if an application is made on behalf of the prisoner that the evidence should be taken entirely de novo, it would be as well to comply with the request, as the expenditure of a little time is of small concern when compared with the necessity of having the investigation free from any suspicion of unfairness. When the examination on the part of the prosecution shall have been completed, the justice or one of the justices shall read or cause to be read to the accused the several depositions, and then take down in writing the statement of the accused, having first cautioned him that he is not obliged to say anything unless he desires to do so, but that whatever he does say will be taken down in writing and may be given in evidence against him on his trial, and whatever statement the accused shall then make shall be taken down and read over to him and signed by the justice, and may be given in evidence against the prisoner on his trial (s. 14 (2)). If the accused voluntarily interposes a statement during the hearing, it should be taken down, and, if so taken down, is admissible in evidence at the trial (R. v. Weller, (1846) 2 C. & K. 224; R. v. Stripp, (1850) Dears, 648); but, if not so taken down, it is not admissible (R. v. Weller, supra). A statement made by the accused in answer to a question put to him by a justice, without previous caution, is not admissible (R. v. Pettit, (1850) 4 Cox 164.<sup>1</sup> The accused has an opportunity if he so desires of cross-examining each witness, either by himself or by his solicitor or counsel (see s. 9 2)). The accused is, however, not entitled as of right to have the case adjourned so as to enable him to have the benefit of professional assistance, even though he has had no previous opportunity of procuring it (R. v. Biggins, (1862) 5 L.T. (N S) 605). There is no absolute obligation on the justices to take the depositions of any witness whom the accused may tender;<sup>2</sup> but the justices should certainly examine, and take the depositions of, any witness whom the accused may wish to examine. In his charge to the Grand Jury of Somersetshire, at the spring assizes in 1849, Lord Denman, C.J., said: "In all cases in which prisoners charged with felony have witnesses, and those witnesses are in attendance at the time of the examination before the magistrate, I should recommend that the magistrate should hear the evidence of such witnesses as the prisoner, on being asked, wishes to be examined in his defence. If such witnesses merely explain what has been proved in support of the charge, they will actually have made out a defence for the accused, and there would of course be no necessity for any further proceedings; but if the witnesses so called contradict those for the prosecution in material points, then the case would properly be sent to a jury to ascertain the truth of the statements of each party; and the depositions of the prisoner's witnesses, being taken and signed by them, should be transmitted, together with the depositions in support of the charge" (2 C. & K. 845).<sup>1</sup> When these words were spoken, justices in England, as well as justices in Ireland, were under no legal obligation to hear evidence for the defence when taking depositions; and it is submitted that these words exactly describe the course that justices in Ireland should adopt. The same considerations that apply to charges of felony also apply to charges of misdemeanour. The suggestion is made in Nun and Walsh's "Justice of the Peace" (2nd ed., p. 359), that the production of the defendant's witnesses might also lead to the perpetuation of testimony should any of the accused's witnesses die before the trial, and the practice is to admit such depositions in evidence.<sup>2</sup> But it must not be forgotten that the inquiry is not a trial of the issue in any sense; its object is merely to ascertain if a prima facie case is made out, and to commit or hold to bail the accused, should the facts deposed to warrant an investigation before a jury. A justice, on the hearing of an indictable offence, has no business to weigh the evidence for or against a prisoner, for that is the function of the jury (see per Cockburn, C.J., in R. v. Carden, (1879) 5 Q.B.D. 6).

A person who is in court, though not summoned, may be called and compelled to give evidence (Petty Sessions Act, s. 13 (5); and see R. v. Sadler, (1830) 4 C. & P. 218, R. v. Flavell, (1884) 14 Q.B.D. 364). If a witness refuse to sign his deposition, apparently the justice may commit him for contempt, but the non-signing will not render the deposition inadmissible or nugatory (R. v. Flemming, (1799) 2 Leach C.C. 854). Where a witness was a marksman, and by mistake the clerk of petty sessions had attached his name instead of the mark; it was held, the witness having died, that the deposition was admissible (R. v. Mullen, (1862) 7 Ir. Jur. N.S. 304).

Prisoner entitled to copy depositions.

The accused is entitled to a copy of the depositions or copies of depositions taken at a coroner's inquest in case of murder or manslaughter, on payment of a reasonable sum, not exceeding three halfpence per folio of ninety words (Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 14).<sup>3</sup>

Evidence to supplement a deposition.

If a deposition is regularly taken, it has been held, that evidence to prove that it does not contain everything that it could and should contain is not admissible (R. v. Weller, 1846) 2 C. & K. 223; but see, contra, R. v. Moore, (1869) 20 L.T. 987). See, further, EVIDENCE, p. 289.

Amendment.

As to variance between information, &c., and the evidence, see p. 93, et seq.

Remanding.

If from the absence of any witness, or for any other reasonable cause, it shall become necessary or advisable to defer the examination or further examination of the witnesses for any time, the justice may either admit the accused to bail or by warrant remand him to jail for such time as he shall deem expedient, not exceeding eight clear days.<sup>4</sup> But any such justice may order the accused to be

brought before him or some other justice of the county at any time before the expiration of the period for which he shall have been remanded (Petty Sessions Act, s. 14). If the justices remand, without bail, it seems that the King's Bench Division usually decline to interfere (Short & Mellor, 2nd ed., 280), and it has even been said that in such cases the discretion of justices is absolute, and cannot be reviewed (Oke's Mag. Synopsis, 13th ed., 979). But in R. v. Spilsbury. (1898) 2 Q.B. 615, the power of the King's Bench Division to admit to bail any person in custody, whether on remand or otherwise, for any offence whatsoever, was expressly affirmed, though in that case the Court, in view of the terms of the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, under which the prisoner was charged, did not grant bail. In R. v. Bennett, (1870) L.T. Newspaper, 387, Nash, J., held that the King's Bench Division was not only entitled, but bound, to admit to bail a prisoner remanded on a charge of misdemeanour. Brett, J., in R. v. Attkins, (1870) ib., p. 421, took the same view. From a reference at p. 281 of Short & Mellor (supra) to an unreported case of R. v. Mullins (24 Jan., 1884), it seems that the Court (Pollock, B., and Lopes, J.) held that a prisoner remanded for misdemeanour was not absolutely entitled to bail, and that, if in such a case the Court had a discretion, they should be very careful not to interfere with the discretion of the magistrate. In R. v. Manning, (1888) 5 T.L.R. 139, the Court (Coleridge, C.J., and Manisty, J.) directed a magistrate to admit to bail, instead of remanding in custody, a person charged with misdemeanour, and this was done because it appeared that the magistrate, on refusing bail, had been influenced by the fact that there were "other charges" against the prisoner.

Remanding.

After the evidence has been taken, in cases where the offence has been committed within the jurisdiction of the justice or justices, and he or they are of opinion that the evidence is not sufficient to put the accused on his trial, he or they shall order him to be discharged; but if in the opinion of such justice or justices, such evidence is sufficient to put such person upon his trial, or if it raises a strong or probable presumption of guilt, the justice or justices shall return the accused for trial, either committing or bailing him (Petty Sessions Act, s. 15 (1)). If any person shall be brought before a justice charged with any offence alleged to have been committed by him in any county or place in Ireland wherein such justice shall not have jurisdiction, then the justice shall receive the evidence, and if in his opinion the evidence shall be sufficient proof of said charge, he shall by warrant commit the accused to the gaol of the county where the offence was committed, or shall admit him to bail as such justice shall see fit (s. 15 (2)). If in the justice's opinion such evidence shall not be sufficient to put the accused on his trial, then such justice shall bind over the prosecutor and the witnesses, and by warrant shall order the accused to be brought before some justice of the county in which and near the place where the offence is alleged to have been committed, and shall at the same time deliver to the person having the execution of such warrant the information, depositions, and recognizances (if any), to be delivered to the justice before whom the accused shall be taken in obedience to such warrant, and such information, depositions, and recognizances shall be treated to all intents as if they had been taken before such last-mentioned justice; and if such last-mentioned justice shall not think the evidence sufficient to put the accused on his trial and shall discharge him, any recognizance taken before the first-mentioned justice shall be null and void (s. 15 (2)). Generally speaking, the accused should be returned for trial to whichever court, the assizes or quarter sessions, shall first sit. But the justices should reserve exclusively for the assizes cases which, from the magnitude of the punishment, the peculiar character of the offence, or the difficulties of investigation, seem more proper for the assizes, such as treason, murder, or other capital felony, felony punishable by penal servitude for life, and felonies and misdemeanours of a political and insurrectionary character.<sup>1</sup> If an offender be apprehended, and suffered to go at large, upon an offer to find security, which is not fulfilled, it seems that he may be apprehended again upon the same warrant (Paley, 8th ed., 371). The warrant of commitment should show jurisdiction, and specify the charge, though apparently a warrant committing for safe custody before trial is not construed so strictly as a warrant of commitment in execution (R. v. Gourlay, (1828) 7 B. & C. 669).

The decision of the justices committing a defendant for trial or admitting him to bail cannot be brought up by certiorari (R. (Blakeney) v. Roscommon JJ., (1894) 2 I.R. 158).<sup>2</sup> The decision to send forward the case for trial or to discharge the accused is a judicial act, but is an unrecorded judicial act and a decision not intended by the statute to be recorded (ib., per Lord O'Brien, C.J., 172). "The code of regulations for reducing to writing and preserving the orders and decisions of magistrates where they exercise summary jurisdiction does not apply where they investigate an indictable offence. In the latter case there are the written depositions; if the accused is sent to jail to await his trial, there is the warrant of commitment. If he is admitted to bail, there is the recognizance; but there is no order declaring the determination of the justices. In the case before us the memorandum in the order book merely directs the transmission of the depositions, and as far as I can see there is nothing in the statute to require even this entry. No doubt some written memorandum of what was done by the committing magistrates would be a useful precaution,<sup>3</sup> but the inference I draw from the fact of its not being prescribed is that it was intended by the legislature that an absolute discretion should be given to the justices" (ib., per Holmes, L.J., 179).

Decision must
of court.

As has been seen, one justice may conduct the inquiry, but, even in cases where one justice may act alone, if several justices adjudicate, the order must be the order of the majority (see judgment of Gibson, J., in R. (de Vesci) v. Queen's Co. JJ., (1908) 2 I.R. 306; R. v. O'Connell, (1888) 20 L.R.I. 625). It is, therefore, submitted that it is not competent for one of several justices engaged in the investigation of an indictable offence to return the accused for trial against the wishes of the majority of the court. If informations are refused, the High Court will not compel another bench of magistrates to hear the case afresh, at all events in the absence of fresh evidence (R. v.

Bather, (1880) 42 L.T. 532. The refusal of informations, however, will not prevent the prosecution from sending up a bill to the grand jury on complying with the provisions of the Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859, 22 & 23 Vict. c. 17. in the cases to which that Act is applicable (see infra). If the court are evenly divided in opinion, it is submitted no order can be made, even to adjourn, unless the concurrence of the majority is obtained; and in such a case no doubt the accused could be brought before an entirely different bench.

Apart from statute, the discharge by the justice of the accused, or, as it is commonly termed, the refusing of informations, does not prevent an indictment being laid in respect of the same matter, for at common law any person may prefer a bill of indictment before the grand jury against any person whom he accuses of an indictable crime, even without any notice or inquiry, and this still is the law in cases to which the Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 17), does not apply. In cases to which that statute applies, no bill of indictment can be presented to or found by the grand jury unless (1) the prosecutor or other person presenting such indictment has been bound by recognizance to prosecute or give evidence against the accused; or (2) unless the person accused has been committed to or detained in custody, or has been bound by recognizance to answer to an indictment to be preferred against him for such offence; or (3) unless such indictment is preferred by the direction or with the consent in writing of a judge of the High Court or the Attorney-General, or Solicitor-General, or, in the case of an indictment for perjury, by the direction of any court, judge, or public functionary authorized by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100,<sup>1</sup> to direct a prosecution for perjury. If the justices refuse informations, and the prosecutor desires to prefer an indictment, they are bound, if required to do so by the prosecutor, to take his recognizance and to transmit same with the depositions in the same manner as if the accused had been returned for trial (s. 2). An application to take recognizance does not lie unless a summons or warrant is issued (Ex parte Reid, (1885) 49 J.P. 600). Where a prosecutor bona fide prefers before a justice a charge or complaint in respect of an offence within the statute, and the justice dismisses it for want of evidence, such dismissal is equivalent to a refusal to commit, and the prosecutor is entitled to require the justice to take his recognizance to prosecute the charge or complaint by way of indictment; and the justice will be ordered by mandamus to take the recognizance (R. v. Lord Mayor of London, (1886) 16 Cox 77). But when no indictable offence is disclosed in the information, the justices should not take the recognizance, and cannot be compelled to do so (Ex parte Wason, (1869) L.R. 4 Q.B. 573.). Where a prosecution for perjury was dismissed by the justices, and the prosecutor made no application to be bound over, the justices were held to be within their rights in refusing to entertain a second information and a request that they should take the prosecutor's recognizance (R. v. Bather, (1880) 42 L.T. 532). It has been held by the Common Sergeant of London that if a prosecutor who is bound over does not prefer the indictment to the grand jury of the court at which he is bound over to prosecute, the recognizance lapses, and cannot be extended, and an indictment cannot be preferred to a subsequent court (R. v. Eayres, (1900) 64 J.P. 217). If the justices refuse informations, and no application to take the prosecutor's recognizance is made, an indictment can be preferred by the direction of a judge, the Attorney-General, or Solicitor-General (R. v. Rogers, (1902) 66 J.P. 825). Offences to which the statute applies are:— perjury and subornation of perjury, conspiracy, obtaining money or other property by false pretences, keeping a gambling house or a disorderly house, and indecent assault (22 & 23 Vict. c. 17, s. 1); criminal libel (Newspaper Libel and Registration Act, 1881, 44 & 45 Vict. c. 60, s. 6); misdemeanours under Part II. of the Debtors (Ireland) Act, 1872, (s. 18); misdemeanours under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 17); indictable offences under the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28, s. 13); offences under the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1906 (6 Ed. 7, c. 34, s. 2); offences under the Punishment of Incest Act, 1908 (8 Ed. 7, c. 45, s. 4); and misdemeanours under Part II. of the Children Act, 1908 (8 Ed. 7, c. 67, s. 35). The offence of attempting to obtain money or other property by false pretences is not within the Act (R. v. Burton, (1875) 13 Cox 71). In R. v. Brown, (1895) 1 Q.B. 119, the defendant was charged on summons before justices with keeping a house for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto, and contrary to section 1 of the Betting House Act, 1853 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119). The accused claimed, under the English Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, s. 17, the right to be tried by a jury. Depositions were then taken, which disclosed evidence of two offences against section 1 of the Betting House Act, 1853, namely, (a) keeping a house for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto, and (b) of keeping it for the purpose of receiving money as a consideration for making bets. The defendant was returned for trial, and the indictment charged offences (a) and (b). The defendant objected to the indictment, on the ground that it contained an offence different from the offence charged before the magistrates. Held, that, assuming that charges other than that contained in the summons were included in the indictment, the case was concluded by the provisions of section 1 of the Criminal Law (England) Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 35), enacting that the provisions of the Vexatious Indictments Act should not extend or be applicable to prevent the presentment to or finding by a grand jury of any bill of indictment containing a count or counts for any of the offences mentioned in the Vexatious Indictments Act, if they were such as might then be lawfully joined with the rest of such bill of indictment, and if they were founded (in the opinion of the court in or before which the bill of indictment was preferred) upon the facts or evidence disclosed in any examination or deposition taken before a justice of the peace. It is, however, to be noted that, in Ireland, there is no corresponding provision to 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, s. 1, and the decision therefore, only serves to illustrate a difficulty of, perhaps, not infrequent occurrence.

The disposal of the informations, examinations, statements, and recognizances in proceedings for indictable offences is regulated by section 19 of the Petty Sessions Act. If taken out of petty sessions, these documents are to be transmitted to the justices at the next petty sessions, except in cases where the accused shall not have been committed or shall not be amenable, and the justice shall deem it expedient to retain such documents for a longer period. If taken in petty sessions, or if taken out of sessions, but transmitted to petty sessions, they are to be sent to the clerk of the Crown where the matter is to be tried at assizes, or to the clerk of the peace where the case is to be tried at quarter sessions, at latest within seven days from the holding of the petty sessions where the party shall have been committed or shall be amenable (or at least seven days before the assizes or quarter sessions where the party shall not have been committed or shall not be amenable, except in cases where the party shall not have been committed or shall not be amenable, and the justices shall deem it expedient to retain such documents for a longer period. Where any documents are retained by the justice for a longer period than provided by the section, the reason for the retention is to be endorsed upon the documents.

Disposal of the informations, &c.

As regards the question of admitting to bail, offences may be divided into three classes: (1) those in which the justice cannot admit to bail, (2) those in which the justice may or may not, in his discretion, admit to bail, and (3) those in which the justice is bound to admit to bail. The power to admit to bail is regulated by sections 16 to 18 of the Petty Sessions Act.<sup>1</sup>

Admitting to bail.

A justice cannot admit to bail any person charged with treason or treason felony under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 12, which are bailable only by order of the Lord Lieutenant, Chief Secretary, or of the King's Bench Division or a judge thereof in vacation (Petty Sessions Act, s. 16 (1)).

The justice in his discretion may or may not admit to bail in the following offences:—Any felony with the exceptions above stated, assault with intent to commit a felony, attempt to commit a felony, any offence against 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 44 (Whiteboy Act), obtaining or attempting to obtain property by false pretences, misdemeanour in receiving property stolen or obtained by false pretences, perjury or subornation of perjury, concealing the birth of a child by secret burying or otherwise, indecent exposure of the person, riot, assault in pursuance of a conspiracy to raise wages, assault upon a peace officer in the execution of his duty, or upon any person acting in his aid, neglect or breach of duty as peace officer, any misdemeanour for the prosecution of which the costs may be allowed out of the county rate or funds' (s. 16 (1)).

<sup>1</sup> A justice has no power to admit to bail a person in custody under a coroner's warrant. The coroner, or the two justices holding the inquest, can admit to bail such person in a case of manslaughter (44 & 45 Vict. c. 35, ss. 7, 8).

<sup>2</sup> The following are instances where the costs of a prosecution may be allowed out of the county rate or funds. The Grand Jury Act (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 116, s. 105) gives power to raise the costs of a prosecution for felony out of the county funds. The Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 121, The Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), s. 77, The Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 98), s. 54, The Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 77, enable the court before which indictable misdemeanours under these Acts are tried or prosecuted to allow the costs of the prosecution in the same manner as in cases of felony. The Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69), s. 18, enables the court before which any indictable misdemeanour under that Act, or any case of indecent assault, is tried or prosecuted, to allow the costs of the prosecution in the same manner as in cases of felony. The Public Bodies Corrupt Practices Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 69), s. 5, authorizes the expenses of the prosecution to bail.

In exercising his discretion, the justice should have regard to the gravity of the charge, the cogency of the evidence produced in support of it, the character or behaviour of the accused, and the seriousness of the punishment (R. v. Scarfe, (1841) 9 Dowl. 553; R. v. Barronet, (1852) Dears C.C. 51; Re Robinson, (1854) 23 L.J.Q.B. 286; R. v. Barthelemy, (1852) Dears C.C. 60; R. v. Porter, 1854) 18 J.P. 772; see also R. v. McCartie, (1859) 11 L.C.L.R. 188; R. v. McCormick, (1864) 17 L.C.L.R. 411; R. v. Rose, (1898) 18 Cox 717; R. v. Ford, 1899) 5 I.W.L.R. 97). In a doubtful case it is better that the justice should not take the responsibility of admitting to bail, but should leave the accused to apply to the King's Bench Division.

In every case in which a person shall be charged with any indictable misdemeanour other than those before mentioned, the accused is, as of right, entitled to be admitted to bail, upon the justice being satisfied as to the sufficiency of the bail offered (s. 16 (1)).

In any of the cases in which the justice may, but is not obliged to, admit to bail, if he is of opinion that accused should be admitted to bail, but the accused shall at the time be unable to obtain bail, the justice shall certify in the warrant of commitment his consent to the accused being bailed, and the amount of bail; and any justice of the county may, on attending at the jail, admit the accused to bail (s. 16 (1)). In any case in which the accused is entitled to bail as of right and has been committed, the accused may apply to any justice of the county to admit to bail, and such justice shall admit him to bail (s. 16 (2)). The recognizance of the accused may be with one or more sufficient sureties conditioned to appear and take his trial (s. 16 (1)). The surety must apparently be a householder.<sup>1</sup> There is no legal obstacle to the solicitor for the prisoner going bail (R. v. Bowes, (1787) 2 Dougl. 466 n.).<sup>2</sup> A peer may (Hayes 94), but a person under twenty-one cannot (ib. 93, R. v. Hooper, (1819) 1 Chit. Cr.L. 491), be a surety. Apparently, before the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, a married woman could not enter into a recognizance (Bennett v. Watson, (1819) 3 M. & S. 1; Lee v. Lady Baltinglass, (1655) Styles, 475; Elsy v. Mawdit, (1650) Styles, 226; but see Simpson's Case, (1829) 1 Lew, 295), the reason being that the recognizances of a married woman could not be estreated (1 Chit. Cr. L. 100); but now a woman married since 31st December, 1881, can enter into a recognizance (Russell, 7th ed. 219; but see observations of Palles, C. B., in R. King v. Antrim J.J., (1906) 2 I.R. 328).

The amount of bail (unless where fixed by statute) is in the discretion of the justice, who is to be guided by the ability to give bail, the quality of the prisoner, and the nature of the offence of any offence under that Act to be defrayed in like manner as in the case of a felony. The Dublin Grand Jury Act (7 & 8 Vict. c. 106), s. 40, gives power in case of felonies or misdemeanours committed in the county of Dublin to defray the expenses of the prosecution out of the county fund. By the Criminal Justice Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 126), s. 14, justices have power to order payment of expenses of prosecutor and witnesses in larceny offences triable summarily, such expenses to be paid out of the county fund.

<sup>1</sup> The following oath is prescribed by 57 Geo. 3, c. 56, s. 2:—"I, A. B., do swear that I am a householder and have a house where I usually reside at _____ in the parish of _____, Barony of _____, and county of _____, and that I support and maintain myself by _____, and that I am worth the sum of £ _____ over and above all my just debts, so help me God.

(2 Hawk. c. 15 s. 4).<sup>1</sup> There should be at least two sureties in a serious case (ib.). Admitting to bail.

If an accused has been admitted to bail, any justice may, on the application of his surety, and on information being made, in writing and on oath, by such surety or some person on his behalf, that the accused is about to abscond for the purpose of evading justice, issue a warrant for the arrest of the accused, and afterwards, upon being satisfied that the ends of justice would otherwise be defeated, commit the accused when so arrested to jail until his trial, or until he shall produce another sufficient surety or sureties (Petty Sessions Act, s. 17).

If it is not convenient for the surety or sureties to attend at the gaol, the committing justice or any justice by whom the accused can be admitted to bail, shall make a duplicate of the certificate of his consent to bail and the amount thereof, and any justice of the same county, on presentation of such certificate, may take the recognizance of the surety or sureties. When the surety will not attend in the county in which a prisoner is confined, but will attend in Dublin, the Court will grant a writ of habeas corpus to bring up the prisoner, in order that the bail may be taken in his presence (R. v. Hussey, (1860) 11 I.C.L.R., App. XX.).

A contract by a prisoner (Wilson v. Strugnell, (1881) 7 Q.B.D. 548; Hermann v. Jeuchner, (1885) 15 Q.B.D. 561), or by a third party (Consolidation Exploration and Finance Co. v. Musgrave, (1900) 1 Ch. 37), to indemnify the surety is contrary to public policy, and void; and the giving of such an indemnity is a criminal offence, though no intent to defeat the ends of justice is proved (R. v. Porter, (1910) 1 K.B. 369).

In cases where bail has been refused the accused may apply to the King's Bench Division for an order to grant bail. The first step is to obtain an order, which is made up in the Crown Office, ex parte, without any application to the Court, the order being to return informations, examinations, depositions, inquisitions, and indictments touching the commitment with a view to bail (Order 84, r. 206 (f)). This order is obtained on an affidavit made by the accused, or by his solicitor on his behalf, and is served upon the clerk of the Crown or clerk of the peace, as the case may be. When the return thereto is made, a motion is made to the Divisional Court or to the Vacation Judge in the vacation, on notice to the Crown solicitor of the county or county of a city or town, in which the commitment was made, to show cause why the defendant should not be admitted to bail (Order 84, Rule 90). No appeal lies from an order on a bail motion. (Judicature Act, s. 25, R. v. Foote, (1884) 10 Q.B.D. 378). In case of a misdemeanour the accused has, under the Habeas Corpus Act (21 & 22 Geo. 3, c. 11, s. 2 (Ir.)), corresponding to 31 Car. 2, c. 2, s. 2 (E.), an absolute right to be admitted to bail (Re Frost, (1888) 4 T.L.R. 757, Stephen's "History of the Criminal Law," vol. i., 243, Short and Mellor, 2nd ed., 282).<sup>2</sup> There is jurisdiction to grant bail even in cases of murder, but this is rarely done, and the circumstances must be

<sup>2</sup> In R. v. Butler, (1881) 8 L.R.I. 39, the Court of Queen's Bench in Ireland (May, C.J., and Fitzgerald, J., O'Brien, J., dissenting) refused to grant bail in case of a misdemeanour, on the ground that the accused belonged to an organization known as the Land League which would probably indemnify the bailsmen if the accused did not appear to take their trial; but the attention of the Court does not seem to have been directed to the provisions of the Habeas Corpus Act.

Warrant to arrest where indictment found.

If an indictment is found by a grand jury at assizes or quarter sessions against any person who shall then be at large, and who shall not have appeared and pleaded to the indictment, the clerk of the Crown or the clerk of the peace shall, upon application of the prosecutor, deliver to him a certificate of the indictment having been found, and a justice of the peace for the county in which the offence has been committed or in which the accused is, or is suspected to be, shall upon the production of such certificate, issue a warrant for the arrest of the accused, and shall commit for trial or admit him to bail (Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 18).

Indictable offences cannot be disposed of summarily.

An offence which is triable only on indictment cannot be disposed of summarily. The defendant was charged with intimidation (an indictable offence), and an order was made, "convicted, and ordered to give sureties to keep the peace": held, that the order was void (R. (O'Grady) v. Cork JJ., (1905) 5 N.I.J.R. 191). The defendant was charged with an indictable offence, unlawfully wounding, on a police charge-sheet, and evidence was given supporting that charge. The justice summarily convicted the defendant of a common assault, without calling on him to plead to that charge, or informing him that he was being tried for an offence other than that stated in the charge-sheet: held, that the conviction should be quashed (R. (Walsh) v. Dublin JJ., (1902) 2 N.I.J.R. 41; see also R. v. Kilkenny JJ., (1871) 1 R. 5 C.L. 394, ex p. Clarke, (1890) 26 L.R.I. 1, and cf. R. (McGrath) v. Clare JJ., (1905) 2 I.R. 510, R. (Tyacke) v. Owens, (1902) 2 N.I.J.R. 138).

Newspaper comment on pending charge.

The High Court has jurisdiction to commit for contempt the publisher of matter tending to prejudice the fair trial of a person charged with an indictable offence, even though at the time of the publication the accused has not been committed for trial (R. v. Parke, (1903) 2 K.B. 432), or brought before a magistrate (R. v. Clarke, (1910) 27 T.L.R. 32). Where the jury had disagreed, and it was intended (though not formally stated) that a new jury would be empanelled, it was held that the proceeding was still a "pending one," and that it was a contempt of court for a journal to criticize the proceeding (R. v. Freeman's Journal, Ltd., (1902) 2 I.R. 82). An application for alleged contempt of court committed by an incorporated company should be by motion, not for attachment, but to attend and answer in respect of such contempt (ib.).

Attending witness's house to take deposition.

Where a person is brought before a magistrate charged with any indictable offence, it is the duty of such magistrate, under s. 17 of the Indictable Offences (Eng.) Act, 1848 (corresponding to s. 14 of the Petty Sessions (Ir.), Act 1851), if it is practicable for him to do so, to take the deposition of a witness who is dangerously ill, and is therefore unable to attend the courthouse, at the place where the witness is (R. v. Bros, (1910) 27 T.L.R. 41).

THE jurisdiction to require sureties of the peace or good behaviour is exercisable out of sessions,<sup>1</sup> and is derived (a) from statute, (b) from the authority of the justice's commission. The statute 34 Edw. 3, c. 1 (1360), provides:—

“That in every county in England<sup>2</sup> shall be assigned for the keeping of the peace, one Lord, and with him three or four of the most worthy in the county, with some learned in the law, and they shall have power . . . . to take of all them that be not of good fame where they shall be found, sufficient surety and mainprise<sup>3</sup> of their good behaviour towards the king and his people, and the other duly to punish.”

The words of the Commission conferring the jurisdiction to bind to the peace or to be of good behaviour are as follows:—

“Do appoint you and every of you jointly and severally our justices to keep our peace in our County of . . . . , and to cause to come before you or any of you all those persons who shall threaten any of our people in their person, or with burning their houses, to find sufficient security for the peace, or for their good behaviour towards us and our people.”

The following seem to be the differences between sureties to keep the peace and sureties to be of good behaviour.

(1) “Security for good behaviour comprehended security for the peace, but was much more comprehensive, extending to ill-fame and misbehaviour of a character which, though not criminal, was likely to be dangerous to the peace and order of the community, including words disparaging and insulting magistrates, or lewdness of life” (per Gibson, J., in Hulpin v. Rice, (1901) 2 I.R. 593, at p. 604,

<sup>3</sup> “Mainprise is when a man is arrested by Capias, that the judge may deliver his body to certain men for to keep and bring him before him at a certain day, and these be called mainpernors; and if the party appeare not at the day assigned, the mainpernors shall be amerced” (Termes de la Ley). “Mainpernors differ from bail in that a man’s bail may imprison or surrender him up before the stipulated day of appearance; mainpernors can do neither, but are barely sureties for his appearance at the day; bail are only sureties that the party be answerable for the special matter for which they stipulate; mainpernors are bound to produce him to answer all charges whatsoever” (3 Bl. Com. 128; see also In re Nottingham Corporation, (1897) 2 Q.B. 502, 510).

citing Claxton's Case, (1701) 12 Mod. 566; see also 5 Burns, 30th ed., 754).

(2) A person who is bound to be of good behaviour is more strictly bound than to the peace, for the peace is not broken without an actual affray, battery, &c., but this may be forfeited by the number of a man's company or his weapons (Crompt. Just. 119, 120, Termes de la Ley, "Good abearing"; see also pp. 341, 342, post).

(3) Applications for sureties for good behaviour were usually, though not necessarily, made at sessions, or if out of sessions, before two or more justices, while peace applications were commonly made to a single justice (Halpin v. Rice, (1901) 2 I.R., at p. 605).

(4) It was formerly thought requisite, on an application to bind to the peace, that the applicant should prove on oath that he was actually under fear of bodily harm from the defendant, and had just cause to be so (1 Hawk, 8th ed., c. 28, s. 6; 5 Burns, 30th ed., 743); but this was never deemed necessary in an application for sureties for good behaviour. Whether such averment would at present be deemed necessary seems doubtful. In R. v. Wilkins, (1907) 2 K.B. 380, an order binding to the peace was held good on its face, though it failed to aver that the applicant went in fear of the defendant; and Lord Alverstone, C.J., without wishing to lay down a general rule, said that his impression was that it was only necessary to allege that the party goes in fear when an ex parte application is made for an order that one person should be bound over to keep the peace towards another. Though there is no express enactment or provision that the party against whom the order is sought shall have notice of the application, it is not easy to conceive circumstances under which a justice's order obtained behind a person's back could be supported, and in the same case Lord Alverstone seems to limit the jurisdiction to cases where "the person bound over has had a reasonable opportunity of knowing the nature of the charge brought against him and making his answer to it"<sup>1</sup> (p. 384).

An order can be made both to keep the peace and be of good behaviour (R. v. Barry, (1889) 26 L.R.I. 40).

What tribunals may bind over.

A person may be bound over by justices or by the High Court (5 Burns, 745). The jurisdiction is incident to every justice and every judge who has power to hear and determine a criminal case, without any enabling statute, unless restrained by express statutable words (per Palles, C.B., in Ex parte Tanner, (1899) Judgments of the Superior Courts, 351, Ex parte Harken, ib. 316). The order may be made over and above any punishment awarded (Ex parte Harken, at p. 320).

Under what circumstances persons may be bound over.

A person may be bound over by justices of their own motion or on the complaint of others (5 Burns, 745; Dalton, c. 116). "The jurisdiction to bind to the peace has been applied to cases in which the defendant was acquitted, . . . to cases in which the party had no opportunity of saying a word to object to it, . . . in cases where there was no information that a repetition of the offence was likely or was apprehended, . . . and lastly, it has been applied in cases of statutable misdemeanour, over and above the maximum penalty imposed by the statute, all showing that it is something ordered by way of prevention and not as punishment. . . . The jurisdiction to require persons to enter into recognizances for good behaviour was by way of preventive justice, and not of punishment. My view is that the jurisdiction attaches if there has been what amounts to a breach of good behaviour, in the same way as the jurisdiction to require sureties to keep the peace attaches if there has been a breach of the peace, but that justices can also hold a party to good behaviour or the peace, as the case may be, although there has been no act which amounted, in legal parlance, to misbehaviour or breach of the peace, if the circumstances are of such a character as to lead to the reasonable probability of the party doing an act which would amount to such misbehaviour or breach of the peace" (per Palles, C.B., in Ex parte Tanner, supra; see also Ex parte Harken, supra; R. (McCormick) v. Clare JJ., (1882) 16 I.L.T.R. 91).

Under what circumstances persons may be bound over.

Justices can of their own initiative make an order binding over a person who is before them if they are satisfied that he has used threats calculated to produce a breach of the peace, although no formal charge has been made against him (R. v. Wilkins, (1907) 2 K.B. 380; see also Ex parte Davis, (1871) 24 L.T. 547); and such an order is not bad merely because it does not state that the person threatened goes in fear of bodily injury (R. v. Wilkins, supra). Justices have apparently power to bind over a person who, in addressing meetings in public places, although he does not directly incite to the commission of breaches of the peace, uses language, the natural consequence of which is that breaches of the peace will be committed by others, and who intends to hold similar meetings and use similar language in the future (Wise v. Dunning, (1902) 1 K.B. 167); see also, Humphries v. Connor, (1864) 17 I.C.L.R. 1). A successful complainant can be bound over (R. v. Wilkins, supra).

The same Mr. Wise was called upon on June 26th, 1909, at the instance of the chief constable of Liverpool to show cause why he should not be ordered to find sureties to keep the peace and to be of good behaviour. The information of the chief constable stated that the appellant had informed him that he intended to lead a parade of his Bible class through certain streets of Liverpool on Sunday, June 27th, and that the chief constable apprehended and believed that if the appellant did so the natural consequence would be a breach of the peace, riot, and disorder. Upon the appellant undertaking at the hearing not to hold a procession on Sunday, June 27th, he was released on bail. At the adjourned hearing on July 1st, the chief constable expressed his willingness to withdraw the proceedings, as the proposed object had been attained, namely, the prevention of the procession on June 27th; but the magistrate refused to allow this, unless the appellant would enter into his own recognizances to keep the peace and be of good behaviour; and he made an order accordingly, or, in the alternative, that the appellant should go to prison for four months. The appellant refused to enter into the recognizances. A rule nisi having been obtained calling upon the magistrate to show cause why he should not state a case, the magistrate filed an affidavit in which he stated that the appellant had been twice previously directed to find sureties to keep the peace; that serious sectarian riots had taken place in Liverpool on June 5th and 20th in connection with the processions of the appellant's Bible class; that the chief constable had reasonable grounds for anticipating a breach of the peace if the procession had taken place on June 27th; that a few days previously the appellant had, in addressing a meeting, used insulting language in reference to Roman Catholics; that between the date of granting the warrant against the appellant and his decision he had had to hear charges against numbers of rioters animated by sectarian animosities; and that he could not use any discretion in favour of a person who had acted as the appellant had done:—Held, that the rule nisi must be discharged; that the magistrate had ample grounds for saying that he would not be satisfied with anything less than the appellant entering into his recognizances to be of good behaviour; and that he was justified in refusing to state a case (R. v. Little, Ex parte Wise, (1910) 26 T.L.R. 8). But where a meeting is, as regards both its object and the conduct of the persons at it, perfectly lawful, justices are not entitled to require the persons taking part in it to give sureties for their good behaviour merely because such a meeting may possibly or probably cause persons who object to it to commit a breach of the peace (R. (Orr) v. Londonderry JJ., (1891) 28 L.R.I. 440). But "an unnecessary and unreasonable persistence in language or conduct calculated to provoke violence or tumult may afford good ground for the exercise of this jurisdiction against a person who is himself free from any criminal or evil motive" (ib. at p. 462, per Holmes, L.J.)—a dictum which shows that there is no distinction between this case and Wise v. Dunning, or R. v. Little, supra.

A person may come within the words "not of good fame" within the statute of Ed. 3 if he publishes a libel calculated to provoke a breach of the peace (Haylock v. Sparks, (1853) 1 E. & B. 471), or is guilty of insulting language towards the court (Ex parte Tanner, supra).<sup>1</sup> When the prosecutor, who alleged a threat by defendant, prayed an order binding him to the peace, and at the hearing it appeared there had been an assault, it was held that the justices could not fine for the assault, against the wish of the prosecutor, who wished to preserve his civil rights in respect of the assault (R. v. Denny, (1851) 20 L.J.M.C. 189). But where a summons setting forth that the defendant had assaulted the complainant commanded the defendant to show cause why he should not be bound over to keep the peace, and the justice held that his jurisdiction to deal with the assault was not curtailed by the form of the summons, and, without any objection being made by the complainant, sentenced the defendant to imprisonment, it was held that the conviction was right (Kennington v. Daniel, (1888) 22 L.R.I. 667).

The King's Bench Division, as conservators of the peace, have original jurisdiction, independently of the statute of Edward 3, to require sureties for good behaviour from persons whose acts or language are shown to be likely to endanger the public peace (Ex parte Seymour & Davitt, (1882) 12 L.R.I. 46).

No appeal lies from an order requiring sureties (In re Hurley, Q.B.D. (Ir.) 19th Dec., 1888),<sup>2</sup> but an order can be the subject of a case stated<sup>3</sup> (R. v. Barry, (1889) 26 L.R.I. 40), or be questioned on certiorari or habeas corpus.

order.

On the hearing of a motion for certiorari to bring up for the purpose of quashing an order binding to the peace, the King's Bench Division has jurisdiction on certiorari (R. (Orr) v. Londonderry JJ., (1891) 28 L.R.I. 440) or habeas corpus (R. v. Dunn, (1840) 12 A. & E. 599) to examine into the evidence given before the justices, and if there is no evidence to support the order, to grant the writ. The court will, however, not interfere with the discretion of the justice, unless in a clear case of misuse of the magisterial authority (R. (Reynolds) v. Cork JJ., (1882) 10 L.R.I. 1; R. v. Little, Ex parte Wise, (1910) 26 T.L.R. 8).

No appeal from order.

On an application to bind over a defendant to be of good behaviour or give sureties for the peace, the defendant is not a competent witness, nor is it competent for him to go into evidence at all (R. (Feehan) v. Queen's Co. JJ., (1882) 10 L.R.I. 294, Lort v. Hutton, (1876) 33 L.T. 730; Ex parte Tanner, Judgments of the Superior Courts, (1899) 340; Halpin v. Rice, (1901) 2 I.R. 593).<sup>1</sup> Justices are entitled to take into consideration the general course of conduct of a person against whom an application is made to give sureties of the peace (ib.; Dalton, 293; R. (Feehan) v. Queen's Co. JJ., (1882) 10 L.R.I. 294; R. v. Dunn, (1840) 12 A. & E. 599; R. v. Little, Ex parte Wise, (1910) 26 T.L.R. 8).

Evidence for defendant not allowable.

In default of finding sureties to keep the peace or to be of good behaviour, the justice may order the person ordered to be bound over to be imprisoned for such reasonable period as he may think fit until he finds bail (Ex parte Harken, Judgments of Superior Court (1889) 319).<sup>2</sup> The order to find sureties, and the order that in default of finding sureties the person bound over be imprisoned, must be made at the one time by the one justice or the one court (Re Ashton, (1845) 7 Q.B. 169). In charges under the Criminal Law Consolidation Acts,<sup>3</sup> the term of imprisonment in lieu of finding sureties, is limited to one year. The warrant should contain a statement of a previous demand and refusal to find sureties, or else show on its face that the person bound over was present when the committal was made out, and that its contents were communicated to him (Atkinson v. Carty, (1838) 1 J. & S. 369; but it is not necessary that the person bound over should have been called on and have refused to find sureties before the order is made out (R. v. Barry, (1889) 26 L.R.I. 40).

On an appeal from a court of summary jurisdiction, the county court judge has jurisdiction, while varying the term of imprisonment, to order defendant to enter into sureties for good behaviour or in default to be further imprisoned (Ex parte Harken, supra).

The order will be bad if it directs the defendant to be imprisoned (without mentioning any specific period) until he shall give the required sureties (Prickett v. Gratrex, (1846) 8 Q.B. 1020; Grady v. Hunt, (1855) 5 I.C.L.R. 445).

In R. (Reidy) v. Clare JJ., (1902) 2 N.I.J.R. 132, the order was, "The defendant is hereby ordered to enter into bail to keep the peace, and in default of entering into such security as aforesaid, the said defendant to be imprisoned for three calendar months without hard labour." The validity of the order was questioned, on the ground that the order for the imprisonment was absolute, and did not contain a clause that imprisonment should determine if and when the security was given. It was held (Gibson, J., dissenting) that the warrant (which contained such a clause and the order should be read together, and that, so read, they were valid.

No power to award costs.

It is submitted that justices when making an order to bind to the peace or be of good behaviour simpliciter, have no power to award costs, such order not being within s. 21 of the Petty Sessions Act, enabling justices to award costs. But the fact that in making an order within s. 21, justices also order a party to find sureties, will not, it is submitted, prevent the Court from awarding costs in pursuance of s. 21.

Recogniz-ances.

The following statements as to recognizances will, save where it otherwise appears, apply to recognizances generally (for form, see Petty Sessions Act, Form C, s. 34). The recognizance may be taken by the justice or clerk of petty sessions repeating to the defendant and his sureties :—

You A. B. acknowledge yourself bound to our Sovereign Lord the King in the sum of                      and you, C. D. and E. F., also acknowledge yourselves severally bound to owe to our Sovereign Lord the King the sum of                      each, to be respectively made and levied upon your goods and chattels, lands and tenements, to the King's use, if you, A. B., shall make default in the condition of this recognizance, which is that you, A. B., shall well and truly keep the peace (or keep the peace and be of good behaviour, or as the case may be, towards the King and all his subjects, and especially towards M. N., for the space of                      from this day. Are you severally content to be bound ?

Transmission
nizance.

When the recognizance relates to a matter to be tried at assizes or at quarter sessions, the recognizance is to be forwarded to the clerk of the Crown or peace (Petty Sessions Act, 1851, ss. 19, 24 (4)). When the condition of the recognizance is to keep the peace, or to appear before any justice out of quarter sessions, the recognizance shall be deposited with the clerk of petty sessions of the district by the justice by whom it shall have been taken (s. 34).

Limit of time.

The recognizance may be for a limited time (Willes v. Bridges, (1819) 2 B. & Ald. 278, in which the recognizance was for two years).<sup>1</sup>

recognizances.

A condition to keep the peace is forfeited by any breach of the peace, as to which see p. 147 (see also 5 Burns (Chitty), p. 904). A condition to be of good behaviour is broken, not only by any breach of the peace, for which a recognizance for the peace may be forfeited, but also for some others, for which a peace recognizance cannot be forfeited, as, for going armed with great numbers to the terror of the people, or speaking words tending to sedition; and also for all such actual misbehaviours which are intended to be prevented by such a recognizance, but not for barely giving cause of suspicion of what, perhaps, may never actually happen (1 Hawk, c. 61, s. 6).

Estreating
recognizances.

Recognizances may be estreated (a) at petty sessions in the case of recognizances transmitted to petty sessions (see supra), (Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 34), and (b) at quarter sessions<sup>2</sup> in case of breach of a condition in a recognizance to keep the peace, or to appear to give evidence in case of an indictable offence, or to appear to answer to an indictable offence, or to perform the duties of petty sessions clerk (Fines Act, 1851, s. 10). As to estreating at petty sessions upon non-performance of the condition of the recognizance, any justice who may then be there present<sup>1</sup> may certify on the recognizance the non-performance of the condition; and the justices at petty sessions may, upon proof of the breach, make an order to estreat to such amount as they shall see fit, and may thereupon issue a distress warrant to enforce payment: proof must be first made upon oath that notice in writing (stating the general grounds on which it is intended to sustain the application) was left at the usual place of abode<sup>2</sup> of the party, or each of the parties, seven days at least before the date of the application (Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 34). The order to estreat at quarter sessions is made by the county court judge or Recorder to such amount as he shall think fit, upon conviction of an offence which is a breach,<sup>3</sup> or upon the production<sup>4</sup> of a certificate of breach signed by the proper officer (Fines Act, 1851, s. 10). Seven days' previous notice in writing, stating in substance the cause or matter on which it is intended to sustain the application, must be given to, or left at the usual place of abode of, the parties (ib.). Such order may be made against a surety as well as a principal party (see 37 & 38 Vict. c. 72, s. 2).

Recognizances.
Estreating.

It is clear, it is submitted, that, in case of recognizances estreated at quarter sessions, the warrant may order imprisonment in default (see Fines Act, 1851, ss. 3, 10) for "the like period for which any person might be imprisoned in any like case in default of distress under the provisions of the Petty Sessions Act."<sup>5</sup> But the matter is by no means clear so far as concerns recognizances estreated at petty sessions; for though a forfeited recognizance is a "penal sum" within section 8 of the Fines Act, yet section 34 of the Petty Sessions Act, which gives the right to justices at petty sessions to estreat recognizances, expressly enacts that the amount estreated shall be recovered by a warrant "to levy such amount by distress and sale of the goods." But, in principle, there seems no reason why recognizances estreated at petty sessions should not be enforceable in the same manner as similar recognizances estreated at quarter sessions; and it would appear that the opinion of the law officers in 1876 was that all recognizances could be enforced by imprisonment in default of payment (Stoker's "Duties of Clerks of Petty Sessions," p. 143).

Can imprisonment be ordered on failure to pay amount of forfeited recognizances?

It is said that the death of the Sovereign discharges a surety of the peace, for the recognizance is to keep the peace of the King (then being), and when he is dead, it is not his peace (Brooks' Abridgment, p. 130; Dalton, p. 281; 1 Hawk. c. 28, s. 17); but as to Crown debts generally, see Grant on Corporations, p. 629; R. v. Bradford, (1714) 2 L. & R. 1327.

Demise of Crown.

Jurisdiction of justices at petty sessions.

THE jurisdiction of justices at petty sessions has to do with— (1) the hearing and determination of certain criminal, quasi-criminal, or civil cases, in a summary way; (2) the granting of certain certificates or licences to sell intoxicating liquor, game, &c. (as to which see appropriate titles, LICENSING JURISDICTION, GAME, &c.). Civil jurisdiction is dealt with separately. This chapter is concerned with the criminal and quasi-criminal jurisdiction of justices in petty sessions.

The summary jurisdiction of justices is derived entirely from statute. If a statute creates an offence, and does not expressly make it subject to the summary jurisdiction of justices, it will not be triable summarily, but will be an indictable misdemeanour (see Russell, Jurisdiction of justices at petty sessions, 7th ed., p. 11; R. v. Hall, (1891) 1 Q.B., at p. 767), and punishable, if no penalty is awarded by the statute, with fine or imprisonment within the discretion of the court (Russell, 249). There are, however, instances where, having regard to the plain and obvious intention of the statute, summary jurisdiction has been held to apply, notwithstanding the absence of an express provision to that effect (Cullen v. Trimble, (1872) L.R. 7 Q.B. 416; Johnson v. Colam, (1875) L.R. 10 Q.B. 544). In some cases an offence is triable either summarily or by indictment, either at the option of the accused (e.g., Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, see s. 2) or at the option of the justices (e.g., 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 46).

As the power to hear and determine cases in a summary way is entirely the creation of statute, regard must be had in each case to the provisions of the particular statute under which the proceedings are brought. The Petty Sessions Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 93), contains general provisions which are applicable to all offences triable summarily, whether created by statutes passed before or after the Petty Sessions Act, save where otherwise expressly provided (Fines Act (Ir.), 1874, 37 & 38 Vict. c. 72, s. 5), or where it appears the Act was not intended to apply (R. v. Unkles, (1873) I.R. 8 C.L. 50, at pp. 52, 56; Glasgow v. Henry, (1907) 41 I.L.T.R. 245). The Act does not extend to Dublin metropolis, save so far as relates to the backing or executing of warrants (s. 41), nor to proceedings under the Acts relating to His Majesty's revenue of excise or customs, stamps, taxes, or post office, or relating to the preservation of game, except that all proceedings as to the same may be in the forms of procedure required by the Act, or as near thereto as the circumstances of the case will admit (s. 42). Where a defendant was charged with an indictable offence, to wit, intimidation, and the justices at the hearing made an order, "defendant convicted and ordered to give sureties to keep the peace," the order was set aside as being a conviction of an offence which the justices had no power to dispose of summarily (R. (O'Grady) v. Cork JJ., (1905) 5 N.I.J.R. 191). Justices have power to summarily determine a complaint of assault, which in fact includes or was accompanied by wounding (R. (McGrath) v. Clare JJ., (1905) 2 I.R. 510; R. v. Elrington, (1861) 1 B. & S. 688); but where the defendant, a boy of fourteen years of age, was charged, on the police charge-sheet, with unlawfully wounding, and evidence was given in court in support of that charge, and the justices, without informing the defendant that he was being tried for a common assault, or asking the defendant, or his parents on his behalf, to plead, convicted the defendant of common assault, the conviction was quashed (R. (Walsh) v. Dublin JJ., (1902) 2 N.I.J.R. 41).

Many statutes enact that the penalties shall be recovered in manner prescribed by the Summary Jurisdiction (Ireland) Acts. By the Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 13 (9), the expression "the Summary Jurisdiction (Ireland) Acts" means, as regards Dublin, the Acts regulating the powers and duties of justices of the peace or of the police of that district, and as respects any other part of Ireland, the Petty Sessions (Ireland) Act, 1851, and any Act, past or future, amending the same.

Generally speaking, three things must concur to ground the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace: (a) that the subject-matter of the proceedings shall have arisen within the place or county for which he is in commission; (b) that the justice shall be in said county at the time of the exercise of his jurisdiction; and (c) that the defendant is amenable within the county.<sup>1</sup> But several extensions have been added to the jurisdiction by statute—(1) as to matters arising within the justice's county,<sup>2</sup> where the justice is himself outside the county; and (2) as to matters not arising within his county, though the justice is within his county.

A justice for any county may act as such in all matters arising within such county, although he may at the time happen to be in an adjoining county, provided he be also a justice for such adjoining county; and a justice for any county may act as such in all matters arising within that county, although he may at the time happen to be in any city, town, or place, being a county of itself, situated within or adjoining to the justice's said county, whether he shall be a justice of such city, town, or place, or not (Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 7). Wherever any townland of one county shall be included in a petty sessions district of an adjoining county, a justice of such petty sessions district, though not a justice of the county in which the townland is situate, shall have jurisdiction over the townland (ib.)<sup>3</sup>

By section 10 of the Petty Sessions Act, 1851, a justice of the peace may receive an information or complaint, and proceed in respect of the same in the following cases:—

(A) Where information shall be given (1) that any person has committed or is suspected to have committed any treason, felony, misdemeanour, or other offence within the limits of the jurisdiction of such justice, for which such person shall be punishable either by indictment or upon summary conviction; or (2) that any person has committed or is suspected to have committed any such crime or offence elsewhere out of the jurisdiction of such justice, either in Great Britain or Ireland, or in the Isle of Man or Channel Islands, and such person is residing or being, or is suspected to reside or be, within the limits of the jurisdiction of such justice; or (3) that any person has committed or is suspected to have committed any crime or offence whatsoever on the high seas, or in any creek, harbour, haven, or other place in which the Admiralty of England or Ireland have or claim to have jurisdiction,<sup>4</sup> or on land beyond the seas for which an indictment can be legally preferred in the United Kingdom of England and Ireland,<sup>4</sup> and such person is residing or being, or is suspected to reside or be, within the limits of the jurisdiction of such justice; or

(B) Whenever a complaint has been made to any justice as to any other matter arising within the limits of his jurisdiction, upon which he shall have power to make a summary order. This clause

As to whether recognizances and informations voluntarily entered into or given are within the rule or exception, quære, see Nun and Walsh, 2nd ed., p. 46.

<sup>3</sup> As to jurisdiction in fishery cases, see R. (Mackay) v. Limerick JJ., (1898) 2 I.R. 135, noted FISHERY OFFENCES; and as to cases not within Petty Sessions Act, see Chapter VI., SUMMARY CASES NOT WITHIN PETTY SESSIONS ACT.

refers to civil matters. The terms "complaint" and "information" mean, respectively, the initiatory steps in proceedings of a civil and criminal nature (In re Dillon, (1859) 11 I.C.L.R. 232). Local limits of jurisdiction.

By section 11, where the offence shall have occurred or the cause of complaint shall have arisen within the petty sessions district for which the justice issuing the summons shall act, but the defendant shall reside in an adjoining county, it shall be lawful for the justice to compel the appearance of such defendant in like manner as if he resided within the district, although such justice may not be a justice of such adjoining county.

All felonies and misdemeanours committed on the boundary or boundaries of two or more counties, or within 500 yards of any such boundary, or begun in one county and completed in another, may be dealt with in any of the said counties as if they had been actually committed therein (9 Geo. 4, c. 54, s. 26). When any felony or misdemeanour is committed on any person, or on, or in respect of, any property in or upon any coach or other carriage employed in any journey, or on board any vessel employed on any voyage on river, canal, &c., it may be dealt with, &c., in any county through any part of which such carriage or vessel passed, as if actually committed in such county: if the side, centre, bank, or any part of such road, river, canal, or navigation, constitute the boundary of any two counties, the offence may also be dealt with, &c., as if actually committed in either of such two counties (s. 27).<sup>1</sup>

As to other statutes affecting the local limits of jurisdiction, see p. 15; as to justices under L. G. Act, see p. 74.

Generally any person may be informer or complainant, but sometimes the statute allows only particular persons to inform (Paley, 8th ed. 80), and this may be done impliedly, as by s. 11 of the Sea Fisheries Act, 1883, which enacts that the provisions of the Act are to "be enforced by sea-fishery officers," which words have been held to exclude all other persons (R. v. Cubitt, (1889) 22 Q.B.D. 622). The question as to the right of a member of the public to lay a complaint was discussed by Palles, C.B., in Kenealy v. O'Keefe, (1901) 2 I.R. 39.—"In cases of indictable offences the title of a prosecutor to prefer a bill of indictment does not depend upon pecuniary interest. The prosecutor, as one of the public, puts the criminal law in motion, not for his own private profit, but to procure the infliction of punishment for an offence against the public of which he is one. In the absence of any decisions or practice to the contrary, it would seem reasonable to infer from these premises that when justices acquired a jurisdiction to dispose summarily of particular new offences created by statute, prima facie, any member of the public might lay an information in respect thereof. This prima facie inference might necessarily be rebutted in either of two ways: first, by that which was constituted an offence, instead of being a matter which affected the public generally, being no more than a grievance to a particular person; secondly, by the statute creating the offence negating or limiting the general right. But if the offence was one against the public generally, then the mere circumstance that a member of the public had no pecuniary interest in a conviction would appear to be insufficient to rebut the inference, because it was not upon any such pecuniary interest that his prima facie right to proceed depended. The fact that the entire penalty is by the statute appropriated to a particular party may, inter alia, be relied on to show that the offence created by the statute was one against the individual only, and not against the public generally. If, however, upon the true construction of the statute, the offence is one against the public, and not against a particular individual only, then I am of opinion as well upon principle as upon the authority of Cole v. Coulton (2 E. & E. 695), and uniform usage, that the mere circumstance of the entire penalty being appropriated to a person other than the informer does not take the case out of the general rule." Accordingly, it has been held that a member of the public can prosecute in the following cases:—trespass in pursuit of game (Midleton v. Gale, (1838) 8 A. & E. 155; Morden v. Porter, (1860) 29 L.J.M.C. 213; R. (Connolly) v. Tyrone J.J., (1902) 2 I.R. 78); a prosecution under the Diseases of Animals Act, 1894, and orders made thereunder (R. v. Stewart, (1896) 1 Q.B. 300); under the penal clauses of the English Highway Act, 1835, 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50; (Back v. Holmes, (1887) 57 L.J.M.C. 37; suffering prostitutes to assemble at defendant's house (Cole v. Coulton, (1860) 2 E. & E. 695); recovery of penalties under the Local Government Act for acting as a district councillor when disqualified (Kenealy v. O'Keeffe, (1901) 2 I.R. 39); breach by a tramway company of a bye-law forbidding overcrowding (Badeock v. Sankey, (1890) 6 T.L.R. 170); wrongfully assuming a medical title contrary to section 40 of the Medical Act, 1858, 21 & 22 Vict. c. 90 (Clark v. McGuire, (1909) 2 I.R. 681, 43 I.L.T.R. 52); selling poisons contrary to Sale of Poisons (Ireland) Act, 1870, 33 & 34 Vict. c. 26, s. 2 (Lawler v. Egan, (1901) 2 I.R. 589); throwing stones to the annoyance of passengers contrary to section 28 of the Towns (England) Police Clauses Act, 1847 (Jobson v. Henderson, (1900) 19 Cox 477). But the fact that the entire penalty is to go to a particular person is a strong indication that the person to whom the penalty is to go is the only person to sue for it (per Lord Coleridge, C.J., in Anderson v. Hamlin, (1890) 25 Q.B.D. 224; see also R. v. Corden, (1769) 4 Burr 2279; R. v. Hicks, (1855) 4 E. & B. 633). A constable can proceed against a defendant for being drunk on the public highway contrary to the Towns Improvement Act, 1854, s. 72 (Coulter v. Martin, (1887) I.R. 11 C.L. 477; Stevenson v. O'Neill, (1877) I.R. 11 C.L. 134). In some cases of injury to private property, where the penalty is intended as a compensation to the owner, and in which the dissent of the owner is essential to constitute the offence, it is requisite that either the information should be laid on behalf of the owner, or that some other proof of his dissent should be adduced along with the charge, although the statute itself may not profess in terms to make that a condition, for, unless it appears that the owner dissented from the act, it does not amount to an offence (Paley, 8th ed. 81). As in olden times an informer had to inform orally, a corporation cannot

Who can be complainant.

Porter*, (1910) 44 I.L.T.R. 13. See also Hennessey v. Ryall, (1911) 44 I.L.T.R. 4, and *M'Cormack v. sue, in a civil action at all events, for a penalty as a common informer, unless expressly authorized so to do (Guardians of St. Leonards v. Franklin, (1878) 3 C.P.D. 377, Chitty's Archbold's Practice, 14th ed. 1050); as to whether this applies to criminal proceedings, quære, see R. (Ferris) v. Londonderry JJ., (1903) 2 I.R. 748. A police constable, as a rule, prosecutes merely as a common informer (see observations of Palles, C.B., in R. (Lawlor) v. King's Co. JJ., (1907) 41 I.L.T.R. 77). A board of guardians prosecuting a defendant for wilfully neglecting to maintain his wife are not common informers, but parties aggrieved (R. (Ferris) v. Londonderry JJ., (1903) 2 I.R. 747; cf. Robinson v. Currey, (1881) 7 Q.B.D. 465). Under the Food and Drugs Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 51, s. 2), the inspector of food and drugs may prosecute in his own name, without any antecedent resolution of the local authority (Connor v. Butler, (1902) 2 I.R. 569). A prosecution will fail if the provisions of a particular statute making a consent of an official necessary before its institution be not strictly followed. The Sunday Observation Prosecution Act, 1871 (E.), enacts that a prosecution under the Act shall not be instituted without the written consent of the chief officer of police of the district; held, that the consent of the superintendent of police who was in charge of the district during the temporary absence of the chief constable was not sufficient (R. v. Halkett, (1910) 1 K.B. 50). Where a statute provides that a prosecution shall not be instituted except with a certain consent, such consent must be obtained before the summons is issued (Department of Agriculture and Marchbank v. Porter, (1910) 44 I.L.T.R. 13).

By the Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 8 (2), it shall not be lawful for justices to hear and determine any cases of summary jurisdiction<sup>1</sup> out of petty sessions, with the following exceptions:—(1) drunkenness, vagrancy, fraud in the sale of goods, disputes as to sales in fairs or markets, which may be determined by one justice out of sessions; (2) any complaint as to any offence when the offender shall be unable to give bail for his appearance at petty sessions. Where the offender is unable to give bail, two justices are required (see also Summary Jurisdiction Act, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 92, s. 1). and they have no jurisdiction to make a summary conviction out of petty sessions, without first requiring the defendant to find bail for his appearance at next petty sessions (R. (Gallagher) v. Martin, (1874) I.R. 8 C.L. 556), and the fact that the defendant was unable to give bail should appear on the face of the conviction (R. (Connell) v. Dublin JJ., (1861) 13 I.C.L.R. 375).<sup>2</sup>

In the case of offences not punishable on indictment, a summons only can be issued in the first instance (s. 11 (2)). In every case where the offence shall have occurred or the cause of complaint shall have arisen within the petty sessions district for which the justice shall act, but the defendant shall reside in an adjoining county, the justice may compel the appearance of the defendant in like manner as if he resided within the county (s. 11). But justices of a county, within which an offence punishable on summary conviction is alleged to have been committed, have no power to issue a summons for service on a defendant who is outside the county and not within an adjoining county (G. S. & W. R. Co. v. Leyden, (1907) 2 I.R. 160). A single justice may receive an information or complaint (s. 10), and may, of course, receive it and issue his summons thereon out of Petty Sessions, unless in the rare cases where the statute (e.g. recovery of tenements under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 154, s. 85) expressly requires that the complaint shall be made at petty sessions. The summons shall be signed by the justice or one of the justices issuing the same, shall state shortly the cause of complaint, and shall not be signed in blank (s. 11). Though there are no express words in the Irish statute giving a justice a discretion as to issuing a summons, yet it is submitted that a justice has a discretion just as much as in England, where the words of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1849, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 9, are that the justices are to issue a summons "if they shall think fit." But the justices must consider the case upon its merits, apart from extraneous considerations, and must exercise their discretion reasonably (see R. v. Adamson, (1876) 1 Q.B.D. 201; R. v. Byrde, (1890) 63 L.T. 645; Ex parte MacMahon, (1883) 48 J.P. 70; Ex parte Reid, (1885) 49 J.P. 600; R. v. Gravesend JJ., (1891) 55 J.P. 277; R. v. Botvler, (1884) 33 L.J.M.C. 101; R. v. Bros, (1901) 18 T.L.R. 39; R. v. Kennedy, (1902) 86 L.T. 753; R. v. Bennett, (1908) 24 T.L.R. 681). It has been held in England, on the construction of 11 & 12 Vict. s. 1, that the summons must be signed by a justice to whom the complaint has been made (Dixon v. Wells, (1890) 25 Q.B.D. 249). The point was raised, but not decided, in R. (Murphy) v. Wexford JJ., (1892) 27 L.L.T.R. 126: but there seems to be no difference material to this question between the English and Irish sections; and by circular dated November, 1893, justices were directed to hear complaints before signing a summons. It is not necessary that the justice issuing the summons shall be one of the justices by whom the case shall be afterwards determined (s. 11 (2)). The information or complaint may be either with or without oath, and either in writing or not, according as the justice shall see fit (s. 10 (1)). If the information is in writing, the defendant is entitled to a copy of it on payment of a fee of sixpence to the Petty Sessions Clerk (s. 10). Every summons, whether to a defendant or a witness, must be stamped (21 & 22 Vict. c. 100, s. 14), but need not be sealed (Petty Sessions Act, s. 36).

The summons may contain any number of charges (see p. 87); as to the statement of the offence in the summons and conviction, see p. 84; as to powers of amendment, see p. 93.

Non-appearance of defendant.

If the defendant shall not appear, two courses are open—(a) in all cases of summary jurisdiction, civil or criminal, wherever the defendant or his agent shall not appear, if it shall be proved that the summons was served a reasonable time<sup>1</sup> before the time appointed for the hearing, the justices may hear and adjudicate on the complaint in the absence of defendant (s. 20); (b) in the case of offences,<sup>2</sup> if the defendant shall not appear, if it shall be proved that he was personally served, or is keeping out of the way of such service, the complaint being in writing and on oath, the justices may issue a warrant for his arrest, and when the defendant is brought before them may either commit him pending the hearing, or discharge him, having taken his recognizance with or without sureties to appear (s. 11 (2)), and may bind over the complainant to prosecute (s. 10 (3)). The word "agent" includes the father, son, husband, wife, or brother of the party; provided that any such person be thereunto authorized in writing by the party, and receive no remuneration therefor, and have the leave of the court to appear and be heard, and that the court is satisfied that such complainant or defendant is from infirmity or other unavoidable cause unable to appear (45 & 46 Vict. c. 24, s. 1).

Enforcing
appearance.
Non-appearance of defendant.

On the construction of the English statute,<sup>1</sup> it has been held that there is no obligation on the defendant to appear personally, and if he appears by counsel or solicitor, the justices have no jurisdiction to issue a warrant to compel his personal appearance (Bessell v. Wilson, (1853) 1 E. & B. 489; R. v. Thompson, (1909) 2 K.B. 614; R. v. Montgomery, (1910) 26 T.L.R. 225). Sections 9 and 10 of the Irish Petty Sessions Act seem to contemplate an appearance either personally "or by counsel or attorney," and, on the whole, where the defendant or his "agent," as above defined, does not appear, but he is represented by counsel or solicitor, it would be unsafe to grant a warrant in case of a summary offence, to enforce his appearance.

The court will set aside a conviction where the non-appearance of the defendant arose by reason of an arrangement to that effect between the parties (R. (Brown) v. Londonderry JJ., (1900) 6 I.W.L.R. 134), or through a misunderstanding, caused by negotiations between the plaintiff and the defendant (R. (Lowry) v. Antrim JJ., (1901) 2 N.I.J. 6; see also R. v. Hendry, (1909) 25 T.L.R. 635).

If the case has been determined in the absence of the defendant, who subsequently appears before the bench has separated, and before the order book has been signed, it is submitted that the justices have a discretion to re-open the matter if the complainant be also present (see R. v. Robson, (1893) 57 J.P. 133).

Where several persons join in the commission of an indictable offence, all or any number of them may be jointly indicted for it, or each of them may be indicted separately (Archbold's Pleading and Evidence in Criminal Cases, 24th ed., p. 80). The same rule applies to summary proceedings (Morgan v. Brown, (1836) 4 A. & E. 515). Thus, persons may be jointly charged with an assault (In re Stipendiary Magistrate at Brighton, (1893) 9 T.L.R. 522), or with trespassing in pursuit of game (R. v. Littlechild, (1871) L.R. 6 Q.B. 293); and if they are so charged, they cannot, as of right, claim that the cases shall be tried separately, so that each may be a competent witness for the other, the matter being one for the discretion of the justices (R. v. Littlechild, supra); and a separate conviction may (ib.) and apparently should (Morgan v. Brown, supra) be drawn up against each, awarding separate penalties to be paid by each. An application to be tried separately should be granted if the defence is likely to be prejudiced by a joint trial (R. v. Dibble, (1908) 1 Cr. App. R. 155). Where partners commit a joint offence, each is liable to the penalties imposed by statute (R. v. Dean, (1843) 12 M. & W. 39). Where several persons join in an offence and do injury to the complainant, each of the offenders may be amerced in the amount of the injury, though only one sum will be paid as amends to the complainant, the other sums being applicable as penalties awarded to the Crown (Petty Sessions Act, s. 22 (7)).

Joint offence.

<sup>1</sup> Section 2 of the English Act, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, provides that if the defendant shall not appear and upon proof of service, the justices may issue their warrant. Section 13 gives the same power or the alternative of proceeding ex parte, and also provides that if both parties appear either personally or by their respective counsel or attorney, then the said justice or justices shall proceed to hear and determine the case. Section 12 provides that the party against whom any complaint or information is made shall be admitted to make his full answer and defence thereto, and to have the witnesses examined and cross-examined by counsel or attorney on his behalf.

Enforcing
appearance.
summons.

The procedure as to service of a summons is regulated by section 12. The summons may be served, in constabulary prosecutions, by any constable. A prosecution under the Food and Drugs Act, at the instance of a constable who is a duly appointed inspector under that statute, is not a constabulary prosecution (Hannam v. Morrissey, (1906) 40 I.L.T.R. 222). Such a prosecution is a county prosecution, as it is at the expense of the local authority, and the penalty will go to such authority (per Palles, C.B., in R. (Lawlor) v. King's Co. JJ., (1907) 41 I.L.T.R. 77). But where a constable prosecutes as a common informer, that is a constabulary prosecution, and so a prosecution under the Weights and Measures Act, 1878, by a constable who has been appointed inspector of weights and measures, is a constabulary prosecution (ib.). In all other cases the summons may be served by the summons-server of the district, or, if the justice issuing the same shall so direct or permit, by any other person whom the complainant shall employ, and who shall be able to read and write, but in no case by the complainant himself. The justices may appoint some one or more persons, able to read and write, to act as summons-servers. The summons may be served by delivering a copy to the defendant, or, if he cannot be conveniently met with, by leaving such copy for him at his last or most usual place of abode, or at his office, warehouse, counting-house, shop, factory, or place of business, with an inmate not being under sixteen years old, a reasonable time before the hearing of the complaint, and such service shall be deemed sufficient service of such summons in every case except where personal service shall be specially required by the Act. Nothing in the section shall affect the provisions of any Act authorizing the substitution of service in particular cases. The section would seem to dispense with the necessity for personal service imposed by any earlier statute, but it is submitted that in case of a later statute, the mode of service prescribed by such later statute must be followed; for instance, under the Food and Drugs Act, 1899, fourteen days must elapse between the date of service and the hearing (per Queen v. Jackson, (1903) 2 K.B. 163). It is not good service to leave the summons at the defendant's last place of abode, unless he cannot be conveniently met with (R. (Cinnamon) v. Belfast JJ., (1909) 43 I.L.T.R. 187; see also Blue v. Fullerton, (1876) I.R. 10 C.L. 233). "The expression 'last place of abode' does not necessarily mean the place where the person is living at the time; but in order that a place may be properly described as his last place of abode, he must not have some other present abode, for that would make the former his last place of abode but one" (per Kay, L.J., in R. v. Farmer, (1892) 1 Q.B. 637, at p. 640). If a person leaves the country under such circumstances as justify the inference that he has not really abandoned his home, then such home still remains his "last place of abode" (ib.; R. v. Evans, (1850) 19 L.J.M.C. 151; R. v. Webb, (1896) 1 Q.B. 487; cf. R. (Regan) v. Cork JJ., (1911) 45 I.L.T.R. 7). It has been held that service at a shop of the defendants, a limited company, not being the registered address of the company, is not good service, and that service must be effected under section 62 of the Companies Act, 1862 (now replaced by section 116 of the Companies Consolidation Act, 1908), by leaving the summons at or sending same to the registered address (Pearks v. Richardson, (1902) 1 K.B. 91).

As to when a company may be made amenable, see p. 83. A notice of default, posted in an open envelope, stamped with a halfpenny stamp, and addressed to the last known place of business of an industrial assurance company, and which was returned marked "not known," was held well served under the Collecting Societies and Industrial Assurance Companies Act, 1896, 59 & 60 Vict. c. 26, s. 16 (Morgan v. McClure, (1898) 4 I.W.L.R. 199).<sup>1</sup>

appearance.
summons.

Section 12 provides that the summons shall be served a reasonable time before the hearing of the complaint.<sup>2</sup> The defendant, a fisherman, went to sea on the 9th March; a summons was left for him at his residence on the 10th March, requiring him to attend at petty sessions on the 12th March, at which proof was given that the summons was left as aforesaid, and defendant was convicted and sentenced to a term of imprisonment. The defendant did not return till the 9th April, when he was arrested and imprisoned. It was held that there was no evidence that the summons had been served in reasonable time, and that the conviction should be quashed (R. v. Smith, (1875) L.R. 10 Q.B. 604); and the justices were subsequently held liable in an action for false imprisonment (Smith v. Ewen, (1875) 39 J.P. 724). A summons was served at eight in the morning, requiring the defendant to appear at petty sessions, eight miles distant, on the following day. The defendant was not at home when the summons was served, and did not return till eleven o'clock that night: held, that the summons was served within a reasonable time (Ex parte Williams, (1851) 21 L.J.M.C. 46). The justices are the judges whether the summons was served a reasonable time before the hearing (ib.). A summons was left at defendant's house in Cambridge on the 6th September (Saturday), requiring him to appear on the 10th. The defendant had gone to Jersey, and the summons was sent by post, and reached him in Jersey on the morning of the 10th, when he telegraphed an explanation to the justices, and his foreman applied for an adjournment. The justices having convicted, a certiorari was refused, as the justices were satisfied that there was a reasonable time to instruct a solicitor if so inclined (R. v. Cambridgeshire J.J., (1880) 44 J.P. 168). This decision, however, seems hardly consistent with R. v. Smith (supra); and it is difficult to see how the defendant, under the circumstances, could have instructed a solicitor as to the merits of the case. On April 30th a constable told C., a chauffeur, that he would be summoned for driving a motor car contrary to the Motor Car Act, 1903, on that date. On May 2nd C. left his lodgings at Newtown, taking his motor car to Coventry on his master's business. Before leaving he told his landlady to take in the summons if it came for him. On May 4th the summons, returnable for May 7th, was left with his landlady, and on May 7th he was convicted in his absence and without his knowledge. On May 9th he returned to Newtown. It appeared that the justices were under the impression that the summons had actually reached C. It was held that his conviction should be quashed, apparently on the ground that if the justices had known that the summons had not reached C., they would probably have concluded that a reasonable time had not elapsed (R. v. Anwyl, (1909) 73 J.P. 485).<sup>1</sup> A defendant applied for an adjournment on the ground that the summons had been served on him only the day before. There were circumstances in the case which warranted the justices in believing that the application was frivolous, and they refused the application: held, that the Court would not interfere with the justices' discretion (R. (Cross) v. Tyrone JJ., (1908) 42 I.L.T.R. 112). A summons was served on X while being conveyed to prison, and the matter came on for hearing while he was still in prison, and he was convicted. The affidavits contained the statement that the defendant's wife attended and asked for an adjournment, but this was denied. The conviction was quashed (R. (Crumley) v. Cavan JJ., (1898) 4 I.W.L.R. 215). On a case stated by justices the Court adjudged that the justices were wrong in dismissing the complaint, and remitted the case to the justices with a direction to convict. Thereupon the complainant served the order on both justices and defendant, and served notice upon the defendant that an application would, on a particular day, be made to the justices to rehear the complaint: held, that such services were sufficient to bring the defendant again before the justices, and that a conviction following thereon was good (R. (Hastings) v. Galway JJ., (1907) 2 I.R. 18).

irregularity

A defendant, by appearing, may waive any irregularity in the service of a summons or the want of one (R. v. Stone, (1801) 1 East 639). But where a solicitor appeared on behalf of a limited company to raise a point as to service, and then took no further part in the proceedings, this was held not to be a waiver (Pearks v. Richardson, (1902) 1 K.B. 91). In R. v. Galway JJ., (1879) 6 L.R.I. 1, it was held that the defendant waived an irregularity in a complaint brought by "The Queen at the prosecution of the Royal Irish Constabulary" v. M. It is submitted that, to make a point successfully as to service, the defendant should not take any part in the proceedings beyond objecting to the service. It is a contradiction in terms to say he objects to the service and yet to take part in the discussion of the merits (see Palmer v. Balrothery Guardians, (1895) 2 I.R. 586, cf. Dixon v. Wells, (1890) 25 Q.B.D. 249, p. 96, post). For further cases as to waiver of irregularity, see R. (Sherlock) v. Cork JJ., (1908) 42 I.L.T.R. 247, noted under PUBLIC HEALTH ACTS and cases noted, p. 109, post. As to power to amend, see p. 93.

Express statutory provisions
as to service.

Express provisions as to service are contained in various statutes, e.g., the Friendly Societies Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 25, s. 94 (4)); the statutes conferring jurisdiction to order the recovery of small tenements (14 & 15 Vict. c. 92, s. 15 (2); 23 & 24 Vict. c. 154, s. 87).

Withdrawal of charge; death of complainant.

When a complaint has been made and a summons issued, the justices are seised of the complaint, and have jurisdiction to proceed therein, even though the prosecutor wishes to drop the proceedings (R. v. Wiltshire JJ., (1863) 8 L.T.N.S. 242; per Andrews, J., in R. (Forbes) v. Louth JJ., (1904) 38 I.L.T.R. 76). In R. v. Truelove, (1880) 5 Q.B.D. 336, a complaint having been duly made under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 83, that obscene books were kept by the defendant in his shop for sale, a warrant for the seizure of such books was issued, and after they had been seized the defendant was summoned to show cause why they should not be destroyed. Upon the hearing of the summons an order was made for the destruction of the books. After the issuing of the summons, but before the hearing, the complainant died, and no application to substitute another complainant was made: held, that the proceedings against defendant did not lapse upon the death of the complainant, and that the order was valid. It may here be noted that an agreement to compromise a felony is not alone void, but is itself an indictable offence (Russell, 7th ed., 579). As to misdemeanours, the law permits the compromise of offences, although made the subject of criminal prosecution, for which the injured party might sue and recover damages in an action (Keir v. Leeman, (1844) 6 Q.B. 308, 9 Q.B. 371), e.g., the infringement of a trade mark (Fisher v. Apollinaris Co., (1875) L.R. 10 Ch. 297). But where the matter is one of public concern, an agreement to compromise a misdemeanour is not alone void (Windhill Local Board v. Vint, (1890) 45 C.D. 351), but is probably an indictable offence (see dictum of Palles, C. B., in Dillon v. O'Brien, (1887) 20 L.R.I. 317; Russell, 7th ed., 580).

Where a party, either complainant or defendant, is before the court, and the circumstances warrant it, the justices may bind him to the peace, although no formal proceedings by way of information or otherwise have been instituted against him (see R. v. Wilkins, (1907) 2 K.B. 380, and other cases noted, p. 35).

Where a statute gives power to justices to order the forfeiture or destruction of property, this should only be done on notice, by summons, to the party interested (Ex parte Francis, (1903) 1 K.B. 275; Gill v. Bright, (1871) 41 L.J.M.C. 22), the only exceptions to the rule, such as the destruction of unsound food (White v. Redfern, (1879) 5 Q.B.D. 15; Thomas v. Van Os, (1900) 2 Q.B. 448), being based on the paramount necessity in the public interest of an immediate order (Lord Alverstone, C.J., in Ex parte Francis, supra).

Orders for forfeiture or destruction of property.

Section 10(4) enacts a time limit<sup>1</sup> in respect of the bringing of the complaint, as follows:—Non-payment of poor rate, county rate, or other public tax, at any time after the date of the warrant authorizing the collection of same; non-payment of wages, hire, or tuition, within one year from the termination of the term or period in respect of which same is payable; trespass, two months; in other cases of summary jurisdiction, six months. The day on which the offence is committed is not reckoned (Rudcliffe v. Bartholomew, (1892) 1 Q.B. 161). But this limit will not apply where a later particular statute, e.g. the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899 (which by s. 19 provides that proceedings shall not be instituted in respect of any article purchased for test purposes after the expiration of twenty-eight days from the time of purchase) enacts a different limit. Where the offence is a continuing offence, e.g. continuing a building contrary to the provisions of a statute (London County Council v. Worley, (1894) 2 Q.B. 826), or keeping a brothel (Ex parte Burnby, (1901) 2 K.B. 458), or neglecting to make a free gap in a weir as required by the Fishery Acts (Westropp v. Commissioners of Public Works in Ireland, (1896) 2 I.R. 93), penalties may be recovered in respect of the period of six

Time limit for

months before the issue of the summons, though the act originally constituting the offence may have been committed before the beginning of such period. Where the justices imposed a conviction of so much per day, for a period exceeding six months, for acting contrary to a closing order obtained under the Public Health Act, it was held that the penalty could not be segregated, and that the conviction should be quashed (R. v. Slade, (1895) 2 Q.B. 247). Where a three months' notice is necessary to found the complaint, the time runs from the expiration of the notice (Jacomb v. Dodgson, (1863) 3 B. & S. 461). On a charge of conspiracy under the Criminal Law and Procedure (Ireland) Act, 1887, there was evidence of the continuance of the conspiracy to a date within six months from the inception of the proceedings, but no evidence of any overt act by the defendants within that time; held, that the proceedings were in time (Ex parte O'Brien Dalton, (1890) 28 L.R.1. 36).

The section enacts that the "complaint shall be made . . . within six months from the time when the cause of complaint shall have arisen," so that if the complaint is made within six months, the proceedings will be in time even though the adjudication does not take place until after the expiration of the six months.<sup>1</sup>

The Dublin Police Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 24, s. 70, provides that an offence may be heard and determined within six months from the commission of the offence; and under that statute, there is no jurisdiction to determine the matter after the period of six months has expired, even though the complaint was made within the six months, and the expiry of that period has been due to adjournments with the consent of the parties (see R. v. Tolley, (1803) 3 East 467, R. v. Bellamy, (1823) 1 B. & C. 500).

Computation
of time.

The general rule for computing periods of time is that where a statute or instrument fixes a period, the day from or after which the time is fixed is excluded from the period, and the day on which the act is to be done, or "until" which some act is prohibited, is included therein. For instance, where a complaint is to be made within a month from the commission of the offence, the date of the offence is to be excluded (Radclyffe v. Bartholomew, (1892) 1 Q.B. 161). The case of imprisonment is, however, an exception, for the day when the imprisonment commences is counted, and is reckoned as a whole day, though the prisoner was taken late in the day (Migotti v. Colville, (1879) 4 C.P.D. 233), so that the term of a prisoner sentenced and imprisoned on the 2nd January, to twelve months' imprisonment, would expire at midnight on the 1st January of the following year, unless the statute otherwise provides. Sunday is counted even where it is the last day for doing an act, for instance, it is counted in the three days within which the notice necessary to have a case stated must be served (Peacock v. R., (1858) 4 C.B.N.S. 264; see also Ex parte Simpkin, (1859) 2 E. & E. 392; R. v. Middlesex JJ., (1843) 7 Jur. 396).<sup>2</sup> In every Act passed after the year 1850, the expression "month" shall, unless the contrary intention appears, mean calendar month (Interpretation Act, 1889, 52 & 53 Vict. c. 63, s. 3). Prior to 1850, the word "month," without the addition of "calendar," meant a lunar month of twenty-eight days (Franco v. Alvares, (1746) 3 Atk. 346). In the case of imprisonment of a month or several months, if there is no day in the month corresponding to the day from which the sentence is to run, the sentence expires on the last day of the month. Whenever any expression of time occurs in any Act of Parliament, deed, or other legal instrument, the time referred to shall, unless it is otherwise specifically stated, be held to be Dublin mean time (Statutes (Definition of Time) Act, 1880, 43 & 44 Vict. c. 9).

of time.

A witness within the jurisdiction of the justice may be summoned to appear and to produce documents; should he neglect or refuse, the information or complaint being in writing and on oath, and on proof of personal service, or that the witness is evading service, and that he is able to give material evidence, the justice may issue a warrant to arrest him and to bring him and such documents before him (Petty Sessions Act, s. 13). A justice before whom criminal proceedings are pending is a "court" within the definition of that expression in section 10 of the Bankers' Book Evidence Act, 1879, and can, therefore, make an order under section 7 of that Act, on the application of one of the parties to such proceedings, that such party be at liberty to inspect and take copies of entries in a banker's book for the purposes of the proceedings (R. v. Kinghorn, (1908) 2 K.B. 949). There seems no power to issue a summons or warrant directed to a witness outside the justice's county. The words "or witness" in section 11 seem to have been inserted by a clerical error; and at all events their inclusion confers no power to issue the summons or warrant. A summons may be taken out in the Crown Office for a witness who is outside the justice's jurisdiction.<sup>1</sup> The King's Bench Division has jurisdiction to set aside a subpoena issued in a criminal proceeding, where it has been issued not bona fide, and not for the purpose of obtaining relevant evidence (R. v. Baines, (1909) 1 K.B. 258). By 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 2, either party in a civil matter is a competent and compellable witness. In criminal cases the law still is in Ireland that the defendant or the wife or husband of defendant is not a competent witness unless where the statute so provides (as to what is a criminal matter, see p. 65). Provisions enabling a defendant, or the wife or husband of a defendant, to give evidence are contained in the Licensing Act, 1872 (s. 51); Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (s. 21); Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (s. 11); Army Act, 1881, s. 156 (3); Explosives Act, 1883 (s. 4); Corrupt and Illegal Practices Act, 1883 (s. 53); Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (s. 20); Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (s. 10); Motor Car Act, 1903 (s. 19). The defendant is a competent witness in prosecutions under the Diseases of Animals Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 57, s. 57 (3)).<sup>2</sup>

Witnesses.

In all cases of personal injuries committed by the husband or wife against each other, the injured party is an admissible witness (East P.C. 455; see also Married Women's Property Act, 1884, 47 & 48 Vict. c. 14, s. 1). A person who is jointly charged with others in criminal cases is not a competent witness on behalf of the other defendants (R. v. Payne, (1872) L.R. 1 C.C.R., 349); nor is the wife of one of such defendants a competent witness for the others (R. v. Thompson, (1872) L.R. 1 C.C.R. 377). All witnesses shall be examined either on oath (Petty Sessions Act, s. 13), or by affirmation, in the cases mentioned in the Oaths Act, 1888, 51 & 52 Vict. c. 46.<sup>1</sup> If a person appears as a witness in obedience either to a summons or warrant, or shall be present and verbally required by the justices to give evidence, and he shall refuse, without just cause, to give evidence or to produce documents, the hearing may be adjourned for a period not exceeding eight clear days, and the witness may be committed to prison; and if he again refuses, there may be another adjournment and another committal, and so on, provided that a witness cannot be imprisoned for more than a month in all (s. 13). A witness cannot be compelled to give any evidence which would subject him to any punishment, penalty, or forfeiture (Redfern v. Redfern, (1891) Prob. 139, U. S. of America v. McRae, (1867) L.R. 3 Ch. 79). The claim to privilege must be stated upon oath (Webb v. East, (1880) 5 Ex. D. 108). A merely remote and naked possibility of legal peril to a witness from answering a question, does not entitle him to the privilege; it is for the judge to say whether the privilege is warranted by the circumstances (R. v. Boyes, (1861) 1 B. and S. 311), and unless the judge is satisfied that the answer will tend to put the witness in peril, he should compel the witness to answer (Ex parte Reynolds, (1882) 20 C.D. 294). On the hearing of a charge against a spirit grocer for selling spirits for consumption on the highway adjoining his premises, contrary to section 5 of the Licensing Act, 1872, the prosecutor called the purchaser of the spirits as a witness. She refused to give evidence, on the ground that so doing would tend to incriminate herself, and persisted in her refusal owing to the intervention of the defendant's solicitor. Having been committed, a writ of certiorari was refused, apparently upon two grounds, (1) that the refusal was not bona fide; and (2) that her answering would not have exposed her to a criminal charge (R. (Atkinson) v. Armagh J.J., (1883) 18 I.L.T.R. 2).<sup>2</sup>

Witnesses.

As to what evidence is admissible and compellable, see further Chapter on EVIDENCE, p. 258. In cases of summary jurisdiction the justices by whom any order for payment of money not being in the nature of a penalty for an offence shall be made, may order the party at whose instance a witness has been summoned to pay to the witness a sum not exceeding two shillings and sixpence for each day of attendance, and in default to issue a warrant for the levying of same by distress (s. 13).

Number of
necessary.

To determine whether the complaint can be determined by one justice, regard must be had to the particular statute under which the complaint is brought. Unless the particular statute otherwise enacts, one justice may hear and determine matters of summary jurisdiction at petty sessions (see s. 10, which gives one justice power to receive an information or complaint, and to proceed in respect of the same). Further, it is expressly provided that all proceedings under the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 92, may be determined by one or more justices at petty sessions (14 & 15 Vict. c. 92, s. 1). These proceedings are concerned with:—stealing by juvenile offenders, certain frauds as to provisions, trespass, injuries to public roads, nuisances on public roads, certain offences as to public stage carriages, carts and cars, road offences, possession of small tenements, disputes between master and servant, or in fairs and markets. By the Summary Jurisdiction (Ir.) Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 50, s. 2), it is provided that every offence punishable summarily under that Act,<sup>1</sup> or under the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), or under the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), the Coinage Offences Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 99), or the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict., c. 100), may be prosecuted before any one justice in petty sessions. Any one justice out of petty sessions may determine cases of simple drunkenness, vagrancy, fraud in the sale of goods, or disputes as to sales in fairs and markets (Petty Sessions Act, s. 8).

But many statutes provide that two justices are necessary: for instance, the Licensing Acts (Licensing Act, 1872, s. 5 (1)), for the purposes of which section a resident magistrate sitting alone is not a stipendiary magistrate (R. (Jackson v. Tipperary J.J., (1894) 28 I.L.T.R. 107); the Criminal Law and Procedure (Ir.) Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict., c. 20), under which two resident magistrates are necessary, one of them to be a person of the sufficiency of whose legal knowledge the Lord Lieutenant shall be satisfied; the Public Health (Ir.) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 52, s. 249), an order made under s. 112 of which Act must be signed by at least two justices (Wing v. Epsom U.D.C.,<sup>2</sup> (1904) 1 K.B. 798); and the Landlord and Tenant Law Amendment (Ir.) Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 154), s. 86. The Dublin Police Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 24, s. 47, enables a divisional justice to act alone, even though the statute requires the act to be done by two justices.<sup>3</sup>

With regard to matters other than a conviction or adjudication on a complaint, the Petty Sessions Act, s. 8, provides that nothing in the Act shall prevent any justice or justices acting out of petty sessions from making any order which a justice or justices may be authorized or required by law to make; this section applies, for instance, to orders to enter a quarry for the purpose of obtaining road material.

With the exception of the cases in which there is express power to hear out of sessions,<sup>4</sup> the hearing of matters of summary jurisdiction shall take place in the public courthouse, or, if there is none, or it is inconvenient to the public, in a public justice room to be provided<sup>5</sup> (s. 8). A conviction was made by two justices sitting in the petty sessions courthouse on a day specially fixed by themselves, but which was not one of the days upon which the petty sessions of the district were usually held; held, that they were acting out of sessions and that their order was void (R. (Gallagher) v. Martin, (1874) I.R. 8 C.L. 556). Justices sitting in the dayroom of a police barrack on an occasion fixed by themselves are not sitting in petty sessions or a court of summary jurisdiction (Quinn v. Pratt, (1908) 2 I.R. 69.) The place of hearing is an open court to which the public generally may have access so far as the same can conveniently contain them (s. 9).

hearing.

But the justices have full power to order the removal of any persons causing a disturbance (R. v. Currick-on-Suir J.J., (1889) 16 Cox 571). Probably also, the justices have inherent power to order the removal of women and children in cases requiring evidence of acts of indecent character; and now, by section 115 of the Children Act, 1908, children (that is, persons under fourteen—s. 131), save infants in arms, are not permitted to be present during the hearing of any charge, unless their presence is required for the purposes of justice; and where a child or young person (that is, between fourteen and sixteen, s. 131) is called to testify to any proceedings contrary to decency, the Court may order the court to be cleared of all persons during the hearing of such evidence, excepting the press and persons connected with the case (s. 114).

The hearing.
Generally.

If a statute prescribes that the defendant shall have the right, if he so chooses, to have his case tried before a jury, and that he shall be informed of such right before the charge is gone into, the omission so to inform him will invalidate the conviction, even though the defendant pleads guilty (R. v. Corkshott, (1898) 1 Q.B. 582; R. v. Beesby, (1909) 1 K.B. 849). Sections 9, 13, and 20 of the Petty Sessions Act regulate the procedure on the hearing. All witnesses must be examined on oath (s. 13 (4)). A justice cannot convict or commit on evidence not taken before himself (In re Guerin, (1888) 16 Cox. 596; Cuddey v. Seymour, (1841) 1 Q.B. 889; R. v. Watts, (1863) 33 L.J.M.C. 63; Goodall v. Bilisland, (1909) S.C. 1152). If a justice enters late and wishes to adjudicate, the witness should be resworn and give his evidence over again; it is not sufficient that the evidence already given should be read over to such justice: this, however, is only an irregularity which may be waived by the parties (R. v. Jeffreys, (1870) 22 L.T. 786). During the hearing of an indictable offence depositions were taken before a justice who fell ill, and the proceedings had to be commenced before another justice. At the commencement of the rehearing, counsel for the prosecution proposed to recall some of the witnesses who had made depositions, to reswear them, to read to them their depositions, directing them to correct the evidence if and where it was inaccurate, to ask them any additional questions that might be thought advisable, then to tender these witnesses for cross-examination with liberty for the prosecution to re-examine them where necessary, and then to proceed with the oral examination of those witnesses whom the prosecution intended to call but had not called on the first hearing: Held, that there was nothing illegal in the course proposed, and that to accede to the proposal, if he thought it expedient in the interest of justice to do so, was within the discretion of the justice with which the court would not interfere (Ex parte Bottomley, (1909) 2 K.B. 14).<sup>1</sup> The parties are entitled to make their cases respectively, and to have the witnesses examined and cross-examined by themselves or by counsel or attorney on their behalf (s. 9). An inspector of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, who has preferred a charge in his own name as complainant, is entitled to examine and cross-examine the witnesses (Duncan v. Toms, (1887) 16 Cox. 267).<sup>2</sup> The right to cross-examine is an absolute right (R. v. Griffiths, (1887) 16 Cox. 46). By section 20, if the defendant does not admit the charge, the justices shall hear the evidence on behalf of the complainant and the defendant respectively, and also such evidence as the complainant may adduce in reply if the defendant shall have given any evidence other than as to his general character. If the defendant at the close of the complainant's case objects that the case has failed for want of necessary formal proof, the justices may, and apparently should, allow the omission to be rectified (per Cave, J., in Hargreaves v. Hilliam, (1894) 58 J.P. 655). Where a solicitor, without any authority from the defendant, but acting on instructions from the defendant's father, pleaded guilty, the conviction was held bad (R. v. Aves, (1871) 24 L.T.N.S. 64. The complainant or his agent (as to the meaning of which see p. 46, ante) shall have no right to make observations in reply upon the defendant's case, nor shall the defendant or his agent have the right to make any observations upon the plaintiff's case in reply (s. 20). If the defendant has examined witnesses, or given any evidence other than as to his general character, the prosecutor may examine witnesses in reply (Petty Sessions Act, 1881, s. 20, (1)). The burden of proving any exemption, proviso, or exception is cast upon the defendant (Petty Sessions Act, s. 20). As to the necessity of negating exemptions in the summons or conviction see p. 89. The justices have, it is submitted, the right to call for and examine as a witness anyone who is in court (see Petty Sessions Act, s. 13 (5)).

<sup>1</sup> This was an indictable offence, in which the duty of the justice was merely to see if a prima facie case was made out; and, the procedure is certainly not to be followed in summary cases, which are finally disposable by the justices.

If the defendant or his agent shall not appear, and it shall appear to the justices on oath that the summons was duly served a reasonable time before the hearing, the justices may proceed ex parte or may adjourn (s. 20 (2)). As to power to compel defendant's appearance by warrant, see p. 46, ante. But where the non-appearance of the defendants was caused by negotiations, in the course of which an impression was conveyed to the defendants that the case would not be proceeded with, the conviction was set aside (R. (Loury) v. Antrim J.J., (1901) 2 N.I.J. 6; see also R. (Brown) v. Londonderry J.J., (1900) 6 i.W.L.R. 134). See also, R. v. Robson, 57 J.P. 133, noted p. 47.

If the defendant or his agent shall appear, but the complainant do not appear by himself or his agent, the justices may dismiss the complaint or may adjourn the hearing (s. 20 (3)).<sup>1</sup> This section, unlike section 21, dealing with a determination after a hearing, does not expressly specify whether the order made in the case of non-appearance by the complainant should be "dismissed on the merits" or "dismissed without prejudice," or "dismissed" simply.<sup>2</sup> It would be a hardship on a defendant to be again brought before the justices upon the same charge which he had already appeared to meet, and this would be the result if "dismissed without prejudice" were held to be the proper order. The English statutes give no assistance on the point, as they contemplate only one order of dismissal, namely "dismissed" simply; but it has been held that if the complainant offers no evidence in support of the charge, it should be dismissed (Tunncliffe v. Tedd,<sup>3</sup> (1848) 5 C.B. 553;

<sup>2</sup> In the county court, under the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 57, s. 111, if the plaintiff in a civil bill shall not proceed with the same, or shall fail to establish his case, the county court judge can dismiss the civil bill either without prejudice or on the merits, as he shall think just.

Vaughton v. Bradshaw, (1860) 9 C.B.N.S. 103). Tunncliffe v. Tedd and Vaughton v. Bradshaw were cases of assault, and dealt with the construction of an old statute (9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 27) which provided that if the justices, upon the hearing of any case of assault, should deem the offence not to be proved, or should find the assault to have been justified, or so trifling as not to merit any punishment, and should accordingly dismiss the complaint, they should make out a certificate accordingly, which certificate (s. 28) would be a bar to any other proceedings, civil or criminal, for the same cause. That statute was repealed, and 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, was passed, which, by section 44, enabled a like certificate to be given "upon the hearing of any such case of assault or battery upon the merits." The prosecutor took out a summons for assault, but gave notice to the defendant that he would not attend, and did not attend or offer evidence: Held, that there had been no hearing upon the merits, and that the justices were wrong in having given such certificate (Reed v. Nutt (1890) 24 Q.B.D. 669). In R. v. Unkles, (1874) 1 R. 8 C.L. 50, R. took out a summons against U. alleging a charge of violation of the secrecy of the ballot, contrary to the Ballot Act, 1872. The summons came on for hearing on the 10th December, 1872, when the complainant did not appear, but the defendant appeared and the order made was "dismissed without prejudice." R. then took out a second summons against U. for the same offence, which came on for hearing on the 31st December, 1872, when complainant did not appear, but the defendant appeared, and an order was made as follows: "Complainant did not appear, defendant appeared in person and by counsel; complaint dismissed without prejudice." R. then took out a third summons against U. for the same offence: and same came on for hearing on the 10th April, 1873, when U. was convicted. The Queen's Bench, by a majority (Barry, Fitz Gerald, and O'Brien, J.J., Whiteside, C.J., dissenting), upheld the conviction. The judgments of the majority of the court are, however, it is submitted, by no means conclusive as to what order should be made in the case. It appears to have been conceded by the defendant's counsel (see judgment of Barry, J., at p. 52, and Fitz Gerald, J., at p. 54) that if the Petty Sessions Act applied (the main argument on defendant's behalf was that it did not apply), a "dismiss without prejudice" was the proper order, and would be no bar. Whiteside, C.J., however, did not accept the admission that a "dismiss without prejudice" was the proper order, and thought (see pp. 62, 63) that such form of order was applicable only where there had been a hearing within section 21, and that the proper order would have been "dismissed" simply, which order, in the Chief Justice's view, would have been a bar. As the grand jury, and the defendant appears to take his trial, although no evidence is offered by the prosecutor, that is still a hearing. So, here, the complaint having been lodged, and the defendant having appeared and pleaded, I do not see what right the complainant had to withdraw the charge." Maule, J., said.—"When the complaint is ripe for hearing, and the defendant is ready to take his trial, if the prosecutor alleges nothing against him, or merely something that is unsubstantial, then the magistrates are bound to find the charge not proved, and to give a certificate accordingly. In criminal proceedings the prosecutor, having once put the law into motion, cannot be allowed to withdraw." And Creswell, J., said:—"It appears to me there was a hearing in this case. As soon as the defendant appeared to the information and pleaded, there was an issue joined, which the magistrates were bound to hear and determine. The complainant being asked what he had to say, told the magistrates that he declined to go any further with the prosecution, as he meant to bring an action. The magistrates having heard all the man had to say dismissed the complaint. The defendant was clearly entitled to have the benefit of that state of things."

against this, the form of certificate (Form I) in the schedule to the Petty Sessions Act seems to contemplate either a "dismiss without prejudice," or a "dismiss on the merits." A possible alternative (for which Tunncliffe v. Tedd, and the express provisions of section 111 of the Civil Bill Courts (Ir.) Act, 1851, 14 & 15 Vict., c. 57, afford some support)<sup>1</sup> is that the terms "dismiss without prejudice," and "dismiss on the merits," are merely terms of art, the former implying that the case can be brought on again, the latter that it cannot, and that, in a case in which the complainant does not appear, the justices can, in their discretion, adopt either form of order. At all events, enough has been said to show that R. v. Unkles is not conclusive on the point.

The hearing.
Non-appearance of complainant.

Where a complaint has been made, and the summons thereon is not duly served, this does not prevent the same justice issuing another summons, or a series of summonses, if necessary, on the same complaint (Ex parte Fielding, (1861) 25 J.P. 759; Brooks v. Bagshawe, (1904) 2 K.B. 798).

When a summons has been issued, the justices are seised of the case, and they may convict on sufficient evidence, even though the prosecutor withdraws from the case (Ex parte Bryant, (1863) 27 J.P. 277), and apparently the proceedings do not lapse upon the death of the prosecutor (R. v. Truelove, (1880) 5 Q.B.D. 336). See also p. 50, ante.

Withdrawal or death of prosecutor.

In R. (Forbes) v. Louth JJ., (1903) 38 I.L.T.R. 76, the solicitors for the prosecutor and the defendant agreed to have a case adjourned, and wrote to that effect to the clerk of petty sessions and the justices. The justices, however, refused to adjourn, and, in the absence of both parties, dismissed the case without prejudice. Held, that the justices had power to make the order.

Non-appearance of either

In England the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49, s. 16) authorizes the justices, where a charge of a "trivial offence" is proved, if they think fit, to dismiss the information; but up to 1907 there was no corresponding Irish provision (save in cases of trifling assault, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, ss. 44, 45),<sup>2</sup> and accordingly the justices had no power to dismiss a mere trifling or technical offence (Carden v. McPharlane, K.B.D. (Ir.), 18 Nov., 1898; Pollock v. Cumberton, (1903) 3 N.I.J.R. 299; Dawson v. Mackay, (1904) 38 I.L.T.R. 163). Now, by the Probation of Offenders Act, 1907 (7 Ed. 7, c. 17),<sup>3</sup> where any person is charged before a court of summary jurisdiction with an offence punishable by such court, and the court thinks that the charge is proved, but is of opinion that, having regard to the character, antecedents, age, health, or mental condition of the person charged or to the trivial nature of the offence, or to the extenuating circumstances under which the offence was committed, it is inexpedient to inflict any punishment or any other than a nominal punishment, or that it is expedient to release the offender on probation, the court may, without proceeding to a conviction, make an order (1) dismissing the information or charge, or (2) discharging the offender conditionally on his entering into a recognizance, with or without sureties, to be of good behaviour and to appear for conviction and sentence when called on at any time during such period not exceeding three years as may be specified in the order (s. 1). In addition to any such order, the court may order the offender to pay damages not exceeding £10, or any higher limit fixed by any Act relating to the offence, and to pay such costs as the court thinks reasonable. The portion of the section enabling the court to order payment of damages and costs by the parent or guardian of a person under sixteen, has been repealed, and substituted provisions enacted by the Children Act, 1908, 8 Ed. 7, c. 67, s. 99 (see APPENDIX OF STATUTES). The court may order the restitution or delivery up of stolen property (s. 1 (4)). The statute contains provisions as to the conditions of recognizances, supervision by probation officers, and apprehension of an offender who fails to observe the condition of his recognizance. See APPENDIX OF STATUTES.

On the construction of the Summary Jurisdiction (England) Act, 1879, s. 16, it has been held that justices can dismiss a charge,<sup>1</sup> as being of a trivial nature, even though it is a second offence (Venters v. Freedman, (1901) 20 Cox 98); and that a charge under section 3 of the Licensing Act, 1872, of selling liquor without a licence is not (Barnard v. Barton, (1906) 1 K.B. 357), but that a charge against a licensed person of suffering gaming may be (Ex parte Marshall, (1907) 71 J.P. 501), an offence of a trifling nature.<sup>2</sup> A refusal to comply with a vaccination order is not an offence of a trifling nature (Nisbet v. Lloyd, (1904) 68 J.P. 396). On an information laid by the police against the respondent for placing a stall on the footway of a certain street contrary to the provisions of a local Act, it was proved that the stall projected over the footway about 16 inches; that in the same street there were other stalls projecting over the footpath, causing more obstruction than the respondent's stall, and that no proceedings had been instituted in respect of these other stalls. The justices dismissed the information under section 1 (1) of the Probation of Offenders Act, 1907, owing to the extenuating circumstances under which the offence was committed. Held, that there were extenuating circumstances, and the justices were therefore justified in dismissing the information (Dunning v. Trainer, (1909) 25 T.L.R. 658; for other cases, see p. 101).

Parties may require evidence to be taken in writing.

Ordering witness out of Court.

Either party or his agent may require a note of the evidence to be taken in writing, in a book to be kept for that purpose by the clerk of petty sessions, which book is to be signed by one of the justices on the day that the case is decided (Petty Sessions Act, s. 20 (4)).

Justices may, but cannot be obliged to, order witnesses out of court; but this power does not extend to the complainant or defendant (see Selge v. Isaacson, (1858) 1 F. and F. 194). If a witness ordered out of court has nevertheless contrived to remain in court, his evidence cannot be rejected (Cook v. Nethercote, (1835) 6 C. & P. 741; Roberts v. Garratt, (1842) 6 J.P. 154; Skelton v. Castle, (1837) 6 J.P. 154 n.; Chandler v. Horne, (1842) 2 M. and Rob. 423; but in Ex parte Wright, (1875) 39 J.P. 85, the Queen's Bench Division refused an application to compel justices to rehear a case based upon the ground that they had refused to hear witnesses who had not complied with an order to leave court.

ularity in
summons.

"The justices should not decline to proceed merely on the ground that the summons is irregular in form, or is open to objection on the ground of an alleged defect. They should hear the evidence, but when it has been given they must make up their minds whether an offence under the summons has been proved, and at that stage it is not placing too great a burden on the prosecutor to ask him to specify the offence which he alleges the evidence supports" (per Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., in Johnson v. Needham, (1909) 1 K B. 626). In that case the summons, contrary to the English Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, s. 10, alleged more than one offence in the same summons.

Whenever all the cases shall have not been heard on any court day, the justices may adjourn the remaining cases either to the next court day or such other day as they shall see fit; and whenever, either before or during the hearing of any complaint, it shall appear advisable, the justices present may, in their discretion, adjourn the hearing to a time and place to be then appointed; and summonses and recognizances enure for the adjourned hearing (s. 20).

If the justices adjourn and refuse to give their decision, there being no real reason for that course, the court will compel them by mandamus to adjudicate (R. (Mulliner) v. Cork JJ., (1905) 39 I.L.T.R. 117); and it is no good ground for adjournment in a complaint for assault that civil proceedings are pending in respect of the same matter (R. v. Evans, 1890) 54 J.P. 471; R. (Deeny) v. Tyrone JJ., (1909) 2 I.R. 400; 43 I.L.T.R. 72).<sup>1</sup> But in a prosecution for criminal libel it was held that the justices were acting within their jurisdiction in adjourning the case for three months, there being, in their opinion, a strong probability of settlement (R. v. Southampton JJ., (1907) 96 L.T. 697). Apart from the statute, the justices, like all other courts, have an inherent power of adjournment (R. v. Mayor of Clonmel, (1858) 9 I.C.L.R. 267; R. (Sullivan) v. Cork JJ., (1885) 18 L.R.I. 99; 19 I.L.T.R. 56). If the justices, without hearing the case, adjourn to a subsequent day, the complaint may be heard by a bench differently constituted, even if only one justice attend at the adjourned hearing<sup>2</sup> (R. (Sheehy) v. Kerry JJ., (1896) 30 I.L.T.R. 167). But if four justices fully hear a complaint and merely adjourn for the purpose of giving their decision, they must all be present and concur in such decision when pronounced (R. (Sullivan) v. Cork JJ., supra).

If no justice attend within one hour after the time appointed for opening the court, the clerk may adjourn all the cases to the next petty sessions day, in which case summonses and recognizances enure to such next day (Petty Sessions Clerk (Ir.) Act, 1858, 21 & 22 Vict. c. 100, s. 8). In cases of adjournment the justices may, in offence cases, either allow the defendant to go at large, or if there be an information in writing and on oath that he is guilty of the offence may commit him, or may discharge him upon his entering into recognizance, with or without sureties, to appear at the adjourned hearing (Petty Sessions Act, s. 20). The section puts no limit to the period of adjournment, so that, if a defendant be committed pending an adjourned hearing, he can, so far as the section is concerned, be imprisoned at all events till the next ordinary court day, which in some parts of the country may not be for a month. It is probable that the King's Bench Division, upon habeas corpus, would Adjournment.

Non-attendance of justices

Non-attend-

interfere in the event of any unreasonable exercise of discretion by the justices. In the case of charges of larceny triable summarily, the justices may remand the accused for further examination to the next petty sessions in the manner in which justices are authorized by the Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 14,<sup>1</sup> to remand persons charged with indictable offences (18 & 19 Vict. c. 126, s. 5). Where the statute requires the case to be heard by two justices, and only one justice attends, an adjournment may be directed, and when the justice directs the adjournment, which is carried out by the clerk, this will be considered to be the act of the clerk within 21 & 22 Vict. c. 100, s. 8 (Ex parte Mulcahy, (1898) 4 I.W.L.R. 186).

Justices
vided.

If the justices are equally divided in opinion, the proper course to adopt is to adjourn so that other justices may attend (Kinnis v. Graves, (1898) 67 L.J.Q.B. 583), and on the adjourned hearing the case should be heard de novo, by a bench which may comprise the justices who adjudicated on the previous occasion (Bagg v. Colquhoun, (1904) 1 K.B. 554). In an English case it was apparently laid down that when justices are equally divided and do not concur in adjourning, the proper course is to dismiss the complaint (R. v. Ashplant, (1888) 52 J.P. 474), and that such a dismissal will be a bar to a second information upon the same subject-matter (Kinnis v. Graves, (1898) 67 L.J.Q.B. 583). But it is submitted that no dismissal can be pronounced unless a majority of the justices concur (see R. (Crowley) v. Cork JJ., (1902) 2 I.R. 252, 1 N.I.J.R. 85; R. (Mulcahy) v. Tipperary JJ., (1903) 2 I.R. 108); and if a majority do not concur either in adjourning or dismissing, the proceedings fall to the ground; but there is nothing to prevent the prosecutor from bringing on the case by a fresh summons to be heard on another day. The chairman has no casting vote (R. v. Fladbury, (1841) 10 A. & E. 706); but in case of an equal division, one of the justices is at liberty, if he so chooses, to withdraw his opinion (Ex parte Evans, (1894) A.C. 16). If the chairman announces the result, without protest from the other justices, the King's Bench Division will not entertain an allegation that the decision was not the decision of the majority (Ex parte Attorney-General, (1877) 41 J.P. 118; R. v. Middlesex JJ., (1877) 41 J.P. 261; and see R. (Quinn) v. Tyrone JJ., (1908) 2 I.R. 124). A defendant has no absolute right to have a case adjourned to procure professional assistance, even though he has had no opportunity of procuring it, the matter being one within the discretion of the justices (R. v. Biggins, (1862) 5 L.T.N.S. 605).

The adjudication.
Order.

The justices, after hearing the parties, shall either make such order as is authorized by the statute, or shall dismiss the complaint either upon the merits or without prejudice to the complaint being again made (s. 21).<sup>2</sup> If an order be made "dismissed," without stating whether it is on the merits or without prejudice, it is invalid, and is no bar to subsequent criminal proceedings in respect of the same offence (R. (Bridges) v. Armagh JJ., (1897) 2 I.R. 236; G.S. & W.R. Co. v. Darby, (1892) 27 I.L.T.R. 45), or to civil proceedings (Donnelly v. Ingram, (1897) 31 I.L.T.R. 139). But where a statute, subsequent to 14 & 15 Vict. c. 93, gives power to justices, in a criminal matter (e.g. in a charge of larceny under 18 & 19 Vict., c. 126, s. 1), to "dismiss" the charge, the words "without prejudice," added to an order of dismissal, are superfluous, and a dismiss so framed is a bar to a second charge (G.S. & W.R. v. Gooding, (1908) 2 I.R. 429). By virtue of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 40, s. 6, the procedure under the Petty Sessions Act is applicable to a charge under the Illicit Distillation Act, 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 55, and therefore an order "dismiss without prejudice" is a valid order (Lawless v. Mc Aleer, (1897) 2 I.R. 248). The justices may also, if they see fit, and circumstances warranting it are proved, bind the defendant (Ex parte Davis, (1871) 35 J.P. 551, or even the complainant, to keep the peace (R. v. Wilkins, (1907) 2 K.B. 380). If neither party attend, the justices may dismiss the case without prejudice (R. (Forbes) v. Louth JJ., (1904) 38 I.L.T.R. 76; see ante, p. 59). A dismiss without prejudice is no bar to a second charge for the same offence (R. v. Unkles, (1873) I.R. 8 C.L. 50, 8 I.L.T.R. 38; R. v. Dublin JJ., (1873) 8 I.L.T.R. 134). In Pickavance v. Pickavance, (1901) P. 60, Sir Francis Jeune was of opinion that the withdrawal, without a hearing, of any summons operated in all cases as a res judicata; but the dictum was unnecessary for the decision, and, it is submitted, is too broad. As to when a conviction is a bar to a second charge on the same facts, see p. 102. On a charge of larceny, justices have no jurisdiction, under the Summary Jurisdiction (Ir.) Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 50), to make an order for the delivery up of the stolen goods; and, unless the property has come into the hands of the police, they have no such jurisdiction under the Police Property Act, 60 & 61 Vict. c. 30 (R. (Hannon) v. Londonderry JJ., (1910) 44 I.L.T.R. 135; see also Quinn v. Pratt, (1908) 2 I.R. 69, noted p. 146).

Order.

Particulars of the order shall be entered in the order-book kept for the purpose, and the entry when signed by one of the justices shall be deemed to be a conviction or order (s. 21 (1)). If the order be made, in the permitted cases, out of sessions, the justice shall enter the order in the order-book, or shall enter the substance of the decision in the specified form of certificate, which he shall forthwith, or at furthest before the next petty sessions day, forward to the clerk of the petty sessions, who shall enter same in the order-book, with a special note that he has so done, and shall submit such entry for signature to the justice or one of the justices by whom the order shall have been made upon the next day of his attendance at petty sessions, and in case such justice shall not sign the same, the clerk shall make a special entry to that effect in the order-book, and shall preserve the original certificate as a record of the proceedings (s. 21 (2)). It is no longer necessary to return to quarter sessions copies of summary convictions made at petty sessions (s. 21 (3)).<sup>1</sup> The district inspector of constabulary shall make a return to the justices at each petty sessions of the particulars of any case of summary jurisdiction determined out of petty sessions, and in which any police constable shall have been engaged (s. 21 (3)). After the justices have separated, it appears that they have no power to amend the entry in the order-book (R. (Burke) v. Cork JJ., (1905) 2 I.R. 309; 39 I.L.T.R. 25). The High Court will not compel justices to sign an erroneous order in the order-book (R. v. Creagh, (1852) 5 Ir. Jur. O.S. 109). As to power to withdraw a spoken judgment, see p. 108.

Where justices make an order for the abatement of a nuisance under section 112 of the Public Health (Ir.) Act, 1878, the order of the justices is not the entry in the order-book, but the document drawn up in accordance with the form in the schedule to the Act; and if the order so drawn up is good in form, its validity is not affected by the fact that the entry in the order-book would be bad on its face as an order (R. (Ewing) v. Down JJ., (1905) 2 I.R. 648). And similarly, the document authorizing a road contractor to enter for the purpose of obtaining road material is the order, and not the entry in the order-book (R. (Murphy) v. Weaford JJ., (1894) 2 I.R. 81).

The adjudication.
Order-book.

Certificate of order.

Either party may require a certificate of the order, which shall operate to all intents as a good form of conviction or order; and in case of a dismissal, where the same shall be stated therein to have been a dismissal upon the merits, or that any assault was of a trivial or justifiable nature, such certificate shall be a bar to any subsequent information or complaint for the same matter; and the certificate, upon proof of the signature of the justice, shall be good evidence of the conviction or order (s. 21). The words "information or complaint" do not refer to civil proceedings (Somers v. Sullivan, (1859) 9 I.C.L.R. App. xxxvii). By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, ss. 42, 43, 44, 45, in a prosecution for assault by a party aggrieved, if the justices shall deem the offence not proved or shall find the assault justified or so trifling as not to merit any punishment, and shall accordingly dismiss the complaint, the certificate of dismissal is a bar to all proceedings, whether civil or criminal;<sup>1</sup> and if the defendant in any complaint for assault under section 42 or 43 of the same statute is convicted, and pays the fine or endures the imprisonment, he shall be released from all proceedings, civil or criminal, in respect of the matter. Where a complainant alleged an assault merely, but wished to preserve his civil rights, and therefore prayed that the defendant be bound over, it was held, on an application on the part of the complainant for a certiorari, that the justices had no power to convict of the assault against his wish (R. v. Deny, (1851) 20 L.J.M.C. 189); but where the summons set out that an assault had been committed, and instead of commanding the defendant to appear "to answer the said complaint," commanded her to appear "to show why she should not be bound to keep the peace," it was held (on an application for certiorari by the defendant) that a conviction for the assault, made without objection by the complainant, was good (Kennington v. Daniel, (1888) 22 L.R.I. 667).

Scale of imprisonment in default.

Section 22 of the Petty Sessions Act directs how penalties may be enforced. Its provisions as to imprisonment in default of payment of a fine have been modified by the Small Penalties (Ir.) Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 82), and the combined effect of that statute and the Petty Sessions Act is to apply the following scale of imprisonment:<sup>2</sup>

FOR ANY SUM		THE IMPRISONMENT NOT TO EXCEED
Not exceeding 10s., . . . . .	.	Seven days.	.
Exceeding 10s. and not exceeding £1, . . . . .	.	Fourteen days.	.
" £1 " " £2, . . . . .	.	One month.	.
" £2 " " £5, . . . . .	.	Two months.	.
" £5 " " £10, . . . . .	.	Three "	.
" £10 " " £30, . . . . .	.	Four "	.
" £30 " " £50, . . . . .	.	Six "	.
" £50, . . . . .	.	One year.	.

An order imposing a penalty in Irish currency was held bad The penalty. Scale of imprisonment in default.
(Noble v. Hughes, (1896) 2 I.W.L.R. 90).

The justices have the following powers in reference to any penal or other sum directed by them to be paid (s. 22).

- (1) To order payment of same forthwith or at such time as they shall see fit.<sup>1</sup>
- (2) In civil cases to order payment by instalments.
- (3) To order distress in default of payment, the distress to include costs of distress.
- (4) In every case of an offence where a distress has been ordered, to order that, in default of payment as directed, the defendant be imprisoned, the imprisonment to be according to the foregoing scale. The imprisonment may be directed in the same warrant as the distress.
- (5) In every case of an offence if the defendant admits, or it shall otherwise be proved on oath, that the defendant has no goods, or that a distress would be ruinous to him or his family, they may order imprisonment in default according to the scale, without ordering a distress.
- (6) In every case of an offence, where the order has only directed distress in default of payment of a penal sum, and it shall afterwards be found impossible to execute a warrant of distress, to issue a warrant of committal for such period as might have been directed by the original order.
- (7) Where imprisonment only has been ordered, and it has been found impossible to execute a warrant of committal, to issue a warrant for the levy of such distress as might have been awarded by the original order.

There is no power to mitigate penalties save that provided by statute (Paley, 8th ed. 298). A judgment for too little is as faulty as a judgment for too much (R. v. Salomons (1786), 1 T.R. 252; see also p. 90). The Dublin Police Act. 5 Vict. c. 24, s. 63, contains a special provision enabling justices to mitigate penalties in all offences against any Act then in force, or thereafter to be passed, provided that in prosecutions relating to the customs, excise, stamps, or taxes, the penalty shall not be reduced below the minimum, save with the consent of the commissioners. There is no such general provision applicable in petty sessions districts. No power to mitigate.

It will be noted that the power to imprison is given only in case of an "offence" (see also distinction between "offences" and "cases" of a "civil nature" in s. 23). What is an offence? What is an offence?

Prima facie, an "offence" is equivalent to a crime (per Collins, J., Derbyshire County Council v. Derby, (1896) 2 Q. B. 57, 58, 297). The word "offender" may be used in the statute as a convenient expression, and in no way meant to designate a criminal (Adams v. Batley, (1887) 18 Q.B.D. 625, per Day, J.). It may be that the use of the word "forfeit" or the words "forfeit for every offence" is not <sup>2</sup> In R. v. Paget, (1881) 8 Q.B.D. 151, at p. 156, Field, J., said that the test whether a sum of money was a civil debt or a penalty was whether there was, at the hearing, a sum of money due to anybody or not.

conclusive, but the use of such expressions affords evidence of what the intention of the legislature was; and one would say prima facie that the action was for a penalty (Saunders v. Wiel, 1892 2 Q.B. 321, per Lord Esher, M.R.). The following were held to be criminal matters or offences:—keeping a dog without a licence (R. v. Sullivan, (1874) 1 R. 8 C.L. 404); disobedience of the bye-laws of a school constituted under the Elementary Education Act, 1874 (Mellor v. Denham, (1880) 5 Q.B. 11. 467); disobedience of an order directing defendant to abate a nuisance (R. v. Whitechurch, 1881 7 Q.B.D. 534; Ex parte Schofield, (1891) 2 Q.B. 428; cf. Derby, Mayor of, v. Derbyshire C.C. (1897 A.C. 550); infringement of a copyright in registered designs, contrary to s. 58 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883 (Saunders v. Wiel, 1892, 2 Q.B. 321); a charge of using an engine for the purpose of taking game contrary to 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 32, s. 23 (Cattell v. Ireson, (1858) El. Bl. and El. 91); permitting persons of notoriously bad character to assemble and meet together in licensed premises contrary to the repealed statute, 9 Geo. 4, c. 61 (Parler v. Green, (1862) 9 Ex. 169); acting as a member of a public board without qualification (Martin v. Treacher, (1886) 16 Q.B. 11. 507); travelling on a tramway with intent to avoid payment of the fare (Rayson v. South London Tram Co., (1893) 2 Q.B. 304). But the following are not offences:—breach of 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 15, s. 2, forbidding the representation of a dramatic piece without the consent of the author (Adams v. Batley, (1887) 18 Q.B. 11. 625); a breach of s. 3 of the Rivers Pollution Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict., c. 75), forbidding any person to knowingly permit sewage matter to flow into any stream (Derby, Mayor of, v. Derbyshire C.C., (1897) A.C. 550); a breach of a statute prohibiting a member of Parliament from voting without having taken the oath of allegiance (A.-G. v. Bradlaugh, (1885) 14 Q.B.D. 667).<sup>1</sup> The Court were evenly divided in opinion as to whether an information in the Court of Exchequer for a breach of the customs laws was a criminal proceeding (A.-G. v. Radloff, (1854) 10 Ex. 84).<sup>2</sup> It seems that proceedings under the Married Women Maintenance in case of Desertion Act, 1886, are civil proceedings (R. (Redding) v. Swift, (1909) 2 I.R. 302).<sup>3</sup>

imprisonment.

Some important, and by no means easy, questions arise upon the powers of justices in reference to imprisonment and distress. The first is this: Where a statute enacts a pecuniary penalty or a certain term of imprisonment and the justices impose a penalty, what term of imprisonment should they impose in default of payment, the term mentioned in the section, or the term according to the default scale laid down by the combined effect of the Petty Sessions Act and Small Penalties Act, or sometimes by the statute itself? For instance, section 3 of the Licensing Act, 1872, subjects the defendant to a penalty not exceeding £50 or "to imprisonment with or without hard labour for a term not exceeding one month." The justices fine defendant £50; the question arises, What is their power of imprisonment in default of payment? Section 3 mentions one month, but under the sections above quoted, as well as under section 51 (2) of the Licensing Act, 1872, power is given to impose a term not exceeding six months in default of payment of a pecuniary penalty exceeding £30 but not exceeding £50. The answer is—if the justices decide to imprison without the option of a fine, then they are limited to the term mentioned in the section (that is, in the specific case given, one month), but if they order payment of the pecuniary penalty, then, in default, they may resort to the default scale mentioned above (that is, in the specific case, they may order imprisonment in default for six months) (In re Clew, (1881) 8 Q.B.D. 511, per Grove, J., at p. 513; R. v. Hopkins, (1893) 1 Q.B. 621, re Brown, (1894) 2 I.R. 363).

What term of imprisonment.

The next question is—When must distress be ordered in default of payment, as a condition precedent to imprisonment? If the penalty does not exceed £5, it is not necessary to order distress (Small Penalties Act, s. 4). If the penalty exceeds £5, then distress must be ordered, and apparently levied and a return thereto made before the defendant can be imprisoned (Re Brown, (1878) 3 Q.B.D. 545; Re Clew, (1881) 8 Q.B.D. 511, R. (Donegan) v. Wicklow JJ., (1863) 16 I.C. L.R. 23), except in the cases mentioned in section 22, namely, where the defendant admits, or it is otherwise proved on oath, that the defendant has no goods or that a distress would be ruinous to himself or his family, and in such a case the circumstances found by the justices as bringing the case within the exception should, it is submitted, appear on the face of the warrant or order. The fact that the solicitor for the defendant applied for time for payment of the fine, and stated defendant had nothing except his weekly wage, was held to be evidence that the defendant had no goods whereon to levy a distress (R. v. Mortimer, (1906) 70 J.P. 542).<sup>1</sup> In estimating what is “a penalty not exceeding £5” within the meaning of these words in the Small Penalties Act, it must now be taken to be settled that the costs must be reckoned, so that if the defendant be fined £5 and 1s. costs, distress must be ordered (R. (Robinson) v. Wicklow JJ., (1907) 2 I.R. 13; R. (Hastings) v. Galway JJ., (1907) 2 I.R. 18, disapproving of R. (Herbert) v. Kildare JJ., (1895) 2 I.R. 577).

When distress must be ordered.

In R. (M'Erlean) v. Antrim JJ., (1902) 2 N.I.J.R. 256, it was held that the order was bad, because after imposing the imprisonment “in default” it failed to add “unless said sum be sooner paid.”<sup>2</sup>

“Unless said sum be sooner paid.”

Where a statute subjects a defendant to an increased penalty for a second offence, this, in the absence of provision to the contrary such as that in the Malicious Damage Act, 1861, means a second offence under the statute, and does not include a case of a similar offence under a different statute (Re Authers, (1889) 22 Q.B.D. 345; R. v. Stone, (1908) 99 L.T. 88). Justices cannot treat as a first offence what is a second offence, even though such previous conviction is not

<sup>2</sup> The point was also the subject of mention in R. (Burke) v. Cork JJ., (1905) 2 I.R. 309, and in R. (Taverner) v. Tyrone JJ., (1909) 2 I.R. 763; 43 I.L.T.R. 262. See also Form E (warrant of commitment) in schedule to Petty Sessions Act. Section 22 expressly provides that “such imprisonment shall be determinable upon payment of the said sum and costs.” Section 22 (3) specifies that where the justices shall order a distress in default of payment of any penal sum, they may order that in default of the said sum being paid as directed, the party may be imprisoned. See p. 68, as to effect of the Fine or Imprisonment (Scotland and Ireland) Act, 1899, 62 & 63 Vict. c. 11, s. 1.

The penalty. mentioned in the information or summons (Murray v. Thompson, (1888) 22 Q.B.D. 142; R. v. Beesby, (1909) 1 K.B. 849; R. (Ryan) v. Kilkenny JJ., (1903) 4 N.I.J.R. 4). See also p. 91, post.

Fine or Imprisonment
Act, 1899.

The imprisonment is determinable upon payment of the penal sum and costs of distress (s. 22). Under the Fine or Imprisonment (Scotland and Ireland) Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 11), on payment to the governor of the prison of a portion of the fine, the term of imprisonment shall be reduced by a proportionate number of days.

Imprisonment with or without hard labour.

Where the Act under which the charge is brought authorizes the justices to order imprisonment, they may order imprisonment with or without hard labour<sup>1</sup> (s. 22 (5)). There is no decision, as to whether this applies to imprisonment in default of payment of a penalty; but it is submitted that there is no power to award hard labour in default of payment, unless where such power is expressly given by the particular statute (see Small Penalties Act, 1873, 36 & 37 Vict. c. 82, s. 5).<sup>2</sup> If the defendant is already in prison, the imprisonment imposed may be ordered to commence from the expiration of the previous sentence (s. 22 (6)). If a defendant is convicted at one time of several distinct offences, the justices may order that the imprisonment under one or more of the sentences shall commence at the expiration of the terms of imprisonment previously ordered (R. v. Cuthbush, (1867) L.R. 2 Q.B. 379). Where the imprisonment is to be without hard labour, the conviction or warrant need not contain the words "without hard labour," for that is implied (R. (Taverner) v. Tyrone JJ., (1909) 2 I.R. 763, 43 I.L.T.R. 262; Ex parte Thompson, (1860) 3 L.T.N.S. 318).

compensation.

In cases where the statute awards compensation for damage, same is to be paid to the party aggrieved, but if he is not known, same is to be paid in like manner as any penalties awarded to the Crown; and where several persons join in an offence, and are severally punished each in the amount of the injury done, no more than one of such sums shall be paid to the party aggrieved, and the rest shall be applied as other penalties awarded to the Crown (s. 22 (7)).

Application of
penalties.

In every case where a penal sum is ordered to be paid as a penalty, and no sum is awarded to the complainant as compensation for damages, one-third of the penalty may be directed to be paid to the prosecutor or informer, the balance to be paid to the Crown (s. 22 (8); see also Fines Act (Ireland), 14 & 15 Vict. c. 90, s. 13). Where a fine is imposed for non-attendance at a school in a prosecution at the instance of a county council, one-third only of the fine can be paid to complainants, the expression "revenue from penalties" in the Irish Education Act, 1892, s. 3 (5) not being sufficient to capture the entire penalty (R. (Dublin County Council) v. Keating, (1907) 41 I.L.T.R. 190). The justices cannot award a third of the penalty to a person who is a mere witness, and is not the prosecutor (Powell v. Castletown, (1891) 30 L.R.I. 93).

to exceed twenty shillings, to be recoverable in the same manner as any penalty or other sum adjudged to be paid by the justices (s. 22 (9)). The general provisions of the Petty Sessions Act do not apply to application for attendance orders under section 4 of the Irish Education Act, 1892, and consequently no costs can be awarded (Glasgow v. Henry, (1907) 41 I.L.T.R. 245). One summons was brought alleging eight trespasses on different days. The justices imposed fines in respect of each trespass, and made up eight distinct orders with 5s. costs in each. Held, that the orders were bad, that though the summons comprised eight charges there was only one case within the meaning of s. 22 (9), and that there should have been one order only thereon with costs not exceeding 20s. (R. (Daly) v. Cork JJ., (1898) 2 I.R. 694).<sup>1</sup> "Where one summons contains several charges there ought to be a distinct adjudication on each just as in the case of an indictment; but such adjudications, though several for some purposes, form part of one order or conviction" (ib., per Gibson, J. 696). The general provisions of the Petty Sessions Act, s. 22, do not repeal or limit the wide power of justices under the Fishery Acts, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 106, s. 94, and 13 & 14 Vict. c. 88, s. 54, of awarding to the complainant the costs, charges, and expenses of and incidental to the proceedings (Hosford v. Devine, (1894) 2 I.R. 28). A later general statute does not repeal a prior particular statute where there is no express repeal and no necessary inconsistency (ib., per Palles, C.B., p. 33). As to costs against Crown, see p. 79, post; against police, p. 68 n., ante.

Costs.

The enforcement of the order of justices by the issuing and execution of warrants is provided for by s. 23. In case of a conviction for an offence the justices shall issue the warrant for its execution forthwith when the imprisonment is to take place immediately, or at the time fixed by the order for the imprisonment to take place, where it is not to be immediate, or directly upon the non-payment of any penal sums or the non-performance of any condition at the time and in the manner fixed by the order for that purpose, or at furthest upon the next court day after the expiration of the time so fixed for the imprisonment, payment, or performance of a condition, as the case may be. In cases of a civil nature, the warrant is to be issued at any time after the time fixed for compliance with the order. Forms of warrant are provided for by the Act (Schedule E). Where there has been an adjudication, subject to the result of a case stated, which is abandoned, the justices are bound to issue the warrant (R. (Byrne) v. Knox, 22 L.R.I. 599).

Enforcing
orders.
Warrants of execution.

It is not necessary that the warrant shall be signed by a justice who is a member of the court which adjudicated (s. 24), nor, it is submitted, that the warrant should be signed by a justice in petty sessions.<sup>2</sup>

In case notice of appeal is given and recognizance entered into, the order shall not be executed until the appeal is decided (except where the particular statute otherwise directs), and the defendant if in custody is entitled to be liberated pending the appeal (s. 23).

Stay of execution pending appeal.

By s. 25 all warrants in cases of offences are to be addressed to the district inspector or head constable, and in other cases to the district inspector, head constable, or such other person (not being the complainant or a party interested) as the justices shall see fit. An order that two justices, A and B, make arrangements with H to execute all warrants in connection with the plaintiff societies (certain Loan Fund Societies) was held bad, as justices have no power to delegate their functions to two of their number (R. (Nugent) v. Tyrone JJ., (1909) 43 I.L.T.R. 261; see also p. 75, post).

Whenever, in case of a warrant for committal, the defendant or, in case of a distress warrant, the defendant's goods, cannot be found in that part of the county for which the district inspector or head constable acts, the district inspector or head constable shall certify upon the warrant the place where he believes the defendant or his goods may be found, and that he believes the signature to the warrant to be genuine, and shall transmit the warrant to the district inspector or head constable for such place, who shall execute same in like manner as if it had been addressed to him in the first instance. Where the defendant or his goods are out of the county, the warrant with the certificate is to be sent to the inspector-general (s. 26), and the inspector-general or deputy inspector-general may back same for execution in any constabulary district in Ireland, or in the Dublin metropolitan police district, or in England, Scotland, the Isle of Man, or Channel Isles (s. 27). Warrants addressed to persons other than the constabulary may be backed by a justice, district inspector, or head constable for execution in like manner as any warrant backed by the inspector-general (s. 28). Unexecuted warrants are to be returned to the justices with a certificate of the reasons for the non-execution (s. 33).

and sale.*

The sums levied under any warrant addressed to the constabulary are to be accounted for according to the Fines Act (Ireland), 1851. Sums levied under other warrants are to be paid over to the person appearing by such warrant to be entitled to same. Any distress seized may be sold within such period as shall be fixed by the warrant, or, if no period is fixed, then within three days from the making of the distress, the surplus after retaining all charges to be paid to the owner. The distress may be sold by any head constable or by any member of the metropolitan police force, by auction, without a licence. If the penalty and charges are paid, the distress shall not be executed (s. 32). As to what can be taken, see p. 71.

jurisdiction.*

All the facts necessary to show jurisdiction to issue the warrant should appear therein (1staley, 8th ed., 335). A warrant founded upon and reciting a defective order or conviction is bad, and trespass lies for acts done under it (Day v. King, (1836) 5 A. & E. 359). It was held no objection to a warrant of distress that it ordered the money levied to be paid to the justices, in order that they might dispose of the same as directed by the conviction (Wray v. Toke, (1848) 12 Q.B. 492). A warrant is bad if, in the body of it, the name (Hodgins v. Poe, (1867) I.R. 2 C.L. 52) or the Christian name (R. v. Hood, (1830) 1 Mood C.C. 281) of the person to be taken under it is omitted.<sup>1</sup> Warrants in execution require considerable strictness, but warrants for apprehension or safe custody of a prisoner pending investigation may be in general terms (per Huddleston, B., in Ex parte Terraz, (1878) 4 Ex.D. 638). If a prisoner has been lodged in jail under a bad warrant, a good warrant of commitment may be made out before a rule for a writ of habeas corpus has been obtained; and such warrant will be an answer to the rule (R. v. Richards, (1844) 5 Q.B. 926, Ex parte Cross, (1857) 2 H. & N. 354). The High Court can set aside a warrant issued without jurisdiction

(see R. v. Thompson, (1900) 2 K.B. 614; R. v. Montgomery, (1910) 26 T.L.R. 225; R. v. Doherty, 1910) 74 J.P. 304), and probably the High Court has power to order a justice to withdraw a warrant to arrest issued upon an information charging some act which is clearly not a criminal offence (R. v. Crossman, (1908) 24 T.L.R. 517).

Enforcing orders.

In the last case the question was raised, but not decided, as to whether the justice who issued such a warrant could withdraw it. It is, however, submitted that such withdrawal is clearly permissible, and that a justice may withdraw any warrant issued by him other than a warrant issued to enforce an order (see Baron v. Luscombe, (1835) 3 A. & E. 589 at p. 596).

Can justice withdraw warrant?

A warrant for committal in default of a penalty cannot be executed on Sunday (Paley, 8th ed., 367). Upon a warrant of a justice for levying a forfeiture, where the whole or any part thereof belongs to the King, the officer is justified in breaking open outer doors for the execution of the warrant, but there seems to be no such power by law in other cases where no part of the penalty is vested in the Crown. The constable distraining has no power to impound the goods on the premises, and ought not to remain longer than a reasonable time for the purpose of removing them (Paley, 8th ed., 339).

General powers under warrant.

It seems that all defendant's chattels (save growing crops, trees, shrubs, plants, or vegetable matter, not severed from the soil, which are exempt under 26 & 27 Vict. c. 62, s. 2) can be taken in execution under a warrant of distress (Nun & Walsh, 2nd ed., 615).<sup>1</sup>

What goods may be taken?

In the case of a distress under the small debts jurisdiction, the wearing apparel, bedding, tools, and implements of trade, not exceeding five pounds in value, are exempt (51 & 52 Vict. c. 47, s. 5).

Provisions as to impounding animals distrained are contained in 14 & 15 Vict. c. 92, s. 19. Pounds are established and keepers appointed by the justices of each petty sessions district; and the fees are fixed by the statute, and the rates of sustenance fixed by the justices of the district.

Impounding animals.

Distresses are to be impounded in a licensed pound (14 & 15 Vict. c. 92, s. 19). A warrant of distress does not bind the defendant's goods till actual seizure under it (Whitestone v. Smith, (1862) 7 Ir. Jur. N.S. 31). As to obligation on persons impounding animals to provide them with food and water, see CATALOGUE OF SUMMARY OFFENCES. "ANIMALS, CRUELTY TO."

Whenever any person shall be bound to appear, or to keep the peace, it shall be done by a separate recognizance; but whenever any person shall be bound to prosecute or to give evidence as a witness, it may be done either by recognizance at the foot of his deposition or by a separate recognizance in the discretion of the justice. The recognizance shall, except in cases of appeal, be in such amount as the justices shall deem expedient and be in the form in the schedule, and specify the occupation and residence of the person entering into the same. If the recognizance is to appear at assizes or quarter sessions, or at any place other than before the justice before whom it is taken, it shall be forwarded to the clerk of the crown or peace, and may be estreated by the court before whom the principal party shall be bound to appear. Whenever the recognizance is to keep the peace, or to appear before any justice out of quarter sessions, it shall be deposited with the clerk of petty sessions of the district, and upon Recognizances.

Recogni-

non-performance of its condition any justice present may certify on the recognizance the non-performance of the condition, and the justices in petty sessions in open court upon proof of the non-performance of the condition may make an order to estreat such recognizance to such amount as they shall see fit, and to issue a distress warrant to levy such amount. Seven days' previous notice of an application to estreat a recognizance must be served at the usual place of abode of the party against whom the order is sought (s. 34). As to estreating recognizances, and power to imprison in default of payment of sums estreated, see pp. 38, 39, ante.

Forms.

Forms for use under the Petty Sessions Act are provided by the schedule, and can be used even where the particular Act under which the information or complaint is made provides a special form. But rigid observance of the form is not necessary if the form used be sufficient in substance and effect, and the words used clearly express the intention of the person who shall use the same (s. 36). Sealing by justices is not necessary (ib.).

terms.

The prosecutor or party at whose instance the proceedings shall take place may be termed the "complainant," whether he shall be an informant, or prosecutor, or otherwise, and the proceedings may be termed a "complaint," whether founded upon information or otherwise, and the decision in summary proceedings shall be called an "order," whether the same shall be a conviction or otherwise (s. 37).

Amendment.

As to variance between the information or complaint and the evidence in support thereof, as to amendment, and as to substituting fresh charge, see p. 93.

D. M. P.

The Petty Sessions Act does not extend to Dublin metropolitan police district, save as to the backing or executing of warrants (s. 41).

court.

If any person shall wilfully insult any justice or justices sitting in court, or shall commit any other contempt of such court, the justice or justices may, by verbal order, direct him to be removed, or to be taken into custody at any time before the rising of the court, and may commit him for any period not exceeding seven days, or fine him any sum not exceeding 40s. (Petty Sessions Act, s. 9). In re Rea, (1878) 2 L.R.I. 429, it was held (a) that a warrant committing for contempt was not defective for omitting to state the title of the case pending at the time the alleged contempt was committed; (b) that professional persons engaged in a case are liable to be committed as being within the section; (c) that the warrant, having been signed by the chairman of the court, was not defective for omitting to state that it was made by a justice or justices sitting in court; (d) that it being stated in the warrant that the court directed the defendant to be imprisoned for contempt, it was unnecessary to repeat the statement of the offence in the committing part; (e) that the warrant being dated, its clear construction was that the time of the imprisonment should be computed from the date. Though, in general, a person previously to his committal should get the opportunity of showing cause against the intended order (Re Pollard, (1868) L.R. 2 P.C.C. 106), yet where an admitted contempt has been offered to a court in the face of a court, it is not necessary for the presiding justice to formally call upon the offender to show cause why he should not be committed (In re Rea, (1879) 4 L.R.I. 345; Ex parte Pater, (1864) 5 B. & S. 299). Where the justices ordered a person to be taken into custody, the mere fact that the order so made is carried out after the offender, in order to evade arrest, has left the court, is not sufficient to render his arrest illegal (Mitchell v. Smyth, (1894) 2 I.R. 351). The jurisdiction of the High Court to commit for contempt of a court of summary jurisdiction seems open to question; but the assizes are a branch of the High Court, and therefore, where a person is charged before the petty sessions with an indictable offence triable only at the assizes, and matter is published in a newspaper tending to interfere with the fair trial of the charge, the High Court has jurisdiction to attach the publisher of such matter for contempt of court, though at the time of the publication the person charged has not been committed for trial (R. v. Parke, (1903) 2 K. B. 432).<sup>1</sup> An inferior court of record cannot commit for contempt not committed in the face of the court (R. v. Lefroy, (1873) L.R. 8 Q.B. 134).

Proceedings for contempt of court are not limited to process taken for the purpose of vindicating the personal dignity of the judges and protecting them from personal insults, but extend to all cases where there is an attempt to interfere with the ordinary course of justice (see observations of Blackburne, J., in Skipworth's Case, (1873) L.R. 9 Q.B. at p. 232). A witness who refuses to answer a question on the ground that the answer would tend to incriminate himself notwithstanding that he is told by the judge that he sees no ground to apprehend danger from an answer to the question, is guilty of contempt of court (Ex parte Fernandez, (1861) 10 C.B.N.S. 3; R. (Atkinson) v. Armagh J.J., (1883) 18 I.L.T.R. 2); or if the witness refuses to be examined (Walsh v. Jordan, (1828) Sm. & B. 433; R. v. Charlesworth, (1860) 2 F. & F. 326).<sup>2</sup> The High Court has jurisdiction to interfere in case of an improper exercise of the power of an inferior court to commit for contempt (Ex parte Pater, supra; In re Rea, supra).

By section 1 of the Petty Sessions Act it was enacted that the several petty sessions districts into which the counties were divided at the date of the Act, and the places and times at which petty sessions were appointed to be held, should continue until altered in manner thereby provided. Whenever the justices at quarter sessions shall consider that an alteration is required, or when they shall be required by the Lord Lieutenant or by a requisition signed by at least seven justices, they shall proceed at the next quarter sessions to revise the said districts, times, and places, and they are given power to alter such districts, times, and places. Justices who take it upon themselves, in a case triable at petty sessions, to sit in the petty sessions courthouse, on a day other than that appointed for holding the petty sessions, are not sitting in petty sessions, and their orders are without jurisdiction (R. (Gallagher) v. Martin, (1874) I.R. 8 C.L. 556; see also Quinn v. Pratt, (1908) 2 I.R. 69). An application by a justice for a certiorari to quash an order of quarter sessions changing the place of holding petty sessions on the ground that the proceedings had partly been conducted in the justices' private room and not in open court was refused on the ground that the applicant had been a party to the irregularity complained of (Ex parte Beecher, (1876) 12 I.L.T.R. 167).

By the Summary Jurisdiction Over Children (Ir.) Act, 1884

Provisions as to children and young persons.

<sup>2</sup> The Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 13 (5), authorizes justices to commit a witness who refuses to be examined or to take the oath, or refuses to answer any question or to produce any papers.

Provision as to children and young persons.

(47 & 48 Vict. c. 19).<sup>1</sup> where a child meaning a person who is, in the opinion of the court before whom he is brought, under the age of fourteen years, s. 9)<sup>2</sup> is charged before a court of summary jurisdiction with any indictable offence other than homicide, the court, if they think it expedient to do so, and if the parent or guardian (guardian includes any person who, in the opinion of the court, has for the time being the charge or control of the child, s. 9) of the child so charged does not object, may deal summarily with the offence, and may inflict the same punishment as might have been inflicted had the case been tried on indictment, subject to the limitations in the section mentioned s. 4 (1)). Where the parent or guardian is not present when the child is charged, the court may either remand the child for the purpose of notice being served on the parent or guardian, or, if it thinks it expedient to do so, may deal with the case summarily (s. 4 (3)). A child, on summary conviction for an offence punishable on summary conviction under the Act or under any other Act, whether past or future, shall not be fined a larger sum than 40s. (s. 6). Section 4 (2) prescribes the procedure, and the statute will be found in the APPENDIX OF STATUTES.

By the same statute, where a young person (meaning a person who, in the opinion of the court before whom he is brought, is of the age of fourteen years and under the age of sixteen years, s. 9)<sup>1</sup> is charged before a court of summary jurisdiction with any offence other than homicide, the court, if they think it expedient to do so, having regard to the character and antecedents of the persons charged, the nature of the offence and all the circumstances of the case, and if the young person when informed by the court that he may elect to be tried by a jury, consents to be tried summarily, may deal summarily with the offence, and in their discretion adjudge such person to pay a fine not exceeding £10, or to be imprisoned with or without hard labour for any term not exceeding three months (s. 5).

Power is also given in the case of charges against children and young persons to discharge the accused without punishment where the offence is of a trivial nature, either unconditionally, or on his entering into security to appear for judgment when called on, or to be of good behaviour, and without payment of costs and damages or upon payment thereof (s. 7). The provisions of the Petty Sessions Act and the Dublin Police Acts as to appeals are made applicable (s. 8 (a)). The conviction must contain a statement in the case of a child as to the consent or otherwise of the parent or guardian, and in the case of a young person, of the consent of the young person to be tried by a court of summary conviction (s. 8 (b)).

The power conferred by s. 5 (1) to order a young person to be whipped has been repealed by the Children Act, 1908, s. 107 of which, however, contains substituted provisions; and by the same statute s. 111. all cases against children and young persons must now be heard in a juvenile court. See CATALOGUE OF SUMMARY OFFENCES, "CHILDREN"; and Children Act, 1908, verbatim, APPENDIX OF STATUTES.

As already pointed out (p. 2, ante) the chairman of an urban or rural county district containing a population exceeding 5,000 is a chairman of the county, but, except at quarter sessions, shall act only within the petty sessions district comprising the urban or rural district or part thereof (Local Government (Ir.) Act, 1898, s. 26 (1)). It is submitted that such chairmen can (a) sign summonses to compel the appearance of a defendant who is within the district, though the offence has not been committed within the district, and (b) can adjudicate, in such district, upon offences committed outside of such district (cf. R. v. Brodhurst, (1863) 32 L.J.M.C. 168).

Jurisdiction
of chairman

In the recent case of R. (Moore) v. Dublin JJ., (1910) 2 I.R. 681, the complainant, a rate-collector, having obtained a decree at petty sessions for rates, applied to the justices to issue a warrant to levy the amount by distress,<sup>1</sup> and requested them to address the warrant to the district inspector of police or head constable, in compliance with s. 25 (2) of the Petty Sessions Act, 1851. The justices refused to address the warrant to the constabulary, but offered to address it to any person nominated by the complainant or to issue it in blank. The complainant refused to nominate any person or to accept the warrant in blank. The rate-collector having applied for a rule to the King's Bench Division, the constabulary, represented by counsel on behalf of the Crown, contended that they were under no duty to execute warrants of the kind; and that the applicant for the warrant should name persons other than the constabulary to whom the warrant might be entrusted, so as to afford the justices an opportunity of exercising their discretion. Held, that it was not incumbent on the applicant for the warrant to do so. "The matter is for the magistrates exclusively. The responsibility rests with them, though, no doubt, the applicant for the warrant might make an assistful suggestion. If the applicant for the warrant named a person to whom, in his opinion, the warrant might be addressed, the magistrates could nevertheless reject the person so named, and, if they did not in the exercise of their discretion name the district inspector, or head constable, they might name a person to execute the warrant other than the person named or suggested by the applicant. As a practical matter, if I were a magistrate, and knew of no person I considered fit to be entrusted with the execution of the warrant, or if the name of no such person was submitted to me, I would have no difficulty in naming the district inspector or head constable. But, even if I did know of a person fit to be entrusted with the execution of the warrant, I would still have a discretion as to whether I would appoint the police or that person. In the case before us the magistrates have not exercised the discretion reposed in them by the statute. It is mandatory on them to do so; there is a statutory obligation in them to do so. They must name either the district inspector or head constable, or such other person as they think fit, other than the complainant or person interested. They have not done so. The mandamus asked for must be accordingly granted" (ib., per Lord O'Brien, L.C.J.). It is not a proper exercise of the justices' discretion to address the warrant to the High Sheriff of the county as a special bailiff under the statute relating to the recovery of the possession of small tenements (R. (Gleeson) v. Tipperary JJ., 16 November, 1910, unreported<sup>2</sup>).

constabulary to execute
warrant.

Cases excluded from Petty Sessions Act. THE Petty Sessions Act, 1851, does not apply to the Dublin metropolitan police district, save so far as relates to the backing or executing of warrants (s. 41).<sup>1</sup> By section 42 of the Petty Sessions Act, nothing in the Act shall extend or be construed to extend to any information or complaint or other proceeding under or by virtue of any of the Acts relating to His Majesty's revenue of excise<sup>2</sup> or customs, stamps, taxes, or post office, or relating to the preservation of game, except that all proceedings as to the same may be in the forms of procedure required by the Petty Sessions Act, or as near thereto as the circumstances of the case will admit. It becomes necessary to refer shortly to the procedure (outside Dublin) in summary cases not within the Petty Sessions Act. In each case, however, the particular statute,<sup>3</sup> which usually contains special provisions as to procedure and forms, should be consulted.

Differences between cases within and cases not within Petty Sessions Act. The following are the points of difference between summary cases within, and summary cases not within, the Petty Sessions Act :—(1) cases within the Petty Sessions Act, with a few exceptions, must be tried at petty sessions;<sup>4</sup> whereas it is not essential, unless where the particular statute so directs, that cases not within the Petty Sessions Act should be tried at petty sessions;<sup>5</sup> (2) in most cases within the Petty Sessions Act, any person may prosecute, but prosecutions under the Excise and Customs Acts can only be brought by or with the consent of the Commissioners, &c. ; (3) the entry in the order-book in petty sessions cases is the order,<sup>6</sup> but in cases not within the

Petty Sessions Act such entry is not the order,<sup>1</sup> and a formal order or conviction<sup>2</sup> must be drawn up; (4) the distinction between a "dismiss without prejudice" and a "dismiss on the merits"<sup>3</sup> is not applicable to cases not within the Petty Sessions Act<sup>4</sup>; a case, if dismissed, should be "dismissed" simply<sup>5</sup>; (5) in cases within the Petty Sessions Act the justices may award costs, not exceeding 20s., to either party; but in all cases that are not within the Act there is no power to award costs except under the provisions of the particular statute under which the prosecution is brought; (6) the Petty Sessions Act gives a right of appeal only to a party aggrieved, which does not include a prosecutor,<sup>6</sup> whereas the excise and other statutes outside the Petty Sessions Act usually give a right of appeal to either party; (7) the time for and procedure as to appeal are different, and in every case not within the Petty Sessions Act the particular statute must be consulted;<sup>7</sup> (8) the Small Penalties (Ir.) Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 82), does not apply to any penalties recoverable by or on behalf of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue; and lastly, (9) the procedure generally is, of course, different.

Differences between cases within and cases not within Petty Sessions Act.

The proceedings must be commenced by an information or complaint (Paley, 8th ed., p. 75), which need not be either on oath or in writing, unless the statute expressly so directs (R. v. Millard, (1853), 6 Cox, 150), unless a warrant is to be issued in the first instance (2 Hale, 111). On the making of the information, the justice should issue a summons setting out the charge.

Information or complaint.

The summons should be signed<sup>8</sup> by the justice, and should be personally served on the defendant (R. v. Hall, (1825) 6 D. & R. 84; see Molloy, 180; R. v. Simpson, 1716, 10 Mod. 341), unless the statute authorizes some other mode of service. If, however, the defendant appears, the irregularity is waived (R. v. Barret, (1710) 1 Salk. 383), and justices may adjudicate unless the statute creating the offence makes service necessary (R. v. Shaw, (1865) 10 Cox 66, at p. 72, per Erle, C.J.). There is no jurisdiction either under the Petty Sessions Acts, or at common law, by which a summons issued in one county can be served in another (G. S. & W. Ry. v. Leyden, (1907) 2 I.R. 160).

Service.

The justice on proof of the service of the summons can proceed in the absence of the defendant (R. v. Simpson, (1716) 10 Mod. 341). He can also probably issue a warrant for the arrest of the accused if he does not appear (2 Hawk, 133).

Non-appearance of defendant.

In many cases prosecutions must be brought within six calendar months from the date of the offence (see, for instance, 27 Geo. 3, c. 35 (Ir.), s. 20; 9 Geo. 4, c. 69, s. 4; 11 & 12 Vict. c. 118, s. 3). The laying of the information is the commencement of the prosecution (R. v. Barret, (1710) 1 Salk. 383).

Witnesses.

The justices have no power except that given by statute to compel the attendance of witnesses (Paley, 8th ed., 125).

Penalty.

The justices cannot mitigate a penalty, save where the statute imposing the penalty or some statute of general application authorizes them to do so. In Ireland there is no such general enactment except the Dublin Police Act, 1842, s. 63, and even that statute does not extend to penalties for breaches of the Acts relating to customs, excise, stamps, or taxes.

Care should be taken that where the fine mentioned in an Act is Irish currency, the amount should not be exceeded by imposing that amount in British coinage, as, if this is done, the amount of the fine is excessive, and the conviction consequently bad. R. v. Creagh, 1852) 5 Ir. Jur. 109. If an order imposes a penalty "in Irish currency," it is bad, having regard to 33 & 34 Vict. c. 10 (Noble v. Hughes, (1896) 2 I.W.L.R. 90).

Appeal.

The Fines Act (Ireland), 1851, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 90,<sup>1</sup> the application of which is general, provides (by s. 9), a right of appeal to quarter sessions in all cases where there is an order of justices for payment of any penalty exceeding 40s.<sup>2</sup> Whether such appeal is a full right of appeal, or is limited to the question of the amount of the penalty, is doubtful; see remarks on this section in chapter, APPEAL TO QUARTER SESSIONS, p. 138. Such appeal, however, as the section provides for is, it is submitted, in addition to, and not in substitution for, that prescribed by the particular statute.

Certiorari.

Certiorari does not lie in respect of proceedings under the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53 (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, s. 79); but as to the circumstances in which certiorari will lie, this enactment notwithstanding, see p. 226.

Can costs be given against Crown?

As to costs against the Crown,<sup>3</sup> the rule is that the Crown is not bound by an Act of Parliament unless specially named, or unless there is a necessary implication to be drawn from the provisions of the Act, or from the legislation on the subject, that the Crown was intended to be bound per Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., in Thomas v. Pritchard, (1903) 1 K.B. 209; and, therefore, in statutes dealing with general procedure and not making specific mention of the Crown, costs cannot be given either to or against the Crown, and this applies to appeals to quarter sessions (R. v. Beadle, (1857) 7 E. & B. 492; R. v. Foley, (1896) 2 I.W.L.R. 69). But, by statute, costs can be given either to or against the Attorney-General,<sup>4</sup> in any proceeding brought by him in respect of any Act of Parliament relating to the public revenue (18 & 19 Vict. c. 90, s. 1); and, further, where the Crown is mentioned—for instance, where section 4 of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, gives the Crown the right to have a case stated, and section 6 of the same statute gives the court general power to give costs against the unsuccessful party—the Crown may be awarded costs or ordered to pay costs (Moore v. Smith, (1859) 1 E. & E. 597; see also Thomas v. Pritchard, (1903) 1 K.B. 209).

In excise prosecutions the proceedings should be commenced by an officer of Inland Revenue, or of the Attorney-General (Inland Revenue Regulation Act, 1890, 53 & 54 Vict. c. 21, s. 21); but this enactment does not extend to any summary proceedings for the conviction on immediate arrest of any person under the Inland Revenue Acts, nor to any proceeding on the information or complaint of any officer of the peace for recovery of a fine or penalty under the Excise Acts in any case in which such proceeding is authorized (ib.). An allegation in the information that the excise officer prosecutes by order of the Commissioners is sufficient proof of such order without further or other evidence (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, s. 71; Dyer v. Tully, (1894) 2 Q.B. 794. Excise officers may conduct the proceedings before justices (Inland Revenue Regulation Act, 1890, s. 27). In any proceeding the letter or instrument under which the officer is acting is evidence (ib., s. 24), and may be produced at any stage of the proceedings (Hargreaves v. Hilliam, (1894) 58 J.P. 655. The court should consist of two justices<sup>1</sup> (8 Geo. 4, c. 53, s. 65). The order of the court should be in the form given in Schedule A to the 40 & 41 Vict. c. 13. The information must be laid within six months after the offence (11 & 12 Vict. c. 118, s. 3). The laying of the information is the commencement of the proceedings (Thorpe v. Priestnall, (1897) 1 Q. B. 159). As to necessity for notice of information, and service thereof, see 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 51, s. 19, APPENDIX of STATUTES. The summons may be served by any person (4 & 5 Vict. c. 20, s. 31), ten days before the hearing (4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 51, s. 19), and need not be served personally, it being sufficient if a copy is left at the place of business of the defendant or at the place where the offence was committed, or at the place of residence, or with the wife, child, or servant of the defendant (4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 51, s. 19)<sup>2</sup>. The justice before whom the information is laid can summon any person, in whatever part of the United Kingdom such person may be, as a witness (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, s. 74), but such summons must be served personally (R. v. Simpson, (1716) 10 Mod. 341; R. v. Hall, (1825) 6 D. & R. 84), a reasonable time before the hearing (Hammond v. Stewart, (1722) Stra. 510), and a reasonable sum tendered to him for costs and expenses (Chapman v. Pointon, (1740) Stra. 1150). If the witness does not appear in answer to such summons, he becomes liable to a fine of £50 (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, s. 74). A justice has no power to bring up on warrant a witness who fails to attend on summons. A person taken into custody without a warrant may be remanded from time to time for a period not exceeding eight days, or admitted to bail (23 & 24 Vict. c. 113, s. 39). All penalties go to the Crown, and are to be paid to the Commissioners or as they direct (53 & 54 Vict. c. 21, s. 33). The justices have power to reduce a penalty to not less than one-fourth, except where it is specially provided that no mitigation is allowed (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, s. 78). But justices have no power, where a double penalty is sued for on information, to mitigate such double penalty, and when any person has been arrested under the Excise Acts, and is liable under those <sup>1</sup> This also applies to any Excise Act passed subsequently (ib., s. 1; 51 & 52 Vict. c. 8, s. 8). Jurisdiction is given to any two justices of the county, where the offence is committed or the offender is found, or the goods are seized (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, s. 65).

Acts to the payment of a penalty, and, in default of payment, to imprisonment for a limited period, the justices have no power, unless such power is given to them by some enactment, to mitigate such penalty (4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 51, s. 20).

excise cases.*

As to appeals, see APPEALS TO QUARTER SESSIONS, p. 139.

All fines imposed by the Stamp Duties Management Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 38), or by any Act for the time being in force relating to stamp duties charged in respect of medicines or playing cards may be proceeded for and recovered in the same manner and, in the case of summary proceedings, with the like power of appeal, as any fine or penalty under any Act relating to the excise (54 & 55 Vict. c. 38, s. 26), and any penalty incurred under s. 9 of the Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), which section relates to stamps used for postal purposes, as well as to stamps used for revenue purposes, is recoverable in like manner and with like right of appeal (ib.; Revenue Act, 1898, 61 & 62 Vict. c. 46, s. 7 (5)).<sup>1</sup> No other fines under the Stamp Acts are recoverable except in the High Court. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue are entrusted with, amongst other things, the recovery of fines under the Stamp Acts (53 & 54 Vict. c. 21, s. 39), and it is their authority which is required (ib., s. 21) for the initiation of proceedings relating thereto.

Procedure.

The procedure as to cases under the Customs Acts is regulated by the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876<sup>2</sup> (39 & 40 Vict. c. 36). The forms to be used in proceedings under this Act are given in schedule C. thereto, and should be carefully followed by justices. Upon the exhibiting within three years after the date of the offence charged (Act of 1876, s. 257) of any information by the Commissioners or proper officer of customs (s. 221), in the form prescribed by ss. 222, 223, alleging any offence whatever by any person against the Customs Acts, a justice may, in cases where it appears to such justice that the person charged is likely to abscond, issue his warrant<sup>3</sup> to bring such person before him or any other justice; and he or any other justice may bail such person until the time for the hearing of the case (ss. 197, 224); or the justice, instead of issuing a warrant, may issue a summons to bring such person before him or any other justice, wherever in the United Kingdom any such person may be. Such summons or any summons issued for the attendance of a witness may be served by any customs officer or "other duly authorized person" upon such defendant or witness either personally or by leaving it at his last place of abode or business in the United Kingdom or on board any vessel to which he belongs or has lately belonged (ss. 224, 227). In case of non-appearance of the defendant, after proof of service of summons (see R. v. Smith, (1875) L.R. 10 Q.B. 604, and other cases cited, p. 49), the justice may adjudicate (s. 225). A witness summoned and failing to attend, or refusing to be sworn, or to give evidence, may be fined not more than £20<sup>1</sup> (s. 228). Offences may be dealt with wherever the defendant is or is brought (s. 229).<sup>2</sup> If the penalty imposed is not paid on conviction, the justice is to commit the defendant to any gaol within his jurisdiction, "there to remain for such term as is hereinafter provided,"<sup>3</sup> or until the penalty shall be paid (s. 232).

Where any person is brought before a justice for any offence under the Customs Acts for which a pecuniary penalty is thereby imposed, and if the goods in respect of which he is charged are not spirits, saccharine, or tobacco, or being spirits, saccharine, or tobacco, do not exceed five gallons of spirits, five pounds of saccharine, or twenty pounds of tobacco, such justice may adjudicate summarily without information by anyone or direction of the Commissioners of customs, and may on conviction impose a fine of not less than the single or more than the treble value<sup>4</sup> of the goods, including the duty thereon; and in default of payment order imprisonment for not less than fourteen days or more than one month (s. 233 and 6 Ed. 7, c. 20, s. 5).<sup>5</sup> Where any person is brought before any justice for any offence against the Customs Act with which the justice is not empowered to deal summarily, such justice may remand or admit to bail such person until the direction of the Commissioners has been obtained and the necessary information prepared (s. 197). As to the amount of penalty, see s. 233, and Revenue Act, 1906 (6 Ed. 7, c. 20), s. 5. The justices can award costs<sup>6</sup> either to or against the prosecutor (40 & 41 Vict. c. 13). All penalties, forfeiture, or costs awarded to be paid to the Crown are to be paid to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, or any person authorized by them to receive the same (39 & 40 Vict. c. 36, s. 255). Section 205 of 39 & 40 Vict. c. 36, deals with the issue of search warrants.

Any justice may amend any information, conviction, or warrant of commitment for any offence at any time, whether before or after conviction (s. 243).<sup>7</sup>

There is no right of appeal, unless such as is given by the Fines Act (L.), 1851, noted post, p. 138, or by case stated on a point of law under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43. In applications for certiorari the affidavit shall state the grounds of objection, and no objection shall be entertained by the Court other than such as is so stated (s. 243).<sup>8</sup>

Penalty.

*Appeal ;
Certiorari.*

<sup>2</sup> See s. 230, as to justices of adjoining county. Where the offence is triable in any city or borough having a separate commission of the peace, the justices of the county in which the city or borough is situate may adjudicate (46 & 47 Vict. c. 55, s. 8).

<sup>3</sup> This is six months, if the penalty is less than £100 (s. 236). If the penalty is £100 or more, the imprisonment may be from six to nine months for a first offence and in the case of a subsequent offence, the offender may be imprisoned in lieu of payment of the penalty for a period not less than six or more than twelve months, with or without hard labour (42 & 43 Vict. c. 21, s. 12).

requisites.

THE general requisites of a good conviction are:—(1) that it be full and correct; (2) that the directions of the particular statute relative to the offence should appear on the face of the conviction to have been substantially complied with, both as regards the subject-matter of the offence being clearly brought within the statute, and the adjudication; (3) that it be certain; (4) that all the facts necessary to support a conviction must be expressly alleged and not left to be gathered by inference or intendment (Paley, 8th ed., 195 et seq.).

conviction.

Proceeding to deal with the particular contents of a conviction, every conviction must contain—(1) a statement showing that the offence is within the jurisdiction, (2) names of complainant<sup>1</sup> and defendant, (3) time of offence, (4) place of offence, (5) description of offence with certainty and accuracy, (6) an adjudication permitted by statute.

In order to show jurisdiction, the rule is that the conviction must show the place in and for which the justices acted when they made the conviction, that the justices were justices for that place, and that the offence was committed within that place. The order book in use in petty sessions is headed "County of _____," and it is necessary, in the column headed "Cause of Complaint," to state that the offence was committed "within the county of _____," "or within the county aforesaid," which will be sufficient to show jurisdiction. If the order is made against a person resident in another county comprised in the petty sessions district, the fact that such portion of such other county is in the district should appear. In cases not within the Petty Sessions Act—for example, convictions by a Dublin metropolitan police magistrate—the body of the conviction must show that the justice was acting for the place within which the offence was committed, and that the offence was committed within that place (see form of conviction in schedule to Dublin Police Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 24). "It is an elementary matter, and well settled, that the place where the alleged offence took place must be shown to be within the jurisdiction of the magistrates" (per Lord O'Brien, L.C.J., in R. (M'Monagle) v. Donegal JJ., (1904) 5 N.I.J.R. 36).

Jurisdiction,
and place of
offence.

Justices cannot exercise summary jurisdiction in respect of indictable offences (see R. (O'Grady) v. Cork JJ., (1905) 5 N.I.J.R. 191, and other cases noted ante, p. 32).

As to the statement of the name of the party, a firm or trade name is not sufficient, so that a conviction against "Harrison & Company" is a mere nullity. (R. v. Harrison & Company, (1800) 8 T.R. 508.) If a person's name be unknown, and he refuses to disclose it, he can be described as a person unknown, and identified by some fact, e.g. that he is personally brought before the court by the keeper of the prison, but it is not sufficient to describe him merely as a person unknown (R. v. —, (1822) R. & R. 489).

By the Interpretation Act, 1889, 52 & 53 Vict. c. 63, s. 2 (1), the expression "person" in any Act of Parliament shall, unless the contrary intention appears, include a body corporate, so that, for instance, a limited liability company can be convicted under sect. 6 of the Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (Pearks, Gunston, & Tee, Ltd., v. Ward, (1902) 2 K.B. 1), under the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (see Kirshenboim v. Salmon & Gluckstein, Ltd., (1898) 2 Q.B. 19), for causing deleterious matter to flow into a river contrary to 5 & 6 Vict. c. 10, s. 80 (see R. (King) v. Antrim JJ., (1906) 2 I.R. 298), under the Sale of Poisons (Ireland) Act, 1870, 33 & 34 Vict. c. 26, s. 2 (Lawler v. Egan, (1901) 2 I.R. 589), and under the Diseases of Animals Act, 1894 (R. (Langtree) v. Dublin JJ., (1904) 4 N.I.J.R. 182). But the statute does not retrospectively enlarge the meaning of the term "person" used in a statute, when such term plainly meant natural person at the time the particular Act was passed (O'Duffy v. Jaffe, (1904) 2 I.R. 27). It was held that "a contrary intention" appeared, and that no prosecution lay against a company, in the following cases:—under the Pharmacy Act, 1868 (Pharmaceutical Society v. London & Provincial Supply Association, Ltd., (1880) 5 A.C. 857), or under the Pharmacy Act (Ir.), 1875, and the Pharmacy Act (Ir.) 1875, Amendment Act, 1890 (Pharmaceutical Society of Ireland v. Boyd, (1896) 2 I.R. 394), or under the Dentists Act, 1878 (O'Duffy v. Jaffe, supra), or under sect. 41 of the Lotteries Act, 1823 (Hawke v. Hulton, (1909) 2 K.B. 93). The liability of a corporation to indictment, and the procedure thereon, are dealt with, p. 20; as to service of a summons on a limited company, see p. 48.

offence.

The time of the offence should be stated with reasonable particularity. It is not essential that the precise day should be named, it being sufficient to say, between such a day and such a day (R. v. Chandler, (1702) 1 Salk. 378). Where an information, laid on the 16th November, charged the defendant with having on the 5th of October, and on divers other days and times between the said 5th of October and the laying of the information, being then the occupier of a certain house, knowingly and wilfully kept and used the same for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto, a conviction for so keeping and using the house on the 8th of November was held good (Onley v. Gee, (1861) 30 L.J.M.C. 222). The prosecution formally charged, and at the hearing endeavoured to prove, the offence of carrying a gun without a licence on the 5th November. When this broke down, they gave evidence of a similar offence on the 20th December, and the justices, without any amendment of the summons, convicted of the offence on the 20th December. Held, without deciding as to whether the conviction could have stood had the summons been amended, that the conviction was bad (R. (McBarron) v. Fermanagh JJ., (1907) 41 I.L.T.R. 134).

offence, &c.

The offence must be stated fully, accurately, and with certainty. Convictions are frequently upset by reason of failure to comply with this rule; and such failure usually consists in—(a) the non-statement, or incomplete or incorrect statement, of the ingredients necessary to constitute the offence; (b) uncertainty, usually where several offences are charged in the same summons, conjunctively or disjunctively, and the order does not state upon which charge the conviction is made.

First, every necessary ingredient in the offence must be stated. The general rule is that it is sufficient to state the offence in the words of the statute (R. v. Speed, (1701) 1 Ld. Raym. 583; Davis v. Nest, (1833) 6 C. & P. 167; R. v. Grant, (1857) 21 J.P. 70; R. v. Latchford, Judgment of Superior Courts, 282.<sup>1</sup> The following, however, is Mr. Justice Wills' criticism of sect. 39 of the English Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, which provides that "the description of any offence in the words of the Act creating the offence, or in similar words, shall be sufficient in law":—"I do not think for a moment that it was intended to relieve persons who had to draw convictions from inserting anything that was necessary as an ingredient of the offence of which the particular defendant has been found guilty. When one comes to the description of the offence itself, then it is quite sufficient if it is described in the terms of the statute, however general they may be. At the same time the old rule must prevail, that whatever is necessary to show that the person convicted has done something which brought him within the words of the statute must still be specified" (Smith v. Moody, (1903) 1 K.B. 56, at p. 61).

The following are instances where convictions were quashed, as not fully or accurately stating the offence:—

That defendant killed deer in a certain place, the offence being to kill deer in an enclosed place (R. v. Moore, (1702) 2 Ld. Raym. 791).

That defendant conveyed foreign brandy in casks then and there liable to forfeiture contrary to the Acts for the prevention of smuggling: held, bad, as the facts which formed the ground of liability to forfeiture were not stated (ex parte Smith, (1823) 3 D. & R. 461).

That defendant fraudulently and clandestinely removed certain goods from certain premises to prevent X. from distraining the said goods for the arrears of rent due to the said X. out of the said premises: held, bad, as not showing (which was the essence of the offence) that defendant was a tenant to X. (R. v. Davis, (1833) 5 B. & Ad. 551).

The defendant was *fin*ed on a charge that he was found on board a vessel within one league of the coast, such vessel being liable to forfeiture. Being on such a vessel anywhere was an offence. Being on such a vessel within one league of the coast was also an offence, but not punishable by a pecuniary penalty: held, that the conviction was ambiguous and should be quashed (R. v. Pereira, (1834) 2 A. & E. 375).

That the defendant allowed beer to be consumed in licensed premises “at other times than that prescribed by order of petty sessions,” as not stating the time fixed by the justices and the hour at which the beer was consumed (Newman v. Hardwicke, (1838) 8 A. & E. 124).

That defendant had “misapplied” moneys, the offence created by the statute being in the words “purloin, embezzle, willfully waste, or misapply moneys” (Carpenter v. Mason, (1840) 12 A. & E. 629).

That the defendant entered on complainant’s lands to look for game without adding the word “there” (Fletcher v. Calthrop, (1845) 6 Q.B. 880; R. v. Waterford JJ., (1869) 18 W.R. 164; but see observations of Madden, J., in R. (McCarron) v. Donegal JJ., (1907) 2 I.R. at p. 388).

Section 42 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, gives power to justices to determine cases of common assault; and section 43, cases of assaults on persons not exceeding fourteen years of age, or assaults which, in the opinion of the justices, cannot be sufficiently punished as common assaults. To found a good conviction under section 43, the circumstances, e.g., that the person assaulted was under fourteen, justifying a conviction under the section must appear (In re Rice, (1873) I.R. 7 C.L. 74; see Connor v. Quest, (1906) 71 J.P. 62).

That the defendant was guilty of “corrupt practices” (which by the statute includes bribery, treating, and undue influence), without specifying the nature of the corrupt practice (R. v. Ingall, (1880) 44 J.P. 552, 42 L.T. 533).

That the defendant did permit smoke to escape from his said engine, contrary to the bye-laws of the Board of Trade. The bye-law was, “no smoke or steam shall be emitted from the engines so as to constitute any reasonable ground of complaint to the passengers or the public,” and accordingly the conviction should have stated that the emission of the smoke was such as to constitute a reasonable ground of complaint to the passengers or the public, specifying which (Catterill v. Lempriere, (1890) 24 Q.B.D. 634).

That the defendant wrongfully and without legal authority followed the complainant in a disorderly manner with two or more other persons in certain streets, “with a view to compel him to abstain from doing acts which he had a legal right to do”: held, bad, because these acts should have been specified (R. v. McKenzie, (1892) 2 Q.B. 519; see, and compare, Ex parte Wilkins, (1895) 18 Cox 161).

That the defendant did assault A.B.: held, bad, as it did not aver that A.B. had refused to prosecute (R. (Ryan) v. Wicklow JJ., (1892) 30 L.R.I. 633, 27 I.L.T. & S.J. 9; R. (Peane) v. Galway JJ., (1901) 35 I.L.T.R. 156). That the defendant did unlawfully assault Kathleen Symmons, who declines to prosecute: held, bad, inasmuch as the statute only gave power to the complainant to prosecute if the party aggrieved had declined or refused to prosecute, and that the mere recital of the words, “who declines to prosecute,” did not amount to a statement that the justices had so found on the hearing of the complaint (R. (Johnston) v. Armagh JJ., (1909) 43 I.L.T.R. 112).

That the defendant, with a view to compel the complainant to abstain from working for X, which he had a legal right to do, wrongfully and without legal authority did injure "the property" of the complainant: held, bad, as the property should have been specified (Smith v. Moody, (1903) 1 K.B. 56).

That the defendants riotously, etc., assembled, and did assault "certain constables": held, bad, as the names of the constables were not stated (R. (Sheehan) v. Tipperary JJ. (1903) 37 1 L.T.R. 48, 3 N.I.J.R. 121).

That the defendant wilfully interfered with a passenger, because the offence under the bye-law is wilful interference with the comfort of the passengers (R. (Meehan) v. Louth JJ., (1905) 39 1 L.T.R. 23).

"That the defendant placed goods on the footpath" contrary to the provisions of the Towns Improvement (Ir.) Act, 1854, s. 72, without averring that he did so to the obstruction, annoyance, or danger of the residents or passengers (R. (Bunting) v. Antrim JJ., (1905) 39 1 L.T.R. 82).

A conviction of the owner of a motor car under s. 1 (3) of the Motor Car Act, 1903, stated that the defendant did unlawfully refuse to give the name and address of the person who at a specified time and place was driving the defendant's motor car, such name and address being required in order that proceedings might be taken against him under s. 1 of the Motor Car Act, 1903, and the statutory rules and orders: held, that the conviction was bad, in that it did not state what offence the driver of the motor car was alleged to have committed (R. v. Hankey, (1905) 2 K.B. 687).

By section 25 of the Malicious Damage Act, 1861, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, whosoever shall "unlawfully and maliciously" damage, etc., any fence shall pay a certain penalty. By section 52 of the same statute whosoever shall unlawfully or maliciously damage any property "for which no punishment is hereinbefore provided" shall be subject to a certain penalty. The defendant was convicted for wilfully damaging a hedge and paling of the complainant, the conviction purporting to be under section 52. Held (1), that the hedge and paling, being a fence, was property for which a punishment was provided by section 25, and that therefore the conviction was not sustainable under section 52, and (2), that, considered as a conviction under section 25, it was bad, because the section uses the words "unlawfully and maliciously," whereas the conviction merely stated "wilfully" (R. (O'Toole) v. Drury, (1907) 41 1 L.T.R. 183).

Under the statute, and an exemption order made thereunder, the defendant was obliged to dip his sheep in a dip approved of by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries between the 15th September and 30th September. The defendant dipped his sheep on the 26th September, but not in an approved dip: held, that a conviction for not dipping the sheep in an approved dip on the 26th September was bad, as the offence was the failure to dip in an approved dip between the 15th September and 30th September (Bingley v. Quest, (1907) 71 J.P. 443).

(2) Examples of defective orders.

The following are instances of defective orders (for distinction between orders and convictions, see p. 107):—

"That a dispute had arisen," etc., without saying "in a fair or market," the statute conferring jurisdiction being limited to sales "in a fair or market" (R. v. Campbell, (1853) 3 I.C.L.R. 586).

An order to enter lands for the purpose of obtaining road material under section 162 of the Grand Jury Act must show jurisdiction upon its face (Butler v. Leahy, (1867) 1 I.L.T. 477), and is bad if it fails—(1) to state that the contractor is a contractor for the repair of the road in pursuance of a resolution of the county council or (2) to state that the justices were satisfied that the materials could not conveniently be procured elsewhere (Fitzpatrick v. Pine, (1861) 13 I.C.L.R. 32; Butler v. Leahy, (1867) 1 I.L.T. 477; R. (Mayo) v. Dublin JJ., (1884) 16 L.R.I. 11), or (3) to limit right of entry to a definite time (R. (Bentham) v. Dublin JJ., (1884) 14 L.R.I. 443; R. (Fitzgerald) v. Limerick JJ., (1893) 27 1 L.T.R. 35; R. (Murphy) v. Wexford JJ., (1894) 2 I.R. 81, 28 I.L.T.R. 17; R. (Guinness) v. Louth JJ., (1898) 2 I.R. 248, 33 I.L.T.R. 9);<sup>1</sup> or (4) to negative the statutory exemptions (R. (Murphy) v. Wexford JJ., (1894) 2 I.R. 81, 28 I.L.T.R. 17; see also R. (Kennedy) v. Dublin JJ., (1909) 43 I.L.T.R. 271);<sup>2</sup> or (5) to define the part of the lands to be entered (Dove v. Westmeath JJ., (1904) 38 I.L.T.R. 87). An order which prescribes a route for the contractor to enter is bad (R. (Coyle) v. Monaghan JJ., (1908) 2 I.R. 1). Where a statute authorizes the justices to make an order for the payment of "reasonable remuneration" to a medical officer who examines a dangerous lunatic, and the order awards him a sum for reasonable remuneration for his loss of time and professional services: held, that the order was bad (King v. Guardians of Delvin Union, (1908) 2 I.R. 15). An order under the Public Health Act to abate a nuisance is bad if it merely directs the defendant to carry out the necessary works, without specifying the works (R. (Clarke) v. Meath JJ., (1900) 34 I.L.T.R. 47; R. v. Wheately, (1885) 16 Q.B.D. 34).

Statement of offence.
(2) Examples of defective orders.

An order of justices upon a party requiring him to pay money to a person claiming it as a member of a friendly society must find in direct terms that the person applying is a member, that he is entitled to the money, and that the party against whom the application is made is, at the time, an officer of the society. An order served upon D. does not find him to be an officer by being directed to D., "steward of the said society," nor by reciting a complaint upon oath which states him to be so. An order does not show the applicant to be a member and entitled to the money by reciting that he made complaint upon oath, in which complaint he stated himself to be a member and the money to be due, though the order afterwards directed the money "so due and owing as aforesaid" to be paid (Day v. King, (1836) 5 A. & E. 359).

The English statute 48 Geo. 3, c. 75, enables justices to order payment by the county treasurer to churchwardens of all necessary and proper costs and expenses incurred in or about the execution of the Act (scil. by the burial of a dead body cast on shore). A justice's order which recites that he had ascertained the costs and expenses was held bad, because it did not show that the expenses were proper and necessary expenses incurred in or about the execution of the Act (R. v. Treasurer Co. Kent, (1889) 22 Q.B.D. 603).

The next fatal objection to a conviction is that it is uncertain. Uncertainty. An offence was charged under one statute which the Queen's Bench afterwards held was repealed by a later statute. The conviction might have been supported on the later statute, but, as the prosecutor and the justice both professed to proceed upon the earlier statute, the conviction was quashed (Mitchell v Brown, (1858) 1 E. & E. 267).

The objection of uncertainty is most commonly raised where several charges are included in the same summons, and the conviction does not specify upon which charge it is made. There is nothing to prevent a number of charges being laid in the same summons,<sup>1</sup> and the conviction may include a conviction on each one of the charges, provided that the conviction is sufficiently clear and explicit, and leaves no doubt that each and every one of the charges laid have been disposed of by the adjudication and judgment (see judgment of Palles, C.B., in Ex parte Stephens, (1889), Judgment of the Superior Courts, at p. 312; see also Conybeare's Case, ib., p. 327; Shea v. R., (1848) 12 I.L.R. 153; R. v. Swallow, (1799) 8 T.R. 284). Where one summons contains several charges there ought to be a distinct adjudication on each, just as in the case of an indictment, but such adjudications, though several for some purposes, form part of one order or conviction (per Gibson, J., in R. (Daly) v. Cork JJ., (1898) 2 I.R. 694, 696). Where one summons contained two charges, and the justices made an order of conviction upon one, and marked the other "no rule," it was held that the wrongful order "no rule" did not vitiate the conviction on the other charge (Ex parte Conybeare, (1889) Judgments of the Superior Court, 324).

But where several charges are laid, either disjunctively or conjunctively, a conviction is bad which does not specify upon which charge the conviction is had. The following are instances where several offences were charged disjunctively, and, the conviction, being general, was held bad:—

That the defendant did kill, take, and destroy, or attempt to kill, take, and destroy (R. v. Sadler, (1787) 2 Chitty 519); that the defendant sold “beer or ale” (R. v. North, (1825) 6 D. and R. 143); that the defendant had casks used or intended to be used (R. v. Pain, (1826) 7 D. and R. 678); that the defendant imported or caused to be imported foreign silk (R. v. Morley, (1827) 1 Y. and J. 221); that the defendant did unlawfully open or keep open his licensed premises for the sale of intoxicating liquor, or did unlawfully expose the same for sale, or sell same on the licensed premises (R. (Collins) v. Waterford JJ., (1892) 27 I.L.T.R. 54); that the defendant had and kept a “still, still-head, or worm of a still” (R. (Moore) v. Wexford JJ., (1903) 37 I.L.T.R. 64, 3 N.I.J.R. 129); that the defendant deserted or wilfully neglected to maintain his wife (R. (Ferris) v. Londonderry JJ., (1903) 3 N.I.J.R. 242); that the defendant drove a motor car “at a speed or in a manner which was dangerous to the public” (R. v. Wells, (1904) 20 Cox 671); that the defendant did cruelly beat, illtreat, overdrive, or torture, or cause or procure such to be done, a horse his property (R. (Vaughy) v. Meath JJ., (1904) 38 I.L.T.R. 12).

In the following cases, it was held that the rule against a general conviction upon a summons charging offences disjunctively did not apply:—

The defendant was charged that he did “use, fish, or erect a draft net for eels,” etc., and the conviction was general; held, that as the word “erect” was not applicable to a draft net, it was mere surplusage, and that as “use” and “fish” were synonymous terms, there was only one effective charge, and the order was good (R. (Coyle) v. Tyrone JJ., (1908) 42 I.L.T.R. 26). A conviction that the defendant loitered in a certain street “for the purpose of bookmaking or betting or wagering, or agreeing to bet or wager, or paying or receiving or settling bets” contrary to the Street Betting Act, 1906, was held good (Stenhouse v. Dykes, (1908) S.C. (J.) 61; cf. Keenan v. Collie, (1907) 41 I.L.T.R. 226).

charged conjunctively,
general.

The following are instances where, several offences being charged conjunctively, the conviction was set aside as not specifying upon which charge the conviction was had:—

That the defendant kept his house open for the sale of beer, and sold beer, and suffered the same to be drunk and consumed in the house, during prohibited hours (Newman v. Bendyshe, (1839) 10 A. and E. 11). That the defendant did neglect to comply with a certain notice . . . specifying certain matters therein mentioned in respect of which the laying out or construction of the said streets was in contravention of the bye-laws relating to new streets, and requiring him . . . to do the work therein specified which have been omitted by him to be done contrary to the form of the said bye-laws; held, bad, both as referring to two offences, and on the ground of uncertainty (R. v. Slater, (1903) 67 J.P. 299). That the defendant did go and enter upon the lands of the complainant, provided with a gun to look for, set, spring, start, follow, shoot, course, hunt, or otherwise pursue, take, or destroy game (R. (M'Curran) v. Donegal JJ., (1907) 2 I.R. 386, 40 I.L.T.R. 197). That the defendant did, on the 23rd and 29th days of May, 1909, unlawfully exhibit . . . a picture, and printed or written matter of an indecent or obscene nature, on the ground that two dates were charged, and the conviction was general (R. (Ross) v. Cork JJ., (1908) 42 I.L.T.R. 230). That the defendant, during prohibited hours, unlawfully opened his licensed premises for the sale of intoxicating liquor, and unlawfully allowed same to be consumed (R. (Neely) v. Down JJ., (1908) 42 I.L.T.R. 111). That the defendant did cruelly illtreat, abuse, and torture a grey gelding (Johnson v. Ncedham, (1909) 1 K.B. 626).

In the following cases it was held that the convictions were good, one offence only being charged in each case :—

An information charging the defendant with having knowingly harboured and concealed, and knowingly permitted and suffered to be harboured and concealed (R. v. M'Naghten, (1849) 9 I.L.R. 93), or with having forged, offered, and uttered a certificate under 29 & 30 Vict. c. 100, s. 10, is good, as charging only one offence (Annakin v. Smith, (1868) 32 J.P. 759). A charge of aiding, abetting, counselling, and procuring (Stacey v. Whitehurst, (1865) 18 C.B.N.S. 344) or of taking, killing, and pursuing game (Lanton v. Jeffries, (1894) 58 J.P. 318) constitutes but one offence. Section 72 of the Highway Act, 1835 (E.), makes it an offence to lay any substance on the highway "to the injury, interruption, or personal danger of any person travelling thereon": held, that a conviction for having laid matter on the highway "to the interruption and personal danger of any person travelling thereon" is not bad for duplicity, for the act of laying the matter on the highway, followed by any one or more of the consequences above mentioned, constitutes but once offence (Smith v. Perry, (1906) 1 K.B. 262). A conviction that the defendants did persistently follow certain persons, and did watch and beset the working-place and houses of such persons contrary to the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875, s. 7: held, good, as the persistently following and the watching and besetting were not alternative charges (Wilson v. Renton, (1910) 47 S.L.R. 209).

Joint offences.

Section 78 of the County Officers and Courts (Ireland) Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 56), enacts as follows: "In all cases of summary jurisdiction any exception, exemption, proviso, qualification, or excuse, whether it does or does not accompany the description of the offence complained of, may be proved by the defendant, but need not be specified or negatived in the information or complaint; and if so specified or negatived, no proof in relation to the matters so specified or negatived shall be required from the complainant, unless evidence shall be given by the defendant concerning the same."<sup>1</sup> The question as to when it is necessary, in the summons and conviction, to negative an exception, is frequently one of difficulty. The rule is thus laid down by Gibson, J., in R. (Sheahan) v. Cork JJ., (1907) 2 I.R. at p. 11: "Does the statute make the act described an offence subject to particular exceptions, qualifications, etc., which, where applicable, make the prima facie offence an innocent act? Or does the statute make an act, prima facie innocent, an offence when done under certain conditions? In the former case, the exception need not be negatived; in the latter, words of exception may constitute the gist of the offence?"<sup>2</sup> Accordingly, where it is an offence under 13 & 14 Vict. c. 88, s. 40, to use, for the purpose of taking fish, any gaff (except when used solely as auxiliary to angling with rod and line for the purpose of removing fish from any legal weir or box by the owner or occupier thereof), it was held that a summons and conviction were good although neither negatived that the use was for a purpose excepted by the section (ib.; also reported 40 I.L.T.R. 163); see In re Turner, (1846) 9 Q.B. 80; R. v. Corden, (1769) 4 Burr. 2279; Re Geswood, (1853) 2 El. & Bl. 952). Instances of orders, as distinct from convictions, which have been set aside as not negativing exemptions are R. (Murphy) v. Wexford JJ., (1894) 2 I.R. 81; R. (Kennedy) v. Dublin JJ., (1909) 43 I.L.T.R. 271, noted, pp. 170, 173). It

<sup>2</sup> See also dictum of Williams, J., in In re Turner, (1846) 9 Q.B., at p. 81:—"I have always thought that the law was properly laid down by Lord Mansfield in R. v. Corden, that, if the fact, as charged, may be consistent with the innocence of the prisoner, no offence is charged."

is submitted that section 78 of the County Officers and Courts Act does not apply to such orders. The Belfast Harbour Commissioners made a bye-law, under their statutory powers, prohibiting persons addressing a crowd on any quay, &c., their property, without permission in writing from the secretary: Held, in a prosecution for breach of the bye-law, that the onus did not lie on the Commissioners to show that such permission had not been given (Larkin v. Belfast Harbour Commissioners, (1908) 2 I.R. 214, per Wright and Dodd, JJ.).

cal terms.

It is not necessary that the conviction should contain the words "against the peace" (R. v. Chandler, (1701) 1 Ld. Raym. 581); or "unlawfully," or "knowingly," unless either of these words be distinctly used in the Act as part of the description of the offence (Paley, 8th ed., 200). Neither will the use of such words cure the vices of a defective conviction (ib.). It is not necessary to use the phrase "contrary to the statute" (ib.).

Description of property.

Property should be identified by description, number, and, where value is essential, by the value (see R. v. Gibbs, (1722) 1 Str. 497; R. v. Catherall, (1731) 2 Str. 900). For instance, it is necessary to specify the value where the justices are empowered to award compensation according to the amount of damage, or where their jurisdiction depends on the value. It is sufficient to describe property belonging to partners, joint-tenants, parceners, or tenants in common, as the property of anyone of such persons who shall be named, and of another or others without naming them (Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 38).

Conditions precedent to prosecution.

Some statutes make certain conditions (e.g. consents and the like) necessary before proceedings can be instituted. In such cases proceedings are considered to be instituted at the time the information is laid, and the proceedings are not sustainable unless the condition precedent is performed at the date of the information or summons (Thorp v. Priestnall, (1897) 1 Q.B. 159; Department of Agriculture v. Porter, (1910) 44 I.L.T.R. 13).<sup>1</sup> As to waiver, see p. 109.

Adjudication
ment.

The punishment awarded must be certain, definite, and authorized by the statute. A judgment for too little is as faulty as a judgment for too much (Whitehead v. R., (1845) 7 Q.B. 582; Brophy v. Ward, (1859) 4 Ir. Jur. N.S. 235; R. v. Salomons, (1786) 1 T.R. 252).<sup>2</sup> If the offence be a second offence, this should appear (see infra). The following are cases where the conviction was set aside on the ground that the punishment was not warranted by the statute:—

Conviction imposing
ment.

A conviction ordering a forfeiture where the statute did not authorize a forfeiture (R. (O'Sullivan) v. Kerry JJ., (1901) 1 N.I.J.R. 180); a conviction directing an offence under the Licensing Act, and not recordable, to be recorded (R. (Haslett) v. Fermanagh JJ., (1903) 37 I.L.T.R. 120, 3 N.I.J.R. 109); a conviction under the Malicious Damage Act (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 52), awarding as compensation to the complainant a sum beyond the amount of damage actually proven (R. (Crilly) v. Londonderry JJ., (1904) 38 I.L.T.R. 136); where the statute directed that the conviction should state whether the conviction was or was not to be recorded, but the conviction was silent upon the point (R. (Sheeran) v. Dublin JJ., (1905) 40 I.L.T.R. 22). Where a second conviction was had for selling drink without a licence and defendant was fined £4, being an amount within the jurisdiction as to second offences, but in excess of it so far as regards first offences, and the conviction did not state that the conviction was a second conviction; held, that the conviction should have shown upon its face jurisdiction to impose the punishment, and failing to do this it should be quashed (R. (Ryan) v. Kilkenny JJ., (1903) 4 N.I.J.R. 4; Murray v. Thomson, (1888) 22 Q.B.D. 142). It was held in R. v. Fowler, (1894) 64 L.J.M.C. 9, that an offence which in fact is a second offence may be treated as a first offence, unless the prosecution legally prove the first offence, but this case was disapproved in R. v. Beesby, (1909) 1 K.B. 849. A conviction, not followed by the adjudication of any punishment, reckons as a first offence, and a conviction following same should be treated as a second offence (R. (Meehan) v. Donegal JJ., (1904) 38 I.L.T.R. 153; R. v. Blaby, (1894) 2 Q.B. 170).<sup>1</sup> A conviction awarding a month's imprisonment in default was set aside, where the term of imprisonment was in excess of that prescribed by the Small Penalties Act (R. (Bulfin) v. Queen's Co. JJ., (1902) 2 N.I.J.R. 82). If a penalty imposed by a statute is in Irish currency, an order imposing that amount in British currency will be bad, as being for an excessive amount (R. v. Creagh, (1852) 5 Ir. Jur. 109); and if the order imposes the penalty in Irish currency, stating that it is Irish currency, it will, having regard to 33 & 34 Vict. c. 10, be void (Noble v. Hughes, (1896) 2 I.W.L.R. 90). The order must specify the amount of the costs (R. v. Payne, (1824) 4 D. & R. 72).

Where there is an order for payment of penalty or compensation, it should be to a persona designata; an order directing payment to "the aggrieved party, to wit, the representatives of the late A.B., owner," is bad (R. (Williams) v. King's Co. JJ., (1901) 2 N.I.J.R. 22).

A charge of illegal fishing having been dismissed at petty sessions, and appeal having been taken, the order of quarter sessions was "that the dismissal on the merits be reversed," and that a certain fine and costs should be paid by defendant: Held, that though there was no express adjudication of guilt, there was a sufficient implied adjudication of guilt, and that the order was good (R. (Conway) v. Tyrone JJ., (1906) 2 I. R. 164).

As to when it is necessary to order distress, see p. 67, ante.

As to necessity, when ordering imprisonment in default, to insert "unless said sum be sooner paid," see p. 67, ante.

Where the imprisonment is to be without hard labour, the conviction need not say "without hard labour," for that is implied (R. (Tavener) v. Tyrone JJ., (1909) 2 I.R. 763, 43 I.L.T.R. 262).

One summons was brought, alleging eight trespasses on different days, and the justices imposed fines in respect of each trespass and made up eight distinct orders, with five shillings costs in each: Held, that the orders were bad, that the various trespasses mentioned in the summons were one case; and that there should have been one order only thereon, with costs not exceeding twenty shillings, the limit laid down by the Petty Sessions Act (R. (Daly) v. Cork JJ., (1898) 2 I.R. 694; see also R. v. Rawson, (1909) 2 K.B. 748; R. v. Cable, (1906) 1 K.B. 719, noted, p. 106).

Where there is a material variation in the appropriation of the penalty from the directions of the Act of Parliament the conviction will be bad (Paley, 8th ed. 303; Griffith v. Harries, (1837) 2 M. & W. 335; Chaddock v. Wilbraham, (1848) 5 C.B. 645; cf. Re Boothroyd, (1846) 15 M. & W. 1).

Where a statute imposes a penalty for a second offence, care must be taken that the first offence is of the character mentioned in the statute. Section 3 of the Licensing Act, 1872, enacts certain penalties for selling intoxicating liquors without a licence, and increased penalties for a second offence. The defendant having been convicted under the section, the justices imposed a conviction as for a second offence, holding that a previous conviction of defendant under s. 17 of 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 85, of selling beer without a licence, constituted a first offence. Held, that the justices were wrong, for there could only be a conviction under section 3 of the Act of 1872 for a second offence, where the conviction for the first offence had been under the same statute (In re Authers, (1889) 22 Q.B.D. 345). Section 1 of the Night Poaching Act, 1828, enacts penalties for the offence of entering by night upon land with a gun or other instrument for the purposes of taking game, and other penalties for repeated offences. Held, that a previous conviction under section 9 of the same statute of the misdemeanour of entering upon land by night armed and to the number of three or more for the purpose of taking game, was not a previous conviction within section 1 (R. v. Lines, (1902) 1 Q.B. 199).<sup>1</sup>

The defendant was convicted of loitering for the purpose of street betting under section 1 of the Street Betting Act, 1906, which imposes a penalty of £10 for a first offence, and £20 for a second offence. The defendant had been previously convicted under a county council bye-law which made it an offence to frequent a street for the purpose of betting. Held, that the justices were not entitled to inflict a fine for a second offence, inasmuch as the second offence should be under the same statute as that creating the original offence (R. v. Stone, (1908) 99 L.T. 88). Where a first offence has been committed, the justices, when the previous conviction is proved on oath before them, are bound to treat the case as a second offence, even though it is not charged as such in the information or complaint (Murray v. Thompson, (1888) 22 Q.B.D. 142). It was also held that, where, after conviction, and before sentence, the justices were told by a police constable, not upon oath, that the defendant had been previously convicted, they were bound to take cognizance of the previous conviction, and to treat the case as a charge of a second offence (R. v. Beesby, (1909) 1 K.B. 849).<sup>2</sup> Where a defendant was convicted under the Licensing Acts of suffering gaming on his licensed premises, and the order was, "convicted and discharged with a caution," it was held that, though this order was bad upon its face, yet it was an effective conviction within section 20 of the Licensing (Ir.) Act, 1874, and that a subsequent conviction should be treated as a second conviction (R. (Meehan) v. Donegal JJ., (1904) 38 I.L.T.R. 153; see also R. v. Blaby, (1894) 2 Q.B. 170). The statute may, however, expressly declare that any offence against any other Act of Parliament shall be reckoned as a first offence (see, for instance, Malicious Damage Act, 1861, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, ss. 22, 24. Similar provisions are contained in the other statutes known as the Criminal Law Consolidation Acts, 1861, 24 & 25 Vict. cc. 96-100). Where the order imposes an increased penalty for a second conviction, the fact that it is a second conviction should appear upon the face of the order, so as to show jurisdiction under the statute to impose the increased penalty (R. (Ryan) v. Kilkenny JJ., (1903) 4 N.I.J.R. 4).

Where an order of forfeiture, though illegal, was made at the instance of the defendant himself, the King's Bench Division refused, on the defendant's application, to set it aside (R. (Findlay) v. Armagh JJ., (1898) 5 I.W.L.R. 4). As to waiver, see p. 109.

Adjudication
ment.
Defendant estopped by acquiescence.

The limits of power of amendment can scarcely be said to be clearly defined. There are three sections dealing with the matter.

In cases of summary proceedings no variance between the information or complaint and the evidence adduced in support thereof as to the time at which the offence or cause of complaint shall be alleged to have been committed, or to have arisen, shall be deemed material if it be proved that such information or complaint was in fact laid or made within the time limited by law for laying or making the same; and any variance between such information or complaint and the evidence adduced in support thereof as to the place in which the same shall be alleged to have been committed or to have arisen, shall not be deemed material, provided that the said offence or cause be proved to have been committed or to have arisen within the jurisdiction of the justice or justices by whom such information or complaint shall be heard and determined, and no objection shall be taken or allowed in any proceedings to any information, complaint, summons, warrant or other form of procedure under this Act for any alleged defect therein in substance or in form, or for any variance between any information, complaint, or summons and the evidence adduced on the part of the complainant or prosecutor at the hearing of the case in summary proceedings, or at the examination of the witnesses by a justice or justices in proceedings for indictable offences. Provided always that, if any such variance or defect shall appear to the justice or justices at the hearing to be such that the defendant has been thereby deceived or misled, it shall be lawful for such justice or justices, upon such terms as he or they shall think fit, to adjourn the hearing of the case to some future day, and in the meantime, in cases of proceedings for offences, to commit the said defendant to jail, or to discharge him upon his entering into a recognizance conditioned for his appearance at the time and place to which such hearing shall be so adjourned (Petty Sessions Act, s. 39).

amendment.
Statutes.

The court to which a case<sup>1</sup> is transmitted under this Act shall hear and determine the question or questions of law arising thereon, and shall thereupon reverse, affirm, or amend the determination in respect of which the case has been stated, or remit the matter to the justice or justices with the opinion of the court thereon, or may make such other order in relation to the matter as to the court may seem fit (Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1857, 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, s. 6).

If on the trial of any appeal to any court of general quarter sessions of the peace in Ireland, or to the chairman of the county, against any conviction or order made or pronounced by any justice or justices of the peace, any objection shall be taken on account of any omission or mistake in the making or drawing up of such conviction or order, or any variance between the facts stated in such conviction or order and the evidence adduced in support thereof, and it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the court that sufficient grounds were in proof before the justice or justices making such conviction or order to have authorized the drawing up thereof free from the said omission or mistake, or that such variance is in some point not material to the merits of the case, it shall be lawful for the court to amend such conviction or order on such terms as it shall think fit, and to adjudicate thereupon as if no such omission, or mistake, or variance had existed (Civil Bill Courts (Ireland) Act, 1864, 27 & 28 Vict. c. 99, s. 49).

No conviction or order made by any justice or justices shall be held void, or shall be quashed by reason of any defect, omission, or variance in the summons, charge, or information upon which the same shall purport to have been made, provided that such defect, omission, or variance shall not have misled or prejudiced the defendant, or have affected the merits of the case, and the justice or justices at the original hearing, or any court of appeal or superior court before whom the decision of any such justice or justices shall afterwards come, may, upon such terms as shall appear just, make any amendment in any summons, charge, or information which shall appear to be requisite for the purpose of making the conviction or order conformable with the same, or of raising the real question at issue and deciding the case as justice shall require (County Officers and Courts (Ireland) Act, 1877, 40 & 41 Vict. c. 56, s. 76).

amendment.
Variance as to date or place.

Section 39 of the Petty Sessions Act<sup>1</sup> deals with (1) variance as to time or place between the information or complaint and the evidence; (2) defect in substance or in form, in the information, complaint, summons, warrant, or other form of procedure; (3) variance between the information, complaint, or summons and the evidence.

No difficulty arises as to a variance as to date or place. In such cases, the justices should amend and proceed to adjudicate, giving the defendant an adjournment should he be in any way taken by surprise (Mayor of Exeter v. Heaman, (1877) 37 L.T. 534). An offence of carrying a gun without a licence was charged to have been committed on the 5th November, and the prosecutor adduced evidence in support thereof, but the evidence broke down, whereupon the prosecutor called a witness to prove the commission of the offence on 20th December, and the justices, without amending the summons, convicted the defendant "of carrying a gun in December, 1906." Held, that this was not the mere mistake in the summons as to a date, but an attempt to substitute an entirely new offence, that there was under the Excise Act, under which the prosecution was brought, no power to do so, and that the conviction should be quashed (R. (McBarron) v. Fermanagh JJ., (1907) 41 I.L.T.R. 134).

Other variance:
defect in substance or form.

What is a defect in substance or in form? What is a variance, other than a mere variance as to date or place, between the complaint and the evidence? These are questions upon which authority is scanty. An information under 4 Geo. 4, c. 34, s. 3, giving power to justices to determine disputes between masters and apprentices, described the defendant as having contracted to serve "T. B. and his partners." At the hearing it appeared that the contract of service was between the defendant and "T. B. on behalf of himself and his partners, constituting the R. M. & H. Coal Company (Limited)": held, a mere variance (Whittle v. Frankland, (1862) 2 B. & S. 49, 26 J.P. 372). In an information for malicious injury to property under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 52, where the ownership is laid in several persons, and it appears that only one of these is the legal owner, this being a variance within the section, the justices should not dismiss the information, but ought to amend and hear the case (Ralph v. Hurrell, (1875) 44 L.J.M.C. 145, 32 L.T. 816). On the hearing of a charge it was objected that the information disclosed two offences (contrary to section 10 of the English Summary Jurisdiction Act),<sup>1</sup> and the magistrate dismissed the case. Held, that although the prosecutor might have been required to elect upon which charge he would proceed, the inclusion of two offences in one information was "a defect in substance"<sup>2</sup> within section 1 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, and the justices were wrong in dismissing the information (Rodgers v. Richards, (1892) 1 Q.B. 555).

The non-statement in the summons of the particulars of the offence as required by section 10 of the Food and Drugs Act, 1879, is a defect within the section (Neal v. Devenish, (1894) 1 Q.B. 544); but the non-fulfilment of the requirements of section 19 of the Food and Drugs Act, 1899, is not a matter capable of amendment (Batt v. Mattinson, (1900) 82 L.T. 800).

Where the evidence discloses an offence different from that charged in the summons, can the justices amend and convict? A number of English cases seem to decide that the corresponding English section gives them no power to do so. Thus, where the summons charged drunkenness and riotous behaviour under 10 & 11 Vict. c. 89, s. 29, and the justices convicted of simple drunkenness under 21 Jac. 1, c. 7, s. 3, the conviction was held bad, and not curable by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 1<sup>1</sup> (Martin v. Pridgeon, (1859) 1 E. & E. 778, 28 L.J.M.C. 179; Soden v. Cray, (1862) 7 L.T. 324). So also, where the defendant was charged with assaulting a constable in the execution of his duty, under the Municipal Corporations Act (5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 81), and the conviction was for common assault under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 72 (R. v. Brickhall, (1864) 33 L.J.M.C. 156), and where the charge was for keeping or using a common gaming-house, and the conviction was for having the management of a room for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto (Blake v. Beech, (1876) 1 Ex. D. 320), the convictions were set aside. But in a recent English case, in which the summons charged an offence under s. 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (sale of adulterated milk), and the evidence proved an offence under s. 3 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act Amendment Act, 1879 (that milk taken by an inspector was adulterated), it was held that the variance was curable under the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 1, and that the justices were right in convicting (Hiatt v. Ward, (1894) 70 L.T. 374, 17 Cox 736).<sup>2</sup>

Hiatt v. Ward, supra, has been followed by the King's Bench Division in Ireland, and applied to the construction of s. 76 of the County Officers and Courts (Ir.) Act, 1877, in the case of Keenan v. Costelloe, K.B.D. (Ir.), (1910) 44 I.L.T.R. 218, and noted fully infra, p. 97. In that case it was held that the King's Bench Division, on the hearing of a case stated, have power to substitute a new charge, for the purpose of raising the real issue between the parties. As section 76 applies not only to the superior court, but also to petty sessions and quarter sessions, it seems that Keenan v. Costelloe is equally in point so far as the hearing before the justices is concerned.

But, apart from the sections, have the justices power, the defendant

<sup>2</sup> This case was decided apparently without any reference being made to Martin v. Pridgeon, supra, in which, without the defendant being called on to argue, the conviction was quashed, solely because the defendant, being charged with one offence, "was convicted of a distinct statutory offence," or to Soden v. Cray, R. v. Brickhall, Blake v. Beech (supra), in which last three cases Martin v. Pridgeon was treated as of unquestionable authority. Gibson, J., in R. (Daly) v. Cork JJ., (1898) 2 I.R. at p. 697, referring also to Martin v. Pridgeon, R. v. Brickhall, and Blake v. Beech as unquestioned authorities, says:—"The complaint is a condition to the jurisdiction. A man cannot be found guilty of something which was not put forward as the subject of complaint." See also observations of Lord Russell in R. v. Jennings, (1896) 1 Q.B., at p. 66; R. (Ryan) v. Kilkenny JJ., (1871) I.R. 5 C.L. 394; and *R. v. being present before them, to hear and adjudicate on a fresh complaint brought against him? "A flood of authorities might be cited in support of the proposition that no process at all is necessary, when the accused, being bodily before the justices, the charge is made in his presence, and he appears and answers to it" (per Hawkins, J., in R. v. Hughes, (1879) 4 Q.B.D. 614, 626; see also, R. v. Stone, (1801) 1 East 639; R. (Lalor) v. Queen's Co. JJ., (1858) 7 I.C.L.R. 438; R. v. Shaw, (1865) 34 L.J.M.C. 169; *R. v. But in these cases the defendant appeared and answered to the charge without even applying for an adjournment (see judgment of Gibson, J., in R. (Daly) v. Cork JJ., (1898) 2 I.R. 694, 696). A complaint under the Sales of Food and Drugs Acts was made to two justices, but the summons was signed by another justice who had not heard the complaint.<sup>1</sup> The defendant at the hearing objected to the jurisdiction, but the justice was of opinion that the defect, if any, in the summons, was cured by the appearance of the defendant, heard the case, and convicted. Held, (1) that the summons was invalid, and (2) that the defect was not cured by the appearance of the defendant, as he appeared under protest, and that the provisions of s. 10 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1879, were imperative, and not merely directory, and that as no summons had been duly served in accordance with them, the magistrates had no jurisdiction (Dixon v. Wells, (1890) 25 Q.B.D. 249).<sup>2</sup> The following case seems to have turned upon the waiver by defendant of any objection to the jurisdiction. Persons were arrested and brought before the magistrates and charged with maliciously breaking glass. The arrest was made under warrant, but no summons was issued. The entry of the charge in the petty sessions book set out under the heading "Complainant": "The Queen at the prosecution of the R.I.C." The solicitor for the accused made no objection to the case being summarily disposed of, nor to the want of a summons. Evidence having been given, the magistrates convicted the prisoner. Held, the magistrates had jurisdiction to dispose of the case, and that as the parties charged had acquiesced in its being summarily dealt with, certiorari should not issue (R. (Madden) v. Galway JJ., (1879) 6 L.R. 1. 1). The most recent English case is R. v. Tabrum, (1907) 71 J.P. 325, in which the information and summons charged the defendant with having "unlawfully exposed to view . . . a certain indecent exhibition, to wit, certain obscene pictorial postcards." At the hearing, the solicitor for the prosecution stated that the summons was taken out under the Vagrancy Act, 1824, whereupon the defendant's solicitor objected that the summons did not set out an offence under that statute, as it did not charge the defendant with being a "rogue and a vagabond," but that the offence charged was that contained in section 28 of the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847, for which the maximum penalty was £2. No objection was taken by defendant's solicitor that the word "wilfully" contained in the Act of 1824 was omitted from the summons. The defendant's objection was overruled, and the justices convicted the defendant, and a proper conviction was drawn up against him under the Act of 1824, fining him £20. Held, that as defendant did not ask for an adjournment or require the summons to be amended, and as no information is required where a defendant is before the justices, the court would direct the justices to draw up a proper judgment.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>2</sup> In this case, Coleridge, L.C.J., appears to have doubted if the authorities would support the contention that a protest by a defendant to the jurisdiction would be a complete answer to the assumed jurisdiction. "I do not, however, feel able to decide in his favour on that point (i.e. the protest) alone, for, although the fact of his protest ought to be a complete answer to the assumed jurisdiction, I cannot disguise from myself the fact that, from the language of many of the judges in R. v. Hughes—although, perhaps, not necessary for the decision of the case—and the judgments of Erle, C.J., and Blackburn, J., in R. v. Shaw, they seem to assume that if the two conditions precedent of the presence of the accused and jurisdiction over the offence were fulfilled, his protest would be of no avail. It would have been easy to say that a protest would have made a difference, but I find no such qualification in R. v. Hughes, although something like that is said in one of the cases. It is an important question, well worth consideration in the Court of Appeal" (p. 255). As to waiver, and appearance under protest, see pp. 50, 109.

There is no waiver where the solicitor for a limited company which has not been properly served appeared, and having made a protest, takes no farther part in the proceedings (Pearks v. Ward, (1902) 2 K.B. 1); see also as to waiver, pp. 50, 96, ante, and p. 109, post.

The only decisions on the power of the High Court to amend under section 76 of the County Officers and Courts Act, 1877, seem to be the cases of R. (McArdle) v. Louth JJ., (1904) 2 I.R. 64, 3 N.I.J.R. 155, and Keenan v. Costelloe, K.B.D. (Ir.), (1910) 44 I.T.L.R. 218. In R. (McArdle) v. Louth JJ., a person was charged in one summons with five offences, and was convicted in respect of one of them. He appealed, and in the appeal the form of appeal (Form H) was erroneously drawn up as if the conviction had been generally on the five charges. The quarter sessions affirmed the erroneous order. Held, that the order should be quashed, and that, even if there were jurisdiction to amend the order (which the King's Bench doubted, as the power of amendment given by section 76 is limited to amending the summons, charge, or information), the court should not exercise it. The novelty and importance of Keenan v. Costelloe make that case worthy of a full note. The defendant, Thomas Costelloe, was charged with having sold to the complainant, a Sergeant Keenan, and to his prejudice, milk which was not of the nature, substance, and quality demanded. The facts, as appears from the case stated were as follows:—On the date in question, the complainant, who was on duty at Trippol creamery, saw Patrick Costelloe, father of the defendant, with a tankard of milk in a donkey cart, about to deliver milk to the creamery. The complainant thereupon bought from Patrick Costelloe a pennyworth of the milk, which on analysis proved to be deficient in its fats. The milk was the property of the defendant, and what was left of it was delivered by Patrick Costelloe to the creamery, and was accepted, and the defendant was paid for it at the rate of 3d. per gallon at the end of the month.

 (2) High Court.

"The defendant, Thomas Costelloe, is usually paid for milk supplied by him to the creamery at a rate determined by a chemical test made at the creamery for the amount of butter fats therein. Milk rich in fats is paid for at a higher rate per gallon than poor milk. There was no evidence before us that this testing is done daily, or that the particular tankard from which Sergeant Keenan was supplied was subjected to any test. In addition to the money payment, the creamery manager returned to Thomas Costelloe by the hand of Patrick Costelloe a certain quantity of separated milk (i.e. milk deprived of its butter fats) proportionate to the volume of milk delivered by Thomas Costelloe. The defendant, Thomas Costelloe, and the manager of the Trippol creamery, had been dealing by agreement for some years previously to and at the date in the summons mentioned, on the terms that milk delivered and accepted should be paid for according to its quality, but there was no evidence before us of any contract between them, binding one party to deliver, or the other party to accept, any quantity of milk, large or small. Patrick Costelloe had no authority, either express or implied, to sell the milk to Sergeant Keenan or to any other person. It was contended on behalf of the complainant that Thomas Costelloe was responsible for the act of Patrick Costelloe." The justices, being of opinion that Thomas Costelloe had given Patrick Costelloe no authority, express or implied, to do the act complained of, dismissed the charge, and stated the case upon the question whether Patrick Costelloe was acting outside the scope of his authority in selling the milk to Sergeant Keenan. The King's Bench Division (Palles, C.B., Kenny and Wright, JJ.), on the ground that the transaction really aimed at by the prosecution was the sale to the creamery, and applying the English case of Hiett v. Ward, noted supra, p. 95, made an order declaring that Patrick Costelloe's authority was not material to the questions which the justices had to decide, amended the summons into a charge of selling to the creamery, and to the prejudice of the creamery, and remitted the case to the justices with a direction to convict, Palles, C.B., dissenting<sup>1</sup> from that part of the order directing the justices to convict, on the ground that same involved an inference of fact, which it was for the justices, and not for the King's Bench Division, to draw. The direction to convict, at all events, seems open to the further observation that the evidence was not conclusive on the amended charge, for (a) it was by no means clear that defendant's contract was to sell milk with all its fats to the creamery, and indeed the evidence, so far as it went (and it is submitted it was irrelevant to the charge as laid), rather showed that the milk was to be sold in such quality as the defendant chose to supply it, the price payable to him depending upon the quality; (b) the fact that the sergeant's pennyworth was below standard was evidence, but, again, not conclusive evidence, that the rest of the milk in the tankard was not up to the standard. It may also be observed that the amendment, at the stage it was made, seems a hardship on the defendant, remembering the facts:—(1) that, at the hearing before the justices, the charge, as laid, was persisted in, (2) that no amendment was then asked for,<sup>2</sup> (3) that, to the end, the complainant persisted that his charge, as laid, was proved, and went on with his case stated upon that basis, and (4) the defendant may have had an answer upon the merits, which he abandoned, relying on the law point, which was rather of the complainant's, than of his, making.

The High Court has no power to amend by reducing an excessive penalty to that permitted by the statute, (R. v. Slade, (1895) 2 Q.B. 247).

It is suggested that the following rules may be safely followed by justices in exercising their discretion to amend: (1) justices can and should amend when a mere mistake has been made in time, place, details of name, or the like (see cases supra, p. 94); (2) justices can and should amend an ill-drafted summons, purporting to allege a certain offence, but insufficiently or incorrectly stating it, into a properly drafted charge (for an instance see R. (Fleming) v. Londonderry JJ., (1908) 42 I.L.T.R. 205, in which a charge of assault, preferred by a person other than the party aggrieved, was held rightly amended by adding the necessary averment that the party aggrieved had declined to prosecute); (3) justices can apparently amend by substituting a different offence from that charge, if the doing so is necessary to raise the real question at issue (Keenan v. Costello, supra), and should do so if they are satisfied that no real injustice will thereby be done; (4) in all cases justices should give defendant an adjournment if he asks for it, unless his request is obviously unreasonable or mala fide.

Apparently there is no power to amend in case the defendant does not appear (R. (Canavan) v. Dublin JJ., (1895) 29 I.L.T.R. 125).

The Court cannot amend by substituting one defendant for another, e.g., the name of a company for that of a company's officer (Oxford Tramways Co. v. Sankey, (1890) 54 J.P. 564).

The defendant was charged in the same summons with certain offences, and was convicted generally, the entry of the conviction having been made in the order book under the Petty Sessions Act by the presiding justice. A conditional order for a writ of certiorari having been obtained, some of the justices who had originally adjudicated met, and directed one of their number to amend the order, which was accordingly done. Held, that, under the circumstances, the amendment was without jurisdiction; held, by Lord O'Brien, L.C.J., and semble by Gibson, J., that after the justices adjudicating at petty sessions have separated, they have no power to amend an order made by them and duly entered in the order book; held, by Gibson and Madden, J.J., that, even assuming the justices had such power, it could only be exercised by all the justices who adjudicated (R. (Burke) v. Cork JJ., (1905) 2 I.R. 309). In Dublin metropolitan police district, where the Petty Sessions Act does not apply, the entry made by the divisional justice in his book is only a memorandum, from which the formal order is drawn up, and if there is any error in the memorandum, the order can rectify it (R. (Cahill) v. Dublin JJ., (1904) 2 I.R. 698).<sup>1</sup>

Where a defendant appeared in answer to a summons for assault which prayed that she be bound over to the peace, and the justices convicted and ordered that she be imprisoned, the conviction was held good, as the charge of assault was expressly averred in the summons, and upon such a charge it was competent for the justices to imprison as well as to bind to the peace (Kennington v. Daniel, (1888) 22 L.R.I. 667). But it has been held that the justices cannot convict summarily of an assault where the complainant, who desired to preserve his civil rights against a defendant, made an information stating the fact of the assault and praying for sureties, and protested against the justices adjudicating summarily upon the assault (R. v. Denny, (1851; 20 L.J.M.C. 189). The defendant was summoned for having, without being duly qualified, sold and kept open shop for retailing and dispensing poison, contrary to the Pharmacy (Ir.) Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 57), s. 30, the penalty under that section being £5. At the hearing, the justices, contrary to the wish and protest of the complainant, amended the charge into one of selling poison contrary to the Pharmacy Act (Ir.), 1875, Amendment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 48, s. 15, under which the penalty is "not exceeding £5," and they fined defendant 1s. Held, that the justices were bound to convict upon the charge as laid (McGann v. Kelly, (1894) 2 I.R. 8).<sup>1</sup>

Signature to orders.

The document handed to the applicants and signed by the justices under section 162 of the Grand Jury Act. authorizing the entry to obtain road material (R. (Murphy) v. Wexford JJ., (1894) 2 I.R. 81), or under the Public Health Act, 1878, to abate a nuisance (R. (Ewing) v. Down JJ., (1905) 2 I.R. 648), is the order, and not the entry in the petty sessions order book. Where such an order must, under the statute, be made by two justices, it must be signed by at least two (Wing v. Urban Council, (1904) 1 K.B. 798).

Summonses under the Public Health Act came on for hearing before five justices, three of whom were of opinion that a nuisance existed, and orders were made for abatement. Formal orders, following form C in schedule C to the Act, were drawn up, and were signed, several days after the decision, by two of the justices, one of these being one of the dissenting justices, and served on the defendants. After a conditional order had been obtained to quash the orders, they were signed by the other two justices, who formed the majority of the court. Held, (1) that the orders should have been signed by the majority of the adjudicating justices, (2) that the omission of the signatures did not go to jurisdiction, and that such omission could be corrected by the justices signing afterwards, and (3) that the delay in signing and completing the orders did not warrant certiorari (R. (Donnell) v. Londonderry JJ., (1910) 2 I.R. 458).

Dismiss "on the merits," or "without prejudice."

An order of dismissal under the Petty Sessions Act should be either upon the merits or without prejudice to the charge being again made (Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 21); and it has been held that an order of "dismiss" simply is no order at all, and is no bar to subsequent proceedings by the same complainant against the same defendant for the same offence (G. S. & W. R. Co. v. Darby, (1892) 27 I.L.T.R. 45). An order of "dismiss without prejudice" of a charge under the Illicit Distillation Act, 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 55, is a valid order. as the proceedings under that statute are, by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 40. s. 6, <sup>1</sup> In this case the two charges were different, and if the justices could legally do what they did, an amendment would have been necessary. But where exactly the same offence is punishable under two different statutes, e.g. selling liquor without a licence (an offence under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 89, s. 3, and under the Licensing Act, 1872), the matter is not so clear, but it is probable that the justices would be held to be obliged to proceed under the summons as laid by the complainant.

to follow the procedure of the Petty Sessions Act (Lawless v. M'Alcer, (1897) 2 I.R. 248). A dismissal without prejudice of a charge of larceny under the Criminal Justice Act, 1855, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 126, under which the justices have to decide upon the guilt or innocence of a prisoner, is an acquittal, and the words "without prejudice" are mere surplusage and the order is a bar to subsequent proceedings (G. S. & W. R. Co. v. Gooding, (1908) 2 I.R. 429). As to proper form of order, when the complainant does not appear, see p. 57.

trivial charge.

Under the Summary Jurisdiction Act (14 & 15 Vict. c. 92, s. 21) whenever any person shall be convicted of any offence against that Act, and it shall be a first conviction, the justices may discharge the offender from his conviction upon his making such satisfaction to the party aggrieved for damages and costs or either of them as shall be ascertained by the justices. But this applies only to the very limited class of offences under the Summary Jurisdiction Act; and the Petty Sessions Act contains no such provision, but enacts (s. 21) that the justices shall make such order as shall be authorized by the Act under which the complaint is made, or shall dismiss the complaint either upon the merits or without prejudice.

The power of justices to dismiss a case under the Probation of Offenders Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 17<sup>1</sup>), is discussed, pp. 59, 60, ante, and, in addition to the cases there cited, the following may be referred to:—Lee Conservancy Board v. Bishop's Stortford U. C., (1906) 70 J.P. 244; Salt v. Scott Hall, (1903) 2 K.B. 245; Pomeroy v. Malvern U. D. C., (1903) 89 L.T. 555;<sup>2</sup> and Phillips v. Evans, (1896) 1 Q.B. 305. In the last-named case, where the charge was one of keeping an unlicensed dog, and the defendant deliberately refused to take out a licence, the justices were directed to convict, and Lindley, L.J., said:—"It is obvious that it would never do for this Court to encourage appeals from the refusal of justices to convict because they thought, under section 16 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879,<sup>3</sup> that the offence was of so trifling a nature that it was inexpedient to inflict any punishment. . . . The ground they take is, that for a man to refuse to take out a dog licence is a trifling offence, and, I think, it is impossible, even under section 16, that they should be at liberty to say that. They have no right to let a man off paying his dog-tax, and if he refuses to pay they are bound to convict him." In Barnard v. Barton, (1906) 1 K.B. 357 (noted ante, p. 60), Kennedy, J. (p. 360), made it clear that the Act was intended to apply either to offences "serious in their nature," but "rendered trifling by the circumstances under which they were committed," or to offences "in their nature trifling—for example, a merely technical or casual breach of a bye-law, if there be no deliberate intention to commit a breach thereof."

<sup>2</sup> In Lee Conservancy Board v. Bishop's Stortford U. C., the offence was one of discharging night sewage into a river, and it was held that though, under ordinary circumstances, such an offence is not a trifling offence, yet the circumstances might be so exceptional as to warrant the justices in treating it as such. In Salt v. Scott Hall, and Pomeroy v. Malvern U. D. C., the charges were of erecting buildings not constructed of incombustible materials, as required by a bye-law; and it was pointed out that, though such bye-laws were not unreasonable, yet they ought to contain provisions under which the hard and fast rules they laid down could be dispensed with in the case of buildings (e.g. a bungalow) to which they are unsuited, and that the justices could treat non-compliance with such bye-laws, in a proper case, as a trivial offence. A charge against a licensed publican of displaying emblems on his licensed premises is not an offence of a trivial nature (Glasgow v. O'Connor, K.B.D. (Ir.), 16th November, 1910, as yet unreported).

Previous acquittal or conviction bars
second charge.

Where an act or omission constitutes an offence under two or more Acts or both under an Act and at common law, whether any such Act was passed before or after the commencement of this Act the offender shall, unless the contrary intention appears, be liable to be prosecuted and punished under either or any of these Acts or at common law, and shall not be liable to be punished twice for the same offence (Interpretation Act, 1889, 52 & 53 Vict. c. 63, s. 33).<sup>1</sup> Apart from the statute, at common law, on the principle, "nemo debet bis vexari pro una et eadem causa," a former acquittal or conviction is an answer to a second charge founded on the same facts (R. v. Duncan, (1881) 7 Q.B.D. 198; see also R. v. Tenant, (1727) 2 Ld. R. 1423). The test as to whether a previous acquittal or conviction is a bar is, whether the evidence necessary to support the second proceeding would have been sufficient to support a legal conviction on the first (Broom's Legal Maxims, 7th ed., 266).

The plea of autrefois acquit is, however, not available where the decision has not been a decision on the merits, but a mere non-suit (Paley, 8th ed., 168), as, for instance, where the justices have dismissed the charge for want of form, or under the belief that they had not jurisdiction (see R. v. Herrington, (1864) 3 N.R. 468, 12 W.R. 420; R. v. Ridgway, (1822) 1 D. & R. 132; R. v. Machen, (1849) 14 Q.B. 74; R. v. Lancashire JJ., (1874) 38 J.P. 215; Commissioners of Excise v. Thompson, (1838) 1 I.L.R. 5); or where the dismissal has been on the ground that the complainant was not competent to bring the charge (Foster v. Hull, (1869) 33 J.P. 629). In such cases, if within the Petty Sessions Act, it is conceived that a "dismiss without prejudice" would be the appropriate form of order;<sup>2</sup> but, in cases not within the Petty Sessions Act, the only order of dismissal is "dismiss" simply, and apparently in such cases it would be a question of fact whether the dismissal was a mere non-suit, or a decision on the merits.

A charge which has been dismissed "without prejudice" (see Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 21) can, of course, be brought on again. The decision in G. S. & W. Rly. v. Gooding, (1908) 2 I.R. 429, noted infra, in no way conflicts with this, for in that case the proper order under the Criminal Justice Act, 1855, was "dismissed" merely, and the words "without prejudice" were mere surplusage. As to order where complainant does not appear, see p. 57.

The following decisions show the application of the above principles:—

A certificate of dismissal by justices of a charge of assault is a bar to an indictment for unlawful wounding arising out of the same circumstances (R. v. Elrington, (1861) 31 L.J.(M.C.) 14, 1 B. & S. 688).

<sup>2</sup> Section 21 of the Petty Sessions Act, which introduces the distinction between a "dismiss without prejudice" and "a dismiss on the merits," lays down no guiding principle as to which form of dismiss in any particular case should be adopted. As stated, the form "dismiss without prejudice" seems the more appropriate where the fatal point taken by the defendant is merely a technical one as to the form, etc., of the proceeding. The matter, however, rests entirely in the discretion of the justices; and it is suggested that, in the absence of bad faith or surprise, in a case where the plaintiff fails in his proofs (not being merely a technical oversight), he should not be allowed a second chance to strengthen them.

Semble, there cannot be two separate convictions under different parts of the Pharmacy Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 121), for one and the same sale (Berry v. Henderson, (1870) L.R. 5 Q.B. 296). Previous conviction or acquittal bars second charge.

Appellant convicted under section 78 of 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50, that he, being driver of a carriage on a highway, by negligence and wilful misconduct, to wit, by striking a horse ridden by the respondent, caused hurt and damage to the respondent; held a bar to a conviction on the same facts for assaulting the respondent (Wemyss v. Hopkins, (1875) L.R. 10 Q.B. 378).

A defendant was charged with poaching, and the case had proceeded to the length of cross-examining the chief witness for the prosecution. An objection was then taken that the defendant was not properly before the Court. The justices having upheld the objection and dismissed the case, the Queen's Bench Division refused a mandamus to compel the justices to hear the charge when brought afresh, on the ground that the defendant was entitled to plead autrefois acquit (R. v. Brakenbridge, (1884) 48 J.P. 293).

The dismissal of a charge under 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 32, s. 30, for trespass in pursuit of game is not a bar to a prosecution under section 23 of that Act for using a dog for taking game without a licence, although the facts alleged are the same (Bollard v. Spring, (1887) 51 J.P. 501).

A publican, who harbours a policeman while on duty and on the same occasion supplies him with drink, may be convicted of two separate offences under section 16 of the Licensing Act, 1872 (R. (McManus) v. Meath JJ., (1893) 27 I.L.T.R. 127).

The defendant was drunk upon the public street, and brandished an iron bar over a policeman's head. He was fined for drunkenness and disorderly conduct, the disorderly conduct alleged being the brandishing of the iron bar; held, that the conviction was a bar to a second charge of assaulting the police, the only evidence of assault being the brandishing of the iron bar (R. (Flynn) v. Cork JJ., (1909) 43 I.L.T.R. 154). Cf. R. v. Miles, (1909) 73 J.P. 516.

Each sale of liquor by a licensed person during prohibited hours constitutes a separate offence; accordingly, a publican was held rightly convicted on four charges of four separate sales on the same Sunday (McHugh v. Cartin, (1903) 3 N.I.J.R. 250, see also Milnes v. Bale, (1875) L.R. 10 C.P. 591, Brooke v. Milliken (1789) 3 T.R. 509, Re Hartley, (1862) 26 J.P. 438).

A person who has been convicted under section 8 of the Vaccination Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 52), for refusing and neglecting to have his child vaccinated, and after conviction persists in his refusal, cannot be again prosecuted under section 7 of the Vaccination Act, 1879; but repeated prosecutions for such continued neglect can be brought by the sanitary authority under section 147 of the Public Health Act (Ir.), 1878 (R. (Vint) v. Donegal JJ., (1904) 2 I.R. 1).

The justices dismissed an information charging the defendant with having erected a building in a street beyond the buildings on either side thereof; held, that this was a bar to a second prosecution (Kinnis v. Graves, (1898) 67 L.J. Q.B. 583).

A person convicted of selling intoxicating liquor during prohibited hours cannot also be convicted of opening for sale during prohibited hours, when the selling and opening are part of the same transaction (Dorrian v. McHugh (1907) 2 I.R. 564; see also the Scotch case, Moore v. Wilson, 5 F. Just. C. ss. 88).

A dismissal without prejudice of a charge under the Illicit Distillation Act, 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 55, is a valid order and a bar to a subsequent charge (Lawless v. McAleer, (1897) 2 I.R. 248).

A dismissal "without prejudice" of a charge of larceny under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 126, is an acquittal and a bar to a subsequent charge (G. S. & W. R. Co. v. Gooding, (1908) 2 I.R. 429).

The acceptance of compensation for injuries sustained by furious driving awarded under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 86, s. 28 (corresponding Irish section, s. 25 of Dublin Police Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 24), is a bar to an action at law for damages, though further injuries subsequently develop (Wright v. General Omnibus Co., (1877) 25 W.R. 647, 41 J.P. 486; see also McGarry v. Fairbairn, (1869) I.R. 3 C.L. 552, McNulty v. Hope, (1870) I.R. 4 C.L. 377).

A refusal by a metropolitan police magistrate of an order for the delivery of goods is no bar to an action for trover of the same goods (Dover v. Child, (1876) 1 Ex. D. 172, see 5 & 6 Vict. c. 24, ss. 56, 57).

Proceedings before justices to recover wages (Millet v. Coleman, (1875)

44 L.J. Q.B. 194; 39 J.P. 805) or moneys fraudulently misappropriated under section 12 of the Trades Union Act, 1870 (Knight v. Whitmore, (1885) 53 L.T. 233, 33 W.R. 907), are a bar to proceedings in the county court in respect of the same matters.

In proceedings taken by an urban authority under the Private Street Works Act, 1892, ss. 6, 7, 8, to compel owners of premises to do private street works, the determination by a court of summary jurisdiction that the street is a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large is a judgment in rem and conclusive as to the status of the street; and the question whether it is so repairable is res judicata in any future proceedings under these sections (Mayor of Wakefield v. Cooke, (1904) A.C. 31, cf. R. v. Hutchings, (1881) 6 Q.B.D. 300). This doctrine does not apply to a claim by an individual to a several fishery (R. (Sheehy) v. Kerry J.J., (1896) 30 I.L.T.R. 167).

In a charge under s. 1 of the Motor Car Act, 1903, evidence of the speed of the car was relied on as proof that the defendant drove "in a manner dangerous to the public." The defendant was convicted, and the magistrate said that he took into consideration, besides other circumstances, the question of speed, which he considered to be an element of danger, and refused to hear a second charge, arising out of the same occasion, of driving at a speed exceeding twenty miles an hour. Held by Lawrence, J., and Sutton, J. (Jelf, J., dissenting), that the magistrate was right, as he must have found that the car was being driven at a speed exceeding twenty miles an hour (Welton v. Tanebourne, (1908) 21 Cox 702). But see R. v. Norton, (1910) 45 L.J. Misc. 581.

The conviction of a person for larceny of a chattel is no bar to a subsequent prosecution under s. 33 of the Pawnbrokers Act, 1872, for illegal pawning of the chattel (Pickford v. Corsi, (1901) 2 K.B. 212).

Where it is an offence to withhold documents after being demanded, each withholding constitutes a separate offence, and therefore a first conviction is no bar to a second charge (R. (Shortall) v. Queen's Co. J.J., (1899) 5 I.W.L.R. 122).

The Court were apparently of the opinion, in Pickavance v. Pickavance, (1901) P. 60, that the withdrawal, at the hearing, of a charge prevents the charge from being again brought forward, but the dictum was not necessary for the decision: and it is submitted, there are many circumstances which would render a withdrawal very different, in substance and effect, from a dismissal.<sup>1</sup> If the justices, upon the hearing upon the merits of any case of assault or battery within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, ss. 42, 43, where the complaint is on the part of the party aggrieved, shall deem the offence not proved, or shall deem the assault justifiable or so trifling as not to merit any punishment, and shall accordingly dismiss the complaint; they shall deliver a certificate accordingly to the defendant (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 44). As to effect where defendant has obtained such certificate or, if convicted, has suffered the penalty, see p. 58, ante, and CATALOGUE OF SUMMARY OFFENCES, "ASSAULT."

In certain cases of larceny, the Criminal Justice Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 106, s. 12), and the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 109), contain special provisions as to conviction or acquittal being a bar to other proceedings, which will be found noted in the CATALOGUE OF SUMMARY OFFENCES under "LARCENY."

Meaning of
"in jeopardy."

At common law a man who has once been tried and acquitted for a crime may not be tried again for the same offence if he was "in jeopardy" on the first trial. He was so "in jeopardy" if (1) the court was competent to try him for the offence, (2) the trial was upon a good indictment on which a valid judgment of conviction could be entered, and (3) the acquittal was on the merits, i.e., by verdict on the trial, or in summary cases by dismissal on the merits followed by a judgment or order of acquittal. In other words, the meaning of not having been "in jeopardy" within the rule seems to be that by reason of some defect in the record, either in the indictment, place of trial, process, or the like, the defendant was not lawfully liable to suffer judgment in that proceeding. It is not necessary that the judgment of acquittal should be, in fact, correct and proper, for while unreversed it will support a plea of autrefois acquit in bar of a second trial. Thus a judgment for the defendant, though consequent on a misdirection or erroneously given on a special verdict, or on an insufficient indictment, so long as it stands unreversed, is a bar to a new indictment (Russell on Crimes, 7th ed., 1933).

of "in jeopardy."

If a defendant is convicted, and the conviction is set aside as being bad upon its face, can the defendant be afterwards charged on the same facts in proceedings regular on their face?

If conviction quashed, can defendant be again charged?

There is no direct authority on the question, but in R. v. Ridgway, (1822) 1 D. & R. 132, 136, an opinion, which, however, was not necessary for the decision, seems to have been expressed that the quashing by quarter sessions of a conviction for mere matters of form is not an acquittal of the defendant, so as to preclude the King's Bench Division from inquiring into the validity of the quarter sessions order on certiorari. A defendant who succeeds in having a conviction quashed on the ground that it is bad ex facie cannot, of course plead autrefois convict, for there has been no conviction good in law. It is submitted that he cannot maintain a plea of autrefois acquit for the following reasons. In the case of indictments, a judgment reversed in error is the same as no judgment, and is no bar to any subsequent indictment (R. v. Drury, (1849) 3 C. & K. 193, 18 L.J. (M.C.) 189, 3 Cox. C.C. 546). Similarly, in case of summary convictions, a conviction bad ex facie is an act without jurisdiction and is no conviction at all, being not merely voidable, but void (per Palles, C.B., in In re Heaphy, (1888) 22 L.R.I. at pp. 510, 511), the function of a court on certiorari in such a case being not to make that void which was voidable, but to declare that void which was void ab initio (R. (Mulgrew) v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, (1901) 35 I.L.T.R. 157, 1 N.I.J.R. 229). There has been, therefore, no dismissal of the charge upon the merits, or indeed at all, the certiorari proceedings being merely tantamount to a declaration that the order of the justices was a mere nullity; and it is submitted that the same remarks would apply when a voidable conviction is quashed, e.g., when the tribunal is biassed (but see remarks of Palles, C.B., in R. (Hastings) v. Galway JJ., (1906) 2 I.R. 499).

The case is different where the defendant is charged upon an improperly drawn summons upon which, without amendment, no valid conviction can be made, and the case is dismissed on the merits. It is submitted that a dismiss on the merits, without amendment, of such a summons is an act within the jurisdiction, and valid. Further, a judgment for a defendant on an insufficient indictment so long as it stands unreversed, is a bar to a new indictment (Vaux's case (1591) 4 Co. Rep. 44, 2 Hale 248), and as it is not possible to reverse on certiorari an acquittal by a tribunal competent to hear the case (R. v. Antrim JJ., (1895) 2 I.R. 603, see R. (Drohan) v. Waterford JJ., (1901) 2 I.R. 548, R. (Hastings)

objection of res judicata
must be taken.

v. Galway JJ., (1906) 2 I.R. 499), it follows that the defendant cannot afterwards be impleaded.

The objection of res judicata must be taken at the hearing before the magistrate, and not reserved as a ground for quashing the conviction or order after it has been made (Paley, 8th ed., 169, R. v. Herrington, (1864) 12 W.R. 420; Tott v. Rayner, (1847) 5 C.B. 162).

Several acts constituting one offence.

Several acts may constitute but one offence. Thus a baker who sold a number of different loaves on Sunday was held to have committed one offence only against 29 Car. 2, c. 7, forbidding tradesmen doing or exercising any worldly labour, business, or work of their ordinary calling on the Lord's Day (Crepps v. Durden, (1777) Cowp. 640, 1 Smith, L.C., 11th ed., 651). So also, a person who gave medical advice and supplied medicines to three different persons at different times on the same day, is guilty of only one offence of acting or practising as an apothecary within section 20 of the Apothecaries Act, 1815, 55 Geo. 3, c. 194 (Apothecaries' Company v. Jones, (1893) 1 Q.B. 89). The question whether several acts committed on the same day make the offender liable to distinct penalties must be determined by the nature of the offence and the wording of the statute (Paley, 8th ed., 284).

One transaction constituting several
offences.

One act or omission may be the foundation of several charges. Thus a person who, by omitting to milk several cows, causes cruelty to each of the cows, may apparently be convicted of as many offences as there are cows (per Lord Alverstone, C.J., in R. v. Cable (1906) 1 K.B. 719, 721;<sup>1</sup> see also Ex parte Beal, (1868) L.R. 3 Q.B. 387), though the charge may be formulated, at the option of the prosecutor, as a single charge of cruelty to all the cows (R. v. Cable, supra). Where the information charged one offence, i.e., cruel ill-treatment of four ponies, the defendant was convicted by a court of summary jurisdiction and fined £5 in respect of each pony. Four separate convictions, each in respect of a pony, were drawn up. The defendant had no notice before conviction that he was being charged with a separate offence in respect of each pony. Held, that the information only charged one offence, and the defendant, without previous notice, could not be convicted on the information of four offences, and that three of the convictions were bad and must be quashed (R. v. Rawson, (1909) 2 K.B. 748). In Fecitt v. Walsh, (1891) 2 Q.B. 304, the defendant was contractor for a milk supply to a workhouse, and while the milk, which was contained in five cans, was being delivered by him at the workhouse, an inspector took samples from each of the five cans, and, two of the samples being defective, preferred two separate informations against the defendant, for selling milk from which its fats had been abstracted, contrary to section 9 of the Food and Drugs Act, 1875. The justices having convicted on each information: Held, that they were right, for, having regard to the terms of section 3 of the Act of 1879, there were five different transactions so far as the inspector was concerned. The Scotch courts, however, have refused, and it is submitted rightly, to follow this case in Telford v. Fyfe, (1908) S.C. (J.) 83.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> The grounds of the decision of Lord Ardwall in this case are "irresistible," to use the expression of the Lord Justice Clerk. "With all respect," said Lord Ardwall (p. 89), "to the learned judges who decided Fecitt v. Walsh, I cannot concur in the decision they gave. The fallacy, I think, is apparent from the opinion of Mr. Justice Day, for he

Where the defendant put water in each of twenty-nine empty spirit casks, and so extracted spirits from them, it was held that he was guilty of an offence in respect of each cask (Lord Advocate v. Stewart, (1899, Court of Exchequer, Scotland) 63 J.P. 311). Each of several sales of intoxicating liquor during prohibited hours on the same day constitutes a separate offence of selling during prohibited hours (M'Hugh v. Curtin, (1903) 3 N.I.J.R. 250), but a defendant apparently cannot be convicted both of opening and selling where the selling and opening are part of the same transaction (Dorrion v. M'Hugh, (1907) 2 I.R. 564).

One transaction constituting several offences.

There were two charges of separate and distinct offences against separate and distinct sections of the Indecent Advertisement Act (52 & 53 Vict. c. 18). The facts relating to the two charges were the same. After hearing the first charge, the justices proceeded to hear the second; and, after the second had been heard, convicted the appellant of both offences. Held, that each case ought to have been decided on the evidence given in relation to the particular charge; that, therefore, the justices were wrong in hearing the evidence on the second charge before deciding on the first, and that both convictions should be set aside (Hamilton v. Walker, (1892) 2 Q.B. 25). It is a well-known principle of the criminal law "that each case ought to stand on its own merits, and should be decided upon the evidence given with relation to that particular charge" (ib., per Pollock, B.). No second conviction could have been had, as defendant could plead autrefois convict (ib., per Vaughan Williams, J.). But the justices, after hearing one charge, and having decided to convict, may postpone their adjudication of the penalty until they have heard a second charge (R. v. Fry, (1898) 19 Cox, 135).

Postponing decision pending hearing of second charge.

A distinction is drawn between orders and convictions. It is said that the courts are more strict in construing convictions than orders (Paley, 8th ed., p. 184), and that an order may be good in part and bad for the residue, whereas a conviction is a judgment entire and indivisible, and if any material part be faulty it vitiates the whole (ib., p. 185, R. v. Wicklow J.J., (1863) 16 I.C.L.R. 23). By section 44 of the Petty Sessions Act, the word "order" shall include "conviction," but this section does not abolish the well-established distinction.

says:—"Acting under the provisions of the Acts of 1875 and 1879, a constable procured, as there provided, several samples of milk. In each case of procurement he acted as purchaser and the appellant as seller.' Proceeding upon this, he holds that there might be a prosecution in respect of each sample taken. I consider that this is not a sound interpretation of the Acts, and arises from mixing up section 3 of the 1879 Act with section 13 of the 1875 Act. Under section 13 it is provided that an inspector 'may procure any sample of food or drugs, and if he suspects the same to have been sold to him contrary to any provision of this Act,' shall take the proceedings thereafter narrated. It is quite clear that this applies to purchases made by inspectors for the purpose of procuring samples of food or drugs. But section 3 of the Act of 1879 is in wholly different terms: not a word is said about selling to or buying by an inspector. On the contrary, it only authorizes him to procure at the place of delivery any sample of milk in course of delivery to the purchaser, who plainly is not the inspector himself, and although it provides that proceedings shall be taken, and penalties enforced in like manner as if the inspector had purchased the sample himself, yet that does not assimilate his taking as many samples as he might think necessary to the case of a number of purchases made by him from ordinary retail sellers of foods. It is noticeable that apparently the Act contemplates, not many samples, but one sample of milk in a case of this description; the wording of section 3 of the Act plainly shows that it never contemplated the delivery of adulterated milk at the same time and place as anything else than one, and not many offences against the statute. To hold anything else would be to put it in the power of any inspector to multiply unnecessarily and unjustly prosecutions for what was one and the same act."

Distinction between orders and

tion between convictions and orders, properly so called (per O'Brien, J., in R. v. Wicklow JJ., at p. 28). Instances of orders are:—orders under the Grand Jury Acts, Public Health Acts, and civil proceedings such as those to recover small debts or possession of tenements. In R. v. Radnorshire JJ., (1840) 9 Dowl. 98, the suggested distinction between the rules of construction in the case of orders and convictions was thus discussed by Williams, J.:—"Admitting the general rule, which is confirmed in many cases, that a conviction should be construed strictly and an order liberally, the value of that rule is greatly diminished by the difficulty of applying it to each particular case. I much doubt whether upon examination there will be found any rule of law which prescribes, or even allows, language to be forced from its ordinary import and fair meaning to support one instrument, or to invalidate the other. Since the case of R. v. Hulcott, (1796) 6 T.R. 583, which has been recognized in many subsequent and recent decisions, it may be questioned whether any intelligible distinction exists at all." But the distinction as to the severalty of good from bad parts of an order is important. In Jenney v. Brook, (1844) 6 Q.B. 323, an order was made under the Highway Act, 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50, s. 65 (corresponding to 14 & 15 Vict. c. 92, s. 9), authorizing the complainant to cut defendant's hedges and trees. The order was good as to the hedges, but bad as to the trees. In an action taken for trespass to the hedges and trees, it was held that the order was severable, and that the damages should be limited to the injuries to the trees. An order under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 126, so far as it related to the payment of money for the maintenance of a pauper, was quashed, but confirmed so far as it related to the expense of his examination and conveyance (R. v. Winstler, (1850) 19 L.J.M.C. 185). An order on a putative father for payment of a weekly sum from the birth of his child was held to be bad as to the period between the date of the birth and the application for the order, and good in respect of the payments due since the date of the application (R. v. Green, (1851) 20 L.J.M.C. 168; and cf. R. v. Slade, (1895) 2 Q.B. 247). Where the appellants had created a nuisance by depositing refuse on the lands of others to be carted away, and they had no control over such lands, it was held that an order under the Public Health Act (England), 1875, to abate the nuisance was bad as to the abatement, for it prescribed acts which might include the committal of a trespass, but good as to the prohibition, for it was the appellants' act which created the nuisance (Mayor of Scarborough v. R. S. A. of Scarborough, (1876) 1 Ex.D. 344). The rule in the case of orders seems to be, that if the line of demarcation between the good and the bad parts can be clearly pointed out, the court will uphold the good part (per Erle, J., in R. v. Green, (1851) 20 L.J.M.C., at p 169).<sup>1</sup>

of convictions.

The court can intend nothing in favour of convictions, and will intend nothing against them (per Lord Ellenborough in R. v. Hazell, (1810) 13 East 139, at p. 141).

Order-book.

As has been seen (ante, p. 63), in cases within the Petty Sessions Act, the entry in the order-book is to be deemed the order. The order-book in use is printed in the APPENDIX of FORMS.

Right to
spoken word.

entered in the order book (R. (Horan) v. Galway JJ., (1903) 3 N.I.J.R. 111; see also Jones v. Williams, (1877) 46 L.J.M.C. 270). In R. (Horan) v. Galway JJ. the justices, having heard a complaint of assault, retired to consider their decision. When they returned to court, the chairman announced that the defendants were convicted and sentenced to one month's imprisonment with hard labour. As he was writing this order in the petty sessions order-book, but before it was completed or signed, further discussion arose as to whether or not the sentence should be reduced to a fine. The chairman took a poll, and four voted for imprisonment, and four for a fine. In view of the equal decision, the bench agreed to adjourn: It was held that the order of adjournment was valid.<sup>1</sup>

Right to withdraw spoken word.

The court will set aside an order which is obtained in the absence of one of the parties, caused by a misunderstanding owing to negotiations or the like (R. (Lowry) v. Antrim JJ., (1901) 2 N.I.J. 6; R. (Brown) v. Londonderry JJ., (1906) 6 I.W.L.R. 134).

Setting aside order obtained under misapprehension.

Formerly, whether there was an appeal or not, every conviction was returned to quarter sessions, this being the regular course of procedure (see R. v. Eaton, (1787) 2 T.R. 285), or, in some cases, being directed by statute. c.g. the repealed Larceny Act, 1828, (9 Geo. 4, c. 55, s. 72). The Petty Sessions Act, s. 21, provides that it shall no longer be necessary to return convictions to quarter sessions.<sup>2</sup>

Convictions not returnable to quarter sessions.

In proceedings of a civil character (such as proceedings to recover the cost of maintenance of an illegitimate child) a defendant may apparently waive the non-compliance with a statutory condition (R. v. Berry, (1859) 23 J.P. 86; but see observations of Palles, C.B., in R. (Houlihan) v. King's Co. JJ., (1900) 6 I.W.L.R. 56). But in a criminal prosecution, where a condition is clearly made a condition precedent, apparently the non-fulfilment of the condition cannot be waived (R. v. Scotton, (1844) 5 Q.B. 493, as explained in R. v. Hughes, (1879) 4 Q.B.D. 614, at p. 628; see also R. v. Cockshott, (1898) 1 Q.B. 582). As to waiver of a summons, or a point as to service, see p. 50, supra; and of the requisites as to a case stated of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1857, see Morgan v. Edwards, (1860) 5 H. & N. 415, noted p. 238, infra, and Rust v. St. Botolph Churchwardens, (1906) 94 L.T. 575, noted, p. 240.

Waiver of condition precedent.

In May v. Beeley, (1910) 2 K.B. 722, the complainant, a superintendent of police, was not present, and the proceedings were conducted by a police witness: but the defendant was held to be estopped from successfully raising the point owing to his having elected to go on after the justices had offered an adjournment.

Licensing jurisdiction at quarter sessions. JUSTICES at quarter sessions have original jurisdiction to grant certificates upon which the Inland Revenue authorities may grant, (a) a full publican's licence,<sup>1</sup> authorizing the sale of beer, wine, and spirits, in certain quantities,<sup>2</sup> for "on" or "off" consumption, or (b) a beer "on" licence (sometimes called a "publican's beer licence"), authorizing the sale of beer for "on" or "off" consumption.<sup>3</sup> This licence is rare; and the procedure to obtain it is precisely the same as in the case of a full publican's licence. Justices at quarter sessions have no original jurisdiction in regard to beer "off" licences, or spirit grocers' licences, though they have such jurisdiction on appeal.

The jurisdiction in regard to publicans' licences is conferred by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 68, ss. 2-5, and statutes amending that Act or incorporated therewith.

Disqualifications for holding licence. A licence cannot be granted to any person who is not a householder (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 68, s. 13). There is no definition of "householder" or any decision on its meaning. The term (e.g., in 26 Geo. 3, c. 38, s. 8<sup>4</sup>), though it be not of so strict a sense as "housekeeper," will not include a lodger or temporary inmate, but it will include a partner resorting daily to his firm's counting-house in the place referred to, the dwelling part of which counting-house is occupied by a servant of the firm (R. v. Hall, (1822) 1 B. & C. 123; R. v. Poynder, (1823)

<sup>1</sup> An interesting instance of an ancient grant of a licence is to be found in a charter of Henry II. granting certain lands at Sanganat, Balligiliregio, and Chelchis to one Nicholas de Benchi to keep an inn of entertainment by him and his heirs "to hold of me and my heirs and half a knight's service to be done at my City of Dublin" (Harris, "Hibernica," pt. 2, pp. 119-120).

1 B. & C. 178). The term is defined by section 1 of the Towns Improvement (Ireland) Act, 1854, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 103, to mean, for the purposes of that Act, "a male occupier of a dwellinghouse, or of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments rated to the relief of the poor in respect thereof."<sup>1</sup> Under the English Act, 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 64, s. 2, it was provided that "every and any person being a householder" could apply for a licence to sell beer. Under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61, s. 1 (Beerhouse (Eng.) Act, 1840), it is provided that no licences under 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 64, shall be granted to any person "who shall not be the real resident holder and occupier of the dwelling-house in which he shall apply to be licensed." The mere fact that a tenant in occupation of a beerhouse carries on the sale of beer there as the salaried employé of his landlords—a trading company—to whom he is accountable for the profits, does not involve as a conclusion of law that he is not the real resident holder and occupier of the house (Nix v. Nottingham JJ., (1899) 2 Q.B. 294). Whether a person is the real resident holder is a question of fact (per Smith L.J., ib., p. 297). "The words mean not only that the licensee must be in substance the resident on the premises, but that he must also be in substance the holder and occupier of them. There might be real residence without real occupation" (per Vaughan Williams, L.J., ib., p. 299; see also R. v. Allmey, (1871) 35 J.P. 534; R. v. Manchester JJ., (1899) 1 Q.B. 571, where sleeping on the premises was held essential). It is submitted that, although the residential qualification in the Beerhouse (Eng.) Act, 1840, may be regarded as additional to the qualification provided by 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 64, s. 2, the words "holder" and "occupier" are, in effect, definitive of the term "householder" in the earlier Act, and may be applied to that term in 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 68, s. 13. The words "holder" and "occupier" are used in defining the £10 householder franchise qualification under 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 38, a statute substantially contemporaneous with 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 68, s. 13 (for other statutory definitions see 30 & 31 Vict. c. 37, s. 2; 50 & 51 Vict. c. 42, s. 2; 55 & 56 Vict. c. 55, s. 4<sup>2</sup>). It is probable that the term would receive a wide interpretation for the purpose of the licensing Acts, so as to include a servant or manager who is put in charge of and occupies the premises, whether rated or not. The following persons are disqualified from holding a licence:—pawnbrokers (26 Geo. 3, c. 43 (L.), s. 21); distillers, rectifiers, compounders of spirits, bailiffs, gaolers, turnkeys, constables, sheriffs, sub-sheriffs, sheriffs' officers, peace officers, keepers of turnpike gates (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 68, s. 13); persons appointed to serve civil bill processes, while holding office (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 38, s. 2); sheriffs' officers, clerks of petty sessions, officers executing legal process (23 & 24 Vict. c. 107, s. 8). A person convicted of a felony or of selling spirits without a licence is disqualified from having a licence to retail wine (23 & 24 Vict. c. 107, s. 24). A licensed person permitting his premises to be used as a brothel is disqualified for ever (Licensing Act, 1872, s. 15). If a licensed person has been convicted of two offences, which have been recorded, followed by a third recordable conviction, he is disqualified for five years

Effect of Licensing Act,
1902.

An important limitation has been imposed on the powers of justices to grant licences, including both "on" and "off" licences, by the Licensing (L.) Act, 1902, 2 Ed. 7, c. 18,<sup>1</sup> which prohibits the granting of any licence for which a justice's certificate is required,<sup>2</sup> except in the following cases:—

(a) Where the premises were licensed at the date of the passing of the Act, 31 July, 1902, or at any time since 1 January, 1902.

(b) Where the premises were not so licensed, a licence may be granted to (1) a hotel as defined by the statute—a house containing ten bedrooms set apart and used exclusively for the sleeping accommodation of travellers and having no public bar; (2) a railway refreshment room; (3) premises in the immediate vicinity of premises the licence whereof has been extinguished or surrendered by reason of the expiration of a lease; (4) premises attached to or adjoining already licensed premises where the licence is sought to make the premises more suitable for the business; (5) where, owing to increase in population,<sup>3</sup> there is a growth or extension of any city or town, and the licensing authority are satisfied that the restrictions in the Act on the granting of licences may be relaxed, they may grant a licence to any applicant, notwithstanding that the same would be otherwise forbidden by the Act, provided that such licence shall be granted only for premises situate in the parish in which such increase in population has taken place, and in substitution for an existing licence or licences held in respect of premises situate in the city or town, as the case may be, comprising the whole or any part of the parish. Increase in population "means an increase of not less than twenty-five per cent. of the population according to the last census."

The following cases have been decided upon the Licensing Act, 1902:—

R. (Collins) v. Donegal JJ., (1903) 2 I.R. 533; 36 I.L.T.R. 229; R. (Butler) v. Cork JJ., (1904) 5 N.I.J. 36; R. (Dorrian) v. Greer, (1903) 3 N.I.J.R. 302. A person who had a spirit grocer's licence at the date of the Act of 1902 cannot get a publican's licence for the premises. The words "now licensed" mean having a licence of the same class as that applied for; and so also, the holder of a six-day licence cannot get a seven-day licence, or of an early closing licence an ordinary licence.

R. (Kennedy) v. Antrim JJ., (1903) 2 I.R. 671, 37 I.L.T.R. 130. The provisions in section 6 of the Act, enabling the licensing authority to grant a new licence to premises attached to or adjoining premises licensed at the date of the passing of the Act, apply only to the case where the new licence includes the premises formerly licensed, and not the case of an application for a transfer of a licence from one set of premises to another. See also R. (McClinchy) v. Greer, (1904) 2 I.R. 494, 37 I.L.T.R. 156.

R. (Blackburn) v. Down JJ., (1905) 2 I.R. 74, 83 ; 38 I.L.T.R. 67. Premises licensed at the date of the passing of the Act of 1902 were knocked down, and on a site comprising the site of the old licensed premises, but embracing a much greater area, very large and elaborate licensed premises were built. The Court of Appeal were equally divided in opinion as to whether there was jurisdiction to grant a licence under section 6, and the order of the King's Bench Division, holding that there was no such jurisdiction, therefore stood. Effect of Licensing Act, 1902.

Quin v Bourke, (1906) 2 I.R. 94 ; 39 I.L.T.R. 253. The licence attached to premises licensed as a hotel under the Act of 1902 entitles the licensee, whilst such premises are within the definition of a hotel as given in that Act, to sell to the general public, including persons who are not either travellers or lodgers, but if and while such premises cease to answer such definition (as, for instance, by there being thereon a public bar), the licensee is not entitled to sell to any person whatever.

R. (Sole) v. Fermanagh JJ., (1906) 40 I.L.T.R. 75. Premises had formerly been a licensed hotel, but before the Act of 1902 the licence was allowed to lapse, and the house had been carried on as a sanatorium for some years. The applicant obtained a lease of the premises, and, save for the occupation of a caretaker, they were vacant and unfurnished at the time of the application. The house contained ten rooms suitable for bedrooms. Held, that there was no jurisdiction to grant the licence ; that the words "set apart and used" refer to an actual user for sleeping accommodation, though, semble, if the rooms were furnished as bedrooms, this would be sufficient.

R. (Wright) v. Cork JJ., (1906) 2 I.R. 349 ; 40 I.L.T.R. 103. The determination by a notice to quit of a tenancy from year to year is an expiration of a lease within the Act.

R. (Croghan) v. Mayo JJ., (1907), 2 I.R. 474 ; 40 I.L.T.R. 227. From 1888 to 1905 J. held a licence in respect of two adjoining houses, both houses being included in the one licence. One of the houses was held by J. as tenant to N. In 1905 J. surrendered this house to N. and obtained a renewal of the licence in respect of the other house. N. subsequently applied for a certificate for a new licence in respect of the house surrendered to him. Held, that there was no jurisdiction to grant such certificate. It may be doubted if there was jurisdiction to grant the renewal to J. ; see post, p. 114.

R. (Supple) v. Clare JJ., (1907) 2 I.R. 299, 309 ; 40 I.L.T.R. 238, 260. L. was the tenant and licensed owner of a publichouse from 1896 to April, 1905, when he was evicted by C., the landlord of the premises, but L. refused to hand over the licence. In October, 1905, C. applied for and obtained a certificate to entitle him to receive a licence in respect of the evicted premises. L. having built a house a few doors away applied in April, 1906, for a certificate entitling him to obtain a licence for the new house. Held, that there was no jurisdiction under the circumstances to grant the certificate for the new house.

R. (Rigg) v. Tipperary JJ., (1907) 41 I.L.T.R. 152. B., the tenant of a licensed house, was served with notice to quit, expiring in April, 1906. She gave up the premises in July, 1906, but kept the licence, and in June, 1906, applied for and obtained a new interim licence in respect of certain other premises in the immediate vicinity of those which she had received notice to quit. On that occasion she handed over the licence to the clerk of the peace, in whose custody it remained. When the duty on the interim licence was paid, credit was given for a proportionate part of the duty paid in respect of the old licence. At the annual licensing sessions held in October, 1906, B. obtained a certificate confirming her licence granted in June. On the same date a certificate was granted to the landlord of the evicted premises. The applications were heard in alphabetical order, and B.'s licence was first adjudicated upon. Held, that there was no jurisdiction to grant B. a licence.

R. (Sargent) v. Leitrim JJ., (1905) 39 I.L.T.R. 145. Section 5 requires all premises for which a licence is sought under sections 2 (2), 3, and 4, to be valued under the Irish Valuation Acts at not less than the amounts therein named, Held, that the premises must be finally valued, and that a provisional valuation is not sufficient.

Effect of Licensing Act,
1902.

There has been no decision as to whether, if licensed premises are reduced in area <sup>1</sup> so as to substantially alter their identity, a renewal can be applied for, or a new licence granted under the Act of 1902. It is probable that a renewal cannot be validly granted in such a case, the test being, in case of a renewal, are the premises substantially the same (see R. v. Sheffield JJ., (1889) 63 J.P. 595; Stringer v. Huddersfield JJ., (1875) 33 L.T. 568); and it being obligatory that the business should be carried on in the licensed premises during the year (R. (Lambe) v. Armagh JJ., (1897) 2 I.R. 57; 30 I.L.T.R. 47). But it is suggested that justices, on an application for a renewal certificate, which is to the good character of the applicant and to the peaceful and orderly manner in which he has carried on business during the past year, are under no obligation to be over scrupulous as to the question of the identity of the premises, that being a matter which the Excise authorities are at liberty to consider when the application is made to them for the licence itself.<sup>2</sup> Where the premises have been cut down so as to alter their identity, it is submitted there is no jurisdiction under the Act of 1902 to grant a new licence in respect of the reduced area (see R. (Croghan) v. Mayo JJ., (1907) 2 I.R. 474).<sup>3</sup>

Procedure.

The applicant for a licensing certificate must, twenty-one days at least before the quarter sessions, give a notice in writing signed by him to the two next resident justices, the clerk of the peace and the district inspector of the district, or superintendent of the division in which applicant resides (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 68, s. 2; 17 & 18 Vict. c. 89, s. 9), and must also, not more than four or less than two weeks before the quarter sessions, cause such notice to be inserted in some newspaper circulating locally (Licensing Act (Ireland), 1874, s. 10). In the case of an application for a new licence, the justices may refuse the application on the ground of unsuitability of the premises, unfitness of applicant, or number of previously licensed houses in the district; but in the case of transfers the number of previously licensed houses cannot be considered (R. (Clitheroe) v. Recorder of Dublin, (1877) I.R. 11 C.L. 412; 11 I.L.T.R. 85). In the case of an application where the applicant has got a temporary transfer under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 114, the justices are bound to entertain the application at quarter sessions even though the quarter sessions may not be the annual licensing quarter sessions; in all other cases the justices may, but are not bound to, entertain the application unless at the annual quarter sessions (Licensing Act (Ireland), 1874, 37 & 38 Vict. c. 69, s. 12(1); see R. (Duggan) v. Fermanagh JJ., (1909) 2 I.R. 132). Any justice of the peace, churchwarden, or inhabitant of the parish may object to the granting of the licence, and the objector may previously transmit, or at the hearing deliver in writing, to the clerk of the peace, or orally state to the justices his objection (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 68, s. 4).

A certificate granted at sessions other than the annual licensing quarter sessions only enures to the annual licensing quarter sessions, at which it requires confirmation (Licensing Act (Ireland), 1874 s. 12 (1)). Procedure.

The statutory requirements with regard to the service of the notice must be strictly complied with (R. (Harvey) v. Tyrone JJ., (1902) 36 I.L.T.R. 106, 2 N.I.J.R. 59), though a mere clerical error in the notice, if it substantially indicates what the application is, may be overlooked (R. v. Penkridge JJ., (1892) 56 J.P. 87, 66 L.T. 371, 61 L.J.M.C. 132; R. v. Over Darwen JJ., (1878) 39 L.T. 444; Ex parte Clayton, (1899) 63 J.P. 788). Where premises are in a town, the townland need not be stated (R. (Rogers) v. Antrim JJ., (1900) 2 I.R. 388, 34 I.L.T.R. 8, 57). An agent may sign the notice (R. (Murphy) v. Donegal JJ., (1896) 30 I.L.T.R. 6). A justice's place of business is a residence within the Act for the purpose of service on the "next resident justices" (R. (Gallagher) v. Tyrone JJ., (1901) 2 I.R. 497, 502; 35 I.L.T.R. 109; 1 N.I.J.R. 42, 89). The fact that one of the next resident justices is a publican makes no difference, and he should be served (R. (Harvey) v. Tyrone JJ., supra).

Questions as to the fitness of the applicant and fitness of the premises are questions of fact for the justices, and the court will not interfere with the justices' discretion. Non-residence may, but does not necessarily, constitute unfitness (R. (Kinsella) v. Wicklow JJ., (1877) I.R., 11 C.L. 59; R. (Leslie) v. Monaghan JJ., (1901) 35 I.L.T.R. 37; 1 N.I.J.R. 68). In considering the question of the fitness of the premises, the remoteness from police supervision may apparently be considered (R. (Leslie) v. Monaghan JJ., supra, per Palles, C.B.). Fitness of applicant and premises.

It is difficult to say what applications are within Clitheroe's Case.<sup>1</sup> It has been held that a landlord evicting his tenant on the termination of a lease is not a transferee (R. (O'Brien) v. Tipperary JJ., (1878) 4 L.R.I. 259, 6 L.R.I. 129, 14 I.L.T.R. 19); and it seems doubtful if a person who acquires premises under a marriage settlement on the determination of a prior interest is a transferee within Clitheroe's Case (R. (Murphy) v. Recorder of Cork, (1895) 2 I.R. 104). Clitheroe's Case.

Apparently, if a justice wishes to become an objector, he should leave the bench to do so (R. (Dempsey) v. Antrim JJ., (1875) 9 I.L.T.R. 156; R. (Perry) v. Tyrone JJ., (1903) 38 I.L.T.R. 26, 4 N.I.J.R. 58; but see R. (Findlater) v. Dublin JJ., (1904) 2 I.R. 75, 37 I.L.T.R. 202). Objection by justice.

If there is no objection, the justices are bound to grant the application, if it is one which they have jurisdiction to grant (R. (Perry) v. Tyrone JJ., (1903) 38 I.L.T.R. 26, 4 N.I.J.R. 58). Absence of objection.

If the application is refused, an order prohibiting the issue of the licence shall be entered by the clerk of the peace, and the order shall state the reason for such prohibition (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 68, s. 4). Unless the order of prohibition states such ground, it is bad, and will be set aside on certiorari, and a mandamus granted to rehear the application (R. (Brannagan) v. Antrim JJ., (1878) 4 L.R.I. 230, Ex parte Smith, (1878) 3 Q.B.D. 374). If several grounds are mentioned, this means that the tribunal were against the application on each Order of refusal.

Bench equally divided. of such grounds, and the order is good (R. (Leslie) v. Monaghan JJ., (1901) 35 I.L.T.R. 35, 1 N.I.J.R. 68).

The chairman has no casting vote. In R. (Crowley) v. Cork JJ., (1902) 2 I.R. 252, the bench were equally divided; and an order was made up reciting that they were so divided, and rejecting the application. It was held that the order was bad, not only for not stating the grounds of the refusal, but also because the justices, being equally divided, had not adjudicated on the question before them, and that a mandamus should issue to them to hear and determine the application. In R. (McIntyre) v. Donegal JJ., (1902) 2 I.R. 252, the order was "bench equally divided, no rule"; and it was held that a mandamus should go to the justices to hear and determine the application, but that the applicant was not entitled to a mandamus to the clerk of the peace to compel the issue to him of the licensing certificate applied for. In the later case of R. (Mulcahy) v. Tipperary JJ., (1903) 2 I.R. 108, where the order was "this not being the annual quarter sessions, it not seeming fit to the court to grant the application at this sessions, same is refused," it was held that the order was substantially right; and the case was distinguished from the other cases of R. (Crowley) v. Cork JJ. and R. (McIntyre) v. Donegal JJ., on the ground that in Mulcahy's Case the application was at interim quarter sessions, and in the other cases the applications were at annual quarter sessions, but it is submitted that the decision in McIntyre's Case at all events is not sound (see criticism of this case by Gibson, J., in Mulcahy's Case, (1903) 2 I.R., at p. 113).

Re-opening case ; adjournment.

Apparently the justices at licensing quarter sessions have power during the continuance of the sessions to re-open a case (R. (Callaghan) v. Cork JJ., (1895) 2 I.R. 350). "The justices in such sessions assembled shall then, or at some other convenient time to be appointed, proceed to consider, examine into, and adjudicate upon the truth, sufficiency, and validity of such objection" (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 68, s. 4). There is no decision as to the effect of this clause, or as to the power of justices to adjourn an application to the next sessions. Justices at quarter sessions, in the exercise of their criminal jurisdiction, have power to adjourn a matter to next sessions (see p. 9, ante). But the wording of the statute, the existence of the jurisdiction at "interim" sessions to enable the trade to be carried on without a break, and the difficulty in applying Clitheroe's Case, unless the application be made within or at the immediate close of the licensing year, suggest obvious objections to the adjournment of licensing cases from one sessions to another.<sup>1</sup> In R. (O'Leary) v. Kerry JJ., (1903) 3 N.I.J.R. 251, A applied at the annual licensing sessions in 1901 for a new licence. The magistrates were equally divided, and agreed to adjourn to the next licensing sessions, when it was granted. Meanwhile, the Licensing Act of 1902 had come into force. An attempt to uphold the granting of the licence on the ground that the application should be treated as having been disposed of at the 1901 sessions, and the 1902 sessions having been only an adjournment thereof, failed, and the licence was held void. The question of jurisdiction to adjourn does not seem to have been raised.

A licensing certificate granted on condition of payment of money into court to extinguish another licence (R. (Peacocke) v. Recorder of Dublin, (1903) 37 I.L.T.R. 145), or on an undertaking that something will be done to complete the applicants' title (R. (Barton) v. Donegal JJ., (1904) 39 I.L.T.R. 89), is void.<sup>1</sup>

Grant of licence to be unconditional.

Power is conferred on justices at quarter sessions to hear appeals from a refusal to renew a publican's licence (18 & 19 Vict. c. 62; 23 & 24 Vict. c. 35), or from an order granting or refusing a beer "off" licence or spirit grocer's licence (Beerhouses (Ireland) Act, (1864) s. 13; Licensing Act, 1872, s. 82; see APPEALS TO QUARTER SESSIONS, pp. 141, 142).

Appeal from refusal to renew.

Justices have power to grant dancing and music hall licences under the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, 53 & 54 Vict. c. 59, s. 51, which applies only where Part IV of that Act has been applied by the local authorities. See CATALOGUE OF SUMMARY OFFENCES, "PUBLIC HEALTH."

Music hall Licences.

Under the Lunatic Asylums (Ireland) Act, 1842, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 123, s. 3, no person shall keep a house for the reception of two or more insane persons, unless licensed in manner provided by the Act, sections four to eight of which prescribe the procedure. The licence is granted by the justices at quarter sessions under the hands and seals of three or more of the justices. Notice of application for the licence must be served on the clerk of the peace at least fourteen days before the sessions. The notice must state the full Christian name and surname and place of abode of the applicant, and in case he should not propose to dwell in the house, the Christian name and surname and previous occupation of the resident superintendent. The notice must also state whether the house is to be used for the reception of male or female patients, or both; and if for both, the number of each sex proposed to be received, and the means of keeping them apart. The notice must be accompanied by a plan as provided. The licence is according to the form in the schedule, and to be signed by two or more justices and to be stamped with a ten-shilling stamp, and the clerk of the peace is to furnish the inspectors in lunacy with a copy of the licence, notice, and plan.

Licences for private asylums.

It shall be lawful for the commissioners and officers of excise, and they are hereby authorized and empowered, to grant retail licences to any person to sell beer, spirits, and wine in any theatre established under a royal patent, or in any theatre or other place of public entertainment licensed by the lord chamberlain or by justices of the peace, without the production by the person applying for such licence or licences of any certificate or authority for such person to keep a common inn, alehouse, or victualling house; anything in any Act or Acts to the contrary notwithstanding (Excise Act, 1835, 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 39, s. 7).

Theatre Licences.

The effect of this provision is that a licence to sell liquor can be granted without any certificate of justices in respect of theatres, etc., to which a patent or chamberlain's licence is attached.<sup>2</sup> As regards

<sup>1</sup> See also Rossi v. Provost of Edinburgh, (1905) A.C. 21; Taylor v. Winsford U.D.C., (1907) 2 K.B. 396. An undertaking not to take full advantage of the licensing facilities conferred by the licence seems to be void (per Palles, C.B., in R. (Bourke) v. Dublin JJ., (1903) 2 I.R. 429, at p. 437; cf. London C.C. v. Bermondsey Bioscope Co., (1910) 27 T.L.R. 141).

<sup>2</sup> A patent may be granted in Dublin under 26 Geo. 3, c. 57. Theatres may be licensed by the mayor in Belfast (Belfast Improvement Act, 1845, 8 & 9 Vict. c. cxlii, s. 242). In Cork a licence from the corporation is required (Cork Improvement Act, 1868, 31 & 32 Vict., c. xxxii, pt. 19, s. 172). Query.—Do these licences in Belfast and Cork come within the meaning of s. 7 of 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 39? The licence in the Act is required to be granted by a justice of the peace—a licence by a mayor or corporation does not appear to be the licence required. No chamberlain's licence exists in Ireland.

other theatres, no licence is required (save in Dublin, where a penalty of £300 is enacted by 26 Geo. 3, c. 57, s. 2, for acting plays in a theatre to which a patent is not attached),<sup>1</sup> to act plays, etc., but if a licence to sell liquor is required, the theatre must be licensed as a theatre by the justices, and when so licensed as a theatre, an excise licence can be granted in respect of it under the foregoing section. It is submitted that this means justices at quarter sessions, and that the application can be made ex parte, and that the justices have an absolute discretion in the matter.

The licence authorizes the sale of liquor (a) only within the part of the theatre specified in the licence, (b) only to persons employed in or bona fide attending the performance, and (c) only during the performance, or thirty minutes before or thirty minutes after the performance (Licensing (Ir.) Act, 1874, 37 & 38 Vict. c. 69, s. 7).<sup>2</sup>

tions for—(1) temporary transfer of publicans' licences; (2) renewal of publicans' licences; (3) spirit grocers', beer dealers', and beer retailers' "off" licences; (4) registration of clubs; (5) exemption orders, and (6) hawkers' licences and game licences.

Under the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 114, justices at petty sessions are authorized, upon the death of any person having an "on" licence, or upon the removal of such person from the premises, or the sale or assignment of his interest therein by operation of law or otherwise, if they shall think proper so to do, after examining on oath all necessary parties, to transfer the licence by endorsement thereon to any person not disqualified by law to whom it shall be proposed at the time of such application to transfer such licence, to carry on the same business in the premises until the quarter sessions held next after the expiration of one calendar month from the time of the transfer and no longer (s. 1). In Dublin the power to transfer is vested in one of the police magistrates (s. 2). The transferee is subject to all the powers, regulations, proceedings, penalties, and provisions in force concerning licensed persons (s. 2; see MacDonald v. Hughes, (1902) 1 K.B. 94). If a licensed person assigns the premises and licence, and the transferee gets an authority to trade under the section, and subsequently the premises and licence are re-assigned to the original licensed person, such licensed person can thereupon carry on the trade during the currency of the licence as if no such transfer had taken place (Dumigan v. Walsh, (1904) 2 I.R. 298, 38 I.L.T.R. 92; cf. R. (Duggan) v. Fermanagh JJ., (1909) 2 I.R. 132).

The justices under this section have jurisdiction to refuse the transfer, which is really only an authority to trade, without assigning any reason (R. (Cox) v. Recorder of Dublin, (1885) 16 L.R.I. 434; R. (Duggan) v. Fermanagh JJ., supra, at p. 158). The application can be made ex parte, but the usual course is to serve an informal notice upon the police. The application can only be made at a time when quarter sessions for the district are not being held (s. 1).

Temporary transfer of publican's
licence.

Apart from the powers conferred by this section, s. 3 of the Licensing Act of 1872 empowers the heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns of any licensed person, or the trustee of a bankrupt or arranging licensed person, to carry on the trade until the special session (i.e., petty sessions, see Licensing Act, 1872, s. 77) next ensuing, or if the special session be held within fourteen days after the death of the licensed person, or the appointment of his trustee in the case of bankruptcy or arrangement, until the next special session but one (see Rose v. Frogley, (1893) 17 Cox 685).<sup>1</sup>

licence.

The holder of an "on" licence, before he can renew same, is obliged to produce to the excise authorities a certificate signed by two or more justices of the peace at the petty sessions of the district in which the applicant resides, or if in Dublin by a divisional justice of the district in which he resides, certifying to the good character of the applicant, and the peaceable and orderly manner in which the house has been conducted for the past year (17 & 18 Vict. c. 89, s. 11). As a rule, the certificate is not to be granted, unless at the annual licensing petty sessions<sup>2</sup>; but the justices may, in their discretion, grant same at sessions other than the annual licensing sessions (Licensing (Ireland) Act, 1874, s. 12; see R. (Murphy) v. McCarthy, (1888) 22 L.R.I. 18). It is submitted that even after the expiry of the licensing year there is jurisdiction to grant the renewal certificate, provided the application for same be made within six months from the termination of the licensing year (see definition of "new licence" in section 37 of Licensing (Ireland) Act, 1874, and R. v. Liverpool JJ., (1883) 11 Q.B.D. 638). An objection to the renewal may be made apparently by any person, but can only be made to the good character of the applicant and the peaceable and orderly manner in which the house has been conducted for the past year. It is submitted that the practice of making objection on the ground of structural alterations of the premises is not well founded, unless the alterations be such as to render the premises substantially different from the premises theretofore licensed (see R. v. Sheffield JJ., (1889) 63 J.P. 595; Stringer v. Huddersfield JJ., (1875) 40 J.P. 22, 33 L.T. 568; R. v. Raffles, (1876) 1 Q.B.D. 207).<sup>3</sup> Evidence of a general disorderly business is admissible (Sharpe v. Hughes, (1893) 57 J.P. 104); even though the facts relied upon have been made the foundation of a charge against the licensed person which has been dismissed (Latimer v. Birmingham JJ., (1896) 60 J.P. 660). Such evidence of disorderly business should usually be confined to the preceding year; but where a statement was made by the solicitor for the applicant that there was only one conviction against the premises, it was held that this statement allowed evidence to be given of previous convictions, though not within the licensing year (R. (Quinn) v. Tyrone JJ., (1908) 2 I.R. 124). The term "character" does not mean disposition, but reputation amongst one's neighbours (R. v. Rowton, (1865) 34 L.J.(M.C.) 57; Leader v. Yell, (1864) 16

<sup>1</sup> In this case it was held to be no objection that the person carrying on the trade under the protection order was a minor; but the attention of the Court was not called to 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, s. 20, forbidding the entry of any licensed premises in the name of any person under twenty-one.

C.B.N.S. 595; R. (McKenney) v. Antrim JJ., (1901) 2 I.R. 133, 167).<sup>1</sup> The justices have no power to grant a renewal unless business has been bona fide carried on in the premises during the past year<sup>2</sup> (R. (Cox) v. Recorder of Dublin, (1885) 16 L.R.I. 424; R. (Lambe) v. Armagh JJ., (1897) 2 I.R. 57, 30 I.L.T.R. 47; R. (Morell) v. Antrim JJ., (1900) 2 I.R. 492; R. (Roe) v. Roscommon JJ., (1905) 2 I.R. 101, 112, 37 I.L.T.R. 252); though, if the non-carrying on of the business can be explained by real reasons, such as poverty, sickness, death, illness, and there is no intention to abandon the trade, apparently a renewal certificate can be granted (R. (Lambe) v. Armagh JJ., (1897) 2 I.R. 57, at p. 68). There is no decision as to whether, when a change in the ownership of the premises by death, assignment, or otherwise has occurred during the licensing year, a renewal certificate is necessary or can be granted; but it is probable that it cannot, and the practice in Dublin has been in such cases not to entertain or require applications for a renewal certificate. The proper course is for the assignee, &c., to get a temporary transfer at petty sessions which will enable him to carry on the trade until the next quarter sessions, or the next quarter sessions but one, if the first quarter sessions occurs within one month from the date of granting the temporary transfer (18 & 19 Vict. c. 114, s. 1). The applicant for a renewal certificate must make an application in some form or another, e.g. by sending a messenger or applying by letter (Carman v. St. Margaret's JJ., (1900) 64 J.P. 488), but need not attend personally unless required by the justices to do so for some special cause personal to himself (Licensing Ireland) Act, 1874, s. 14). To ground an objection, seven days' previous notice of intention<sup>3</sup> to oppose must be given, stating in general terms the grounds of objection; but if, no notice of objection having been served, objection is made in court, the justices may adjourn the signing of the certificate to a future day, and require the attendance of the applicant; all evidence with respect to the signing of the certificate shall be given on oath in open Court (ib.). An order refusing the renewal certificate must state the grounds of refusal (18 & 19 Vict. c. 62, s. 1). The granting of the certificate must be the act of the majority of the Court, and two or more justices forming a minority cannot grant and sign the certificate when the remaining justices form an objecting majority (R. (Cusack) v. O'Connell, (1888) 20 L.R.I. 625; see also R. (McClinchy) v. Greer, (1904) 2 I.R. 494, 497). No certificate can be granted where the Court is evenly divided (R. (Moriarty) v. Dublin JJ., (1903) 2 I.R. 420, 463). A right of appeal from a refusal of a renewal certificate is given (18 & 19 Vict. c. 62, s. 2; for procedure, see APPEALS TO QUARTER SESSIONS, p. 141). The determination of justices on an application for a licensing certificate cannot be the subject of a case stated (Re Dillon, (1859) 11 I.C.L.R. 232).

All original applications for spirit grocers' or beer dealers' or beer retailers' "off" certificates lie exclusively within the jurisdiction of justices at petty sessions, or the divisional justices in Dublin. Spirit grocers' licences and beer dealers' and beer retailers' licences are Spirit grocers.

Spirit grocers, subject to the provisions of the Licensing Act, 1902, forbidding, generally speaking, the granting of a licence except in respect of premises licensed on the 31st of July, 1902, or at any time since 1st January, 1902.<sup>1</sup>

A spirit grocer's licence, properly called a spirit retailer's off licence, authorizes the sale of spirits for consumption off the premises in quantities not exceeding, at any one time to one person, two gallons, or one dozen reputed quart bottles. The liquor cannot be sold in open vessels (Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, 10 Ed. 7, c. 8, First Schedule). A person cannot obtain a spirit grocer's licence, whether by way of new licence, transfer, or renewal, without obtaining a certificate of justices at petty sessions, or in Dublin of a divisional justice.

APPLICATION.	CERTIFICATE.
Transfer or new licence where applicant has within the preceding two years had a licence as a spirit grocer or beer retailer.	To the good character of the applicant, the suitability of the premises, and the peaceable and orderly manner in which the applicant has carried on his business during the year next preceding the expiration of his former licence.
Transfer or new licence by applicants other than foregoing.	To the good character of the applicant, and the suitability of the premises.
Renewal.	To the good character of the applicant, and the peaceable and orderly manner in which he has carried on his business during the past year.

The applicant must give twenty-one days' notice in writing, stating his intention to make the application, and setting forth his place of residence and the situation of the premises, and, if the applicant has been previously licensed for the sale of any excisable liquors, the notice must state the place of his former business as such licensee, and the date when he discontinued same. The notice must be served on the district inspector of police of the district where the applicant resides, or, in his absence, on the head constable, or in Dublin on the superintendent of police of the division in which he resides (Licensing Act, 1872, s. 82; Beerhouses (Ireland) Act, 1864, 27 & 28 Vict. c. 35, s. 4). There is no power to grant a certificate unless the notice has been duly served (R. (Byrne) v. Dublin JJ., (1903) 37 I.L.T.R. 250, 4 N.I.J.R. 48). An application in the case of a new licence can only be made at the annual licensing petty sessions<sup>2</sup> (63 & 64 Vict. c. 30, s. 2), in the case of a transfer, at any petty sessions, and in the case of a renewal usually at the annual licensing petty sessions, though there is jurisdiction, where the justices see fit, to hear renewal applications at petty sessions other than the annual licensing petty sessions (Licensing (Ireland) Act, 1874, s. 12; R. (Murphy) v. McCarthy, (1888) 22 L.R.I. 18). In the case of an application for a new licence any resident or owner of property within the parish may object (63 & 64 Vict. c. 30, s. 1), as well as the police authorities (27 & 28 Vict. c. 35, s. 5). In other cases the only persons who can object are the district inspector of police, or, in his absence, the head constable, or in Dublin the superintendent of police of the division (27 & 28 Vict. c. 35, s. 5; R. (McKenney) v. Antrim JJ., (1901) 2 I.R. 133, 162). The justices have full discretion to refuse an application for a new licence on any ground whatsoever (63 & 64 Vict. c. 30, s. 1). In other cases the objection must be limited to the matters mentioned in the certificate. The necessities or circumstances of the surrounding neighbourhood are not matters that may be considered in considering the question of the suitability of the premises (R. (Marshall) v. Tyrone JJ., (1895) 2 I.R. 174, 28 I.L.T.R. 133). The applicant must reside within the district (R. (Gilbey) v. Fermanagh JJ., (1897) 2 I.R. 559, 31 I.L.T.R. 133). An appeal lies either from a grant or a refusal of the certificate (Licensing Act, 1872, s. 82, Beerhouses (Ireland) Act (1864) s. 13).<sup>1</sup> As to procedure, see p. 142, post.

There is no provision in the case of "off" licences, enabling a temporary authority to trade, to be granted, so as to give an artificial prolongation to the existence of the licence; and hence difficulties occur. If the licensee dies at an awkward date—e.g. less than twenty-one days from the 10th October, to use the date applicable in the pre-Budget calendar, as being the most familiar—what is to happen? No renewal can be granted, as a renewal to a dead person is a mere nullity (Cowles v. Gale, (1871) L.R. 7 Ch. 12). No transfer can be granted before the 10th October, because twenty-one days' notice cannot be served. The licence dies (again speaking of the old calendar at midnight on the 10th October. Is the application, which the licensee's widow and executrix must make, to be hung up, as an application for a "new" licence within 63 & 64 Vict. c. 30, until the 10th October the following year, the premises being meanwhile shut? It is conceived that s. 37 of the Licensing (Ir.) Act, 1874, defining a "new licence," a "new excise licence," and a "new wholesale beer dealer's licence," to mean such licences "granted in respect of premises in respect of which a similar licence has not theretofore been granted, or, if granted, has been annulled or has not been in force during the preceding six months," may be called in aid, and that there is jurisdiction, in the instance given, to grant a licence to the widow and executrix if she applies within six months from the expiry of the former licence.

With regard to beer dealers' and beer retailers' licences, the certificate of two justices, or in Dublin of a divisional justice, is required. A beer dealer's licence authorizes the sale of beer at any one time to any one person, for off consumption, in quantities not

less than four and a half gallons, or two dozen reputed quart bottles (Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, 10 Ed. 7, c. 8, First Schedule). A beer retailer's off licence authorizes the sale by retail at any one time to one person of beer for consumption off the premises in any quantity not exceeding four and a half gallons, or two dozen reputed quart bottles (Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, 10 Ed. 7, c. 8, First Schedule). The following table<sup>1</sup> will show the certificates required in the case of either a beer dealer or beer retailer (Beer Houses Act, 1864, s. 3; Beer Licences Regulations Act, 1877, s. 2; Beer Retailers' and Spirit Grocers' Licences Act, 1900, Licensing (Ir.) 1874, ss. 8, 37):—

APPLICATION.	CERTIFICATE.
New licence, . . . .	To the good character of the applicant, the suitability of the premises, that they are rated, if in a city or town of a population exceeding 10,000, at £15 or upwards, if elsewhere at £8 or upwards, and that they have been in exclusive occupation of the applicant for three months prior to the certificate.
Transfer, . . . .	To the good character of the applicant, the rating of the premises (as above), and, if the transfer arise otherwise than upon the death or removal of the person in occupation immediately prior to the transfer, exclusive occupation (as above).
Renewal, . . . .	To the good character of the applicant, the peaceable and orderly conduct of the house during the past year, the rating and exclusive occupation (as above).

The Licensing Act, 1902, applies to beer dealers' and beer retailers' licences.<sup>2</sup>

As regards a new beer retailer's licence, the application can only be made at the annual licensing petty sessions (63 & 64 Vict. c. 30, s. 2), may be refused on any grounds the justices may think proper (ib. s. 1), and the class of possible objectors includes not only the district inspector of police, or in his absence the head constable (27 & 28 Vict. c. 35, s. 5), but also any resident or owner of property in the parish (63 & 64 Vict. c. 30, s. 1). As regards other applications for a beer retailer's licence, and as regards all applications for beer dealer's licence (to neither of which the 63 & 64 Vict. c. 30 applies), the application may be made at any time, the grounds of objection are limited to the matters required in the appropriate certificate, and the district inspector or head constable is the only competent objector.<sup>3</sup> The procedure and right of appeal are the same as in case of spirit grocers (see p. 123, ante. and p. 142, post.).

Referring to the valuation, the premises must be actually valued at the time the application is made, and a provisional valuation is not sufficient (R. (Morris) v. Derry JJ., (1900) 1 N.I.J.R. 66).

By the Refreshment Houses (Ireland) Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 107), the justices at petty sessions have power to object of their own motion to the granting of a new wine "on" licence for any of the reasons mentioned in section 13 of the Act, and to the renewal or transfer of an existing licence under section 17, and under s. 14 have power, upon objection made by the police, to forbid the issue of a new licence. If the justices so object or forbid the licence, it cannot be issued unless the applicant is successful (s. 16) in the appeal to quarter sessions provided by section 15.

Wine licences.

An occasional licence is a licence granted by the Inland Revenue authorities to an already licensed person, authorizing him to sell, at a place other than his licensed premises, the like articles which he is already licensed to sell upon his licensed premises (25 & 26 Vict. c. 22, s. 13). Such licence may be granted for the sale of beer only (Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, 10 Ed. 7, c. 8, First Schedule).

Occasional licences.

Any justice, usually acting at petty sessions for the petty sessions division in which the proposed place of sale is situate, may, whether sitting at petty sessions or not, sign a consent upon which the applicant may obtain an occasional licence (25 & 26 Vict. c. 22, s. 13; 26 & 27 Vict. c. 33, s. 20).<sup>1</sup>

An exemption order authorizes a licensed person to sell upon his licensed premises intoxicating liquor at times prohibited by law;<sup>2</sup> but an exemption order cannot be granted so as to authorize the sale of liquor between one and two o'clock in the morning. The order is granted where it is necessary or desirable for the accommodation of any considerable number of persons attending any public market or fair or following any lawful trade or calling. In Dublin the exemption order is granted by the chief commissioner or assistant commissioner of police, elsewhere by two or more justices at petty sessions (Licensing (Ir.) Act, 1874, 37 & 38 Vict. c. 69, s. 11). Unless the order is expressly limited to certain classes of persons, the licensed person can sell to any member of the public under it, but the justices, if they so desire, can so limit the operation of the order (Gamble v. Green, (1910) 44 I.L.T.R. 14). Seem, the jurisdiction to make the order should appear by a proper recital that the justices deem it necessary or desirable for the accommodation of any considerable number of persons attending any public market or fair, or following any lawful trade or calling (ib.). The justices, under colour of compliance with the section, cannot make a wholesale order extending the time for keeping open practically all the licensed premises in the district (R. v. Johnson, (1905) 2 K.B. 59). The words "following any lawful trade or calling" were intended to refer to some special calling, such as that of night-porters at a railway station, and the jurisdiction was intended to be confined to some particular public-house in the immediate vicinity of the place where the persons following that special calling worked (ib., per Lord Alverstone, C.J., at p. 64). A notice of the exemption order, in the prescribed form, must be kept affixed to the premises, under a penalty not exceeding £5 (Licensing

order to Dublin hotels and restaurants.

By the Hotels and Restaurants (Dublin) Act, 1910 (10 Ed. 7 and 1 Geo. 5, c. 33, if the holder of a licence for any hotel or restaurant within the police district of Dublin metropolis applies to a divisional justice for that district for an order exempting him on any special occasion from the provisions of the Licensing Acts relating to the closing of premises, it shall be lawful for the divisional justice, if he in his discretion thinks fit so to do, to grant the applicant such an order, upon such conditions as he thinks proper, exempting him during the hours and on the special occasion to be specified in the order, and the holder of any such licence to whom an order has been granted under the Act shall not, if and so long as he complies with the conditions upon which the order has been granted, be subject to any penalty for the contravention of the provisions of the Licensing Acts<sup>1</sup> relating to the closing of premises during the time to which the order extends, but he shall not be exempted by any such order from any penalty to which he may be subject by any other provisions of those Acts or by any other Act (s. 2 (1)). An order granted with respect to any Saturday shall not extend beyond twelve o'clock on Saturday night (s. 2 (2)). An order shall not be granted under the Act unless the applicant has, not less than twenty-four hours before making the application, served upon the superintendent of police for the division in which the hotel or restaurant is situated, a notice of his intention to apply for the order, setting out his name and address, and the place, occasion, and time for which the order is sought (s. 3). Section 64 of the Licensing Act, 1872, which relates to the production of licences and penalties for non-production, applies to orders granted under the Act (s. 2 (3)).

Registration of
Procedure.

The Registration of Clubs (Ireland) Act, 1904, 4 Ed. 7 c. 9,<sup>2</sup> makes provision for the registration of clubs in which excisable liquors are sold. The register is to be kept by the registrar, that is, the petty sessions clerk, or in Dublin the principal clerk at each police court. The application for registration is made by the secretary of the club lodging with the registrar for the petty sessions district in which the club is situate an application signed by the chairman or secretary, stating the name and object of the club, and the address of the premises occupied by the club, and publishing a notice of the application once in a daily newspaper circulating in the locality. The application is to be accompanied by (1) two copies of the rules, (2) a list of the names and addresses of the officials and committee of management, and the names of the members, and (3) a certificate to be signed by two justices that the club is conducted as a bona fide club, and not mainly for the supply of liquors; this certificate to be signed, (a) where the premises are situate in the county borough of Dublin by two justices of the peace for the county borough, and where the premises are situate in the Dublin metropolitan police district not within the county borough, by two justices of the peace for the county Dublin, or, if the premises are situate elsewhere in Ireland, by two justices of the peace sitting in petty sessions for the district where the premises are situate, and also (b) where the premises are not owned by the club, by the owner of the premises, or where the owner is under any legal disability, by his legal representative (s. 2). Such certificate shall not be signed by a divisional justice; and any justice who has signed such a certificate is debarred from adjudicating on the application (s. 11).<sup>1</sup> In the case of a renewal the same procedure is required; the application to be made not later than twenty-one days prior to expiry of certificate; and on every application a fee of five shillings is payable to the registrar (s. 2). In case of failure or neglect to apply for renewal within due time, the renewal shall not be granted unless the failure is due to inadvertence. The registrar gives notice of the application, if in Dublin to the superintendent of police of the district, and elsewhere to the district inspector of the Royal Irish constabulary; and, if no objection is taken, the court, if satisfied that the application has been duly made and that the rules of the club are in conformity with the provisions of the Act, shall grant the application (s. 3 (1)). The superintendent of police or the district inspector of the Royal Irish constabulary or any person resident in the parish in which the club premises are situate may lodge objections to the grant or renewal of the certificate on any of the grounds specified in the Act, the objections to be lodged by the objectors with the registrar within ten days of the receipt or publication of the notice of application, and at the same time a copy of the objections shall be sent by them to the secretary of the club. The Court (meaning a court of summary jurisdiction, and, outside Dublin, two or more justices sitting in petty sessions in the district where the premises are situated (s. 13)) shall, as soon as may be, hear the application, may order such inquiries as it thinks fit, and thereafter shall grant or refuse the application (s. 3 (3)). The certificate of registration, if granted, remains in force for twelve months from the date of issue (ib.). The Court has power to order costs to be paid by the unsuccessful party (s. 3 (4)). In order to satisfy the requirements of the statute, the rules of the club shall provide certain matters set forth in section 4. The grounds of objection to the registration are set forth in section 5, and are as follows:—(a) The character of the chairman or secretary or of any official or member of the committee of management or governing body; (b) the suitability of the premises; (c) that the application, or the rules, or any of them, are, in any respect specified in such objection, not in conformity with the provisions of the Act; (d) that the club has ceased to exist, or that the number of members is less than 25; (e) that the club is not conducted in good faith as a club, or that it is kept or habitually used for any unlawful purpose, or mainly for the supply of excisable liquor; (f) that there is frequent drunkenness on the club premises, or that persons in a state of intoxication are frequently seen to leave the club premises, or that the club is conducted in a disorderly manner; (g) that illegal sales of excisable liquor have taken place on the club premises; (h) that persons who are not members are habitually admitted to the club merely for the purpose of obtaining excisable liquor; (i) that the club occupies premises in respect of which, within twelve months next preceding the formation of the club, a licence for the sale of excisable liquor has been forfeited, or a certificate under the Licensing (Ireland) Acts, 1833 to 1900, in respect of the renewal of any such licence has been refused,<sup>1</sup> or in respect of which an order has been made that they shall not be used for the purposes of a club; (j) that the supply of excisable liquor to the club is not under the control of the members or the committee appointed by the members; (k) that any of the rules of the club are habitually broken; (l) that the rules have been so changed as not to be in conformity with the provisions of section 4.

Search
warrant.

The Act gives power to a justice of the peace or divisional justice, if satisfied by information on oath that there is reasonable ground to believe that a registered club is so carried on as to constitute a ground of objection to the renewal of its certificate, or that an offence under the Act has been or is being committed, or that any excisable liquor is sold or supplied or kept for sale or supply, to grant a search warrant to a constable or constables to search and inspect the club, and take the names and addresses of the persons found therein and to seize books and papers (s. 6). Power is given to the court upon summary complaint by or at the instance of a competent objector, or in case of conviction, to cancel the certificate of registration (s. 9). Penalties are provided for supplying liquor in an unregistered club (s. 7), for supplying liquor for consumption outside the registered club (s. 8), and for offences by the officials (s. 10), and for making a false application (s. 12). If on a summary complaint being made, the court grants a summons, the summons shall be served on the secretary and on such other person, if any, as the court may direct (s. 11).

Appeal.

The decision of the court in dealing with an application for an original certificate, or the renewal of a certificate, or in cancelling a certificate, shall be subject to appeal in manner provided by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts as if it was an order subject to appeal under these Acts (s. 11).

Effect of registration.

The registration of a club under the Act shall not constitute the club licensed premises or authorize any sale of liquor which would otherwise be illegal (s. 1 (2)).

Duty on purchases in club.

It shall be the duty of the secretary of every registered club to deliver to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue in the month of January in every year, or within such further time as the Commissioners may in any case allow, a statement of the purchases during the preceding calendar year of intoxicating liquor to be supplied in or to the club or on behalf of the club to the members thereof, in such form and containing such particulars as may be prescribed by the Commissioners, and every such statement shall be charged with an excise duty of sixpence for every pound of the purchases shown in the statement (Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, 10 Ed. 7, c. 8, s. 48 (1)). If the secretary of a club fails to deliver such statement after a notice in writing from the Commissioners requiring him so to do has been served on him, either by leaving it at the club premises or by sending it to him by post addressed to the club, he shall be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding £20, and in the case of a subsequent offence to imprisonment with or without hard labour for a term not exceeding one month, or to a fine not exceeding £50, or to both; and, if he knowingly delivers a statement which is in any material particular untrue, he shall be liable on summary conviction to imprisonment with or without hard labour for a term not exceeding three months, or to a fine not exceeding £50, or to both imprisonment and fine (ib., s. 48 (2)).<sup>1</sup> Duties in arrear may be levied by distress as prescribed (s. 48 (3)). If any duty payable under the section remains unpaid after the first day of March in any year, or if the secretary of a club fails in any year to deliver a statement as required by the section, the supply of any intoxicating liquor in the club shall, so long as the duty remains unpaid, or the failure continues, as the case may be, be deemed to be a sale of intoxicating liquor without a licence (s. 48 (4)).

governing appeals.

No right of appeal exists unless when expressly conferred by statute. There is, for instance, no right of appeal against a fine imposed by a coroner (R. (Redmond) v. Armagh JJ., (1895) 30 I.L.T.R. 17).

When appeal given by Petty Sessions
Act applies.

The Petty Sessions (Ireland) Act, 1851, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 93, and the Fines Act (Ireland), 1851, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 90, contain general provisions as to appeal in cases of summary jurisdiction.

The applicability of the general appeal provisions of the Petty Sessions Act is not such an easy question as might be at first supposed.

Statutes passed before 1851.

The opinion generally, and, it is submitted, rightly, held, is that, so far as regards statutes passed before the Petty Sessions Act, 1851,<sup>1</sup> the right of appeal and the procedure thereunder are governed exclusively by the Petty Sessions Act, whether the pre-1851 statute itself expressly dealt with appeal or not.<sup>2</sup> Appeals under the Fishery Acts, therefore, would seem to be regulated by the Petty Sessions Act; and no appeal from a conviction will lie unless where the fine exceeds twenty shillings.<sup>3</sup>

As regards statutes specially excepted from the operation of the Petty Sessions Act (as to which see p. 41, ante), the particular statute must be looked to (see infra).

<sup>3</sup> The later County Officers and Courts (Ir.) Act, 1877, 40 & 41 Vict. c. 56, s. 72, gives also an express right of appeal from a dismissal. The Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 88), s. 51, gives a right of appeal to assizes from offences in relation to fixed nets, and it has been held in the county court that such right is impliedly repealed (Hosford v. McAuliffe, (1884) 29 I.L.T.R. 31), but this is very doubtful (see Hosford v. Devine, (1898) 2 I.R. 28; see also CATALOGUE OF SUMMARY OFFENCES, "FISHERIES").

Statutes passed since 1851 may be divided into three classes:—

Statutes passed since 1851.

(C) Statutes which either (1) merely enact that the penalties shall be recoverable<sup>3</sup> on summary conviction, without expressly incorporating the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, or saying anything about appeal<sup>4</sup>; or (2) enact that penalties shall be recovered in manner provided by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, and are silent as to appeal.<sup>5</sup> The general rule is, that an appeal does not lie unless expressly given, and cannot be extended by an equitable construction to cases not distinctly enumerated (R. v. Surrey JJ., (1788) 2 T.R. 504; R. v. Hanson, (1821) 4 B. & Ald. 521; R. v. Stock, (1838) 8 A. & E. 405; Steer v. Bennett, (1903) 67 J.P. 112; Davy v. Bennett, (1905) 79 J.P. 200; R. v. Otto Monstead, (1906) 2 K.B. 456).

The case of R. (Hegarty) v. Dublin JJ., (1899) 2 I.R. 310, goes some way to support an argument that in cases within class (C) no appeal lies. The defendant in that case was convicted, before a Dublin divisional justice, under section 1 of the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 41), of cruelty to children, an offence which, under the section, may be tried "either on indictment or by a court of summary jurisdiction." Section 19 of the same statute provides that a person convicted may appeal "to a court of quarter sessions."<sup>6</sup> The Act provides no procedure as to appeal, and is silent as to the incorporation of the Dublin Police Acts or the Summary Jurisdiction Acts. It was held that the procedure sections under 1 Vict. c. 25 (the general statute regulating appeals in the Dublin metropolitan police district), including the provision as to the release of an appellant upon his entering into recognizances, were not impliedly applied by the Act of 1894, and that, therefore, the defendant, whose right to appeal, given in express terms by section 19

of the Act of 1894 was undoubted, should remain in custody pending the hearing of the appeal. The attention of the court, however, does not seem to have been drawn to the provisions of the Fines Act (Ir.), 1874, s. 5, which see at p. 1061.

On the other hand, the settled practice of allowing appeals in cases within this class, the analogy of R. v. Unkles, (1874) I.R. 8 C.L. 50, and the obvious intention, shown in the enactment of section 5 of the Fines Act (Ir.), 1874, of establishing a uniform right and procedure (unless where the particular statute itself furnishes an express right and procedure), are strong arguments the other way, and it is submitted that in cases within class (C) the right and procedure as to appeals would be held to be regulated by the Petty Sessions Act.

appeal under Petty Sessions
Act.

The Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 24, provides as follows:—

In any case of summary jurisdiction, where an order shall be made by the justices for payment of any penal or other sum exceeding twenty shillings, or for any term of imprisonment exceeding one month, or for the doing of anything at a greater expense than forty shillings, or for the estreating of any recognizance to a greater amount than twenty shillings (but in no other case), either party (whether he shall be the complainant or the defendant<sup>1</sup>) in cases of a civil nature, or the party against whom the order shall have been made in other cases, shall be entitled to appeal to the next quarter sessions to be held in the same division of the county when the order shall have been made by any justice or justices of any petty sessions district (or to the Recorder of any corporate or borough town at his next sessions, when the order shall have been made by any justice or justices of such corporate or borough town) (unless when any such sessions shall commence within seven days from the date of the order, in which case the appeal may be made to the next succeeding sessions of such division or town).

It will be noted that the expression in the section does not authorize an appeal in the case of a fine of twenty shillings exactly, or imprisonment for one month (see Ex parte Novis, (1905) 2 K.B. 456). The appeal lies only where the sum adjudged as penalty, exclusive of the costs, exceeds twenty shillings (R. v. Warwickshire JJ., (1856) 6 E. & B. 841; Ex parte Novis, supra). It is difficult to assign a precise subject-matter to the expression "for the doing of anything at a greater expense than forty shillings." These words seem to refer to a case where an order is made that a party shall himself do something at a greater expense than forty shillings (e.g., a direction to cut a hedge under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 92, s. 9), and not to a case where something is directed or authorized to be done to the property of the party, e.g., the forfeiture of a net under the Fisheries Acts. What would be "at a greater expense than forty shillings" would, it is submitted, be a question of fact for the appeal tribunal. One of several persons aggrieved may appeal without the concurrence of the others (R. (Gibson) v. Fermanagh JJ., (1897) 2 I.R. 603). Where a number of defendants were charged with a joint offence in the same summons, and all of them were convicted and appealed, the fact that the recognizance of one of them was defective was held not to prevent the other defendants from proceeding with the appeal; and the reversal of the order appealed against enured for the benefit of all (R. (Drohan) v. Waterford JJ., (1901) 2 I.R. 548). There is no appeal from an order binding to the peace (Re Hurley, Q.B.D. (Ir.) 19 Dec., 1888); nor, unless the particular statute so directs, from an order of dismissal (R. v. London JJ., (1890) 25 Q.B.D. 357). A right of appeal is given in respect of any order for payment of any penal sum exceeding forty shillings by the Fines Act (Ireland), 14 & 15 Vict. c. 90, s. 9. As to the application thereof and procedure thereunder, see post, p. 138.

The appeal is to the next quarter sessions in the division unless such sessions commence within seven days from the date of the order appealed against, in which event the appeal may<sup>1</sup> be to the next sessions but one (Petty Sessions Act, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 93, s. 24). Where there are several quarter sessions towns in the same civil bill division, the appeal must be taken to the town at which are held the first quarter sessions after the expiration of seven days (R. (Sands) v. Armagh JJ., (1895) 2 I.R. 503). Where the petty sessions district is partly within one quarter sessions division and partly within another quarter sessions division of the same county, the appeal should be taken to the court of quarter sessions of the division in which the hearing before the justices took place, although the offence be charged to have taken place in the other division (R. (Conway) v. Tyrone JJ., (1906) 2 I.R. 164, 39 I.L.T.R. 225, 5 N.I.J.R. 211). In selecting the forum of appeal in such a case, the determining factor is not where the offence was committed, but where it was tried at petty sessions (ib., per Gibson, J., at p. 171).

Procedure
under Petty Sessions Act.

The procedure is regulated by section 24 of the Petty Sessions Act, 1851, as amended by the County Officers and Courts (Ireland) Act, 1877, 40 & 41 Vict. c. 56, s. 72, and is as follows :—

(a) The appellant must serve notice in writing of his intention to appeal, upon the clerk of petty sessions<sup>2</sup> within three days<sup>3</sup> from the date of the order appealed against. Notice of appeal.

Where the right of appeal is given by statute to a party aggrieved, it should be stated in the notice of appeal that the appellant is such a party (R. v. Yorkshire JJ., (1828) 7 B. & C. 678; R. v. Somerset JJ.,

Recognizance.

Where any recognizance or recognizances, which shall have been entered into within the time by law required, before any justice or justices, for the purpose of complying with any such condition of appeal, shall appear to the court before which such appeal is brought to have been insufficiently entered into, or to be otherwise defective or invalid, it shall be lawful for the court, if it shall so think fit, to permit the substitution of a new and sufficient recognizance, or new and sufficient recognizances, to be entered into before such court, in the place of such insufficient, defective, or invalid recognizance or recognizances, and for that purpose to allow such time, and make such examination, and impose such terms as to payment of costs to the respondent or respondents, as to such court shall appear just and reasonable, and such substituted recognizance or recognizances shall be as valid and effectual to all intents and purposes as if the same had been duly entered into at any earlier time or times as required by any Act or Acts now in force.

An infant generally finds security by his friend ; but in Ex parte Williams, (1824) 13 Price 673, it was held that infancy was not a ground for discharging a forfeited recognizance, from which it would appear that an infant can enter into a valid recognizance. A married woman can apparently enter into a recognizance (Russell, 7th ed., 219 (Z) ; but see remarks of Palles, C.B., in R. v. Antrim J.J., (1906) 2 I.R. 328). It seems doubtful whether a corporate body can enter into a recognizance (Cortis v. Kent Waterworks Co., (1827) 7 B. & C. 331 ; per Palles, C.B., in R. v. Antrim J.J., supra). The practice in England is to allow such bodies to enter into recognizances by one member of the corporation, who must, however, have been previously authorized to do so (see Short and Mellor, 2nd ed. 27 ; Southern Counties Deposit Bank v. Boaler, (1895) 11 T.L.R. 568) ; but in R. v. Antrim J.J. (supra), Palles, C.B., expressed the opinion that provisions as to recognizances are not applicable to an appeal by a body corporate, on the principle that lex non cogit impossibilia ; and it has been said that the practice of allowing the corporation to enter into recognizance through a member or officer is merely an evasion of the enactments requiring the recognizance (R. v. Manchester, (1857) 7 E. & B. 459).

<sup>1</sup> It has been held in England, where 42 & 43 Vict. c. 49, s. 31, provides for the recognizances being entered into before a court of summary jurisdiction, that the recognizance may be entered into before any court of summary jurisdiction, whether acting for the same county as the court from whose order the appeal is brought or not (R. v. Durham J.J., (1895) 1 Q.B. 801).

Procedure
under Petty Sessions Act.

Where the appellant is legally competent to enter into the recognizance himself, it seems no one else can do so on his behalf (R. (Drohan) v. Waterford JJ., (1901), 2 I.R. 559, 33 I.L.T.R. 168).

(c) Thereupon the appellant shall be entitled to receive the form of appeal (Form H) containing a certificate of the order appealed from, signed by the justice who shall have made the same, or by any other justice of the same petty sessions, and it shall also be therein certified by the clerk of petty sessions that the notice was duly given, and the recognizance was duly entered into if the fact shall be so.

Form H.

(d) The appellant must give notice in writing to the opposite party of his intention to prosecute the appeal, at least seven clear days before the commencement of the sessions in which the appeal is made.<sup>1</sup> This notice requires no stamp (R. (Coughlan) v. Cork JJ., (1892), 30 L.R.I. 679, 27 I.L.T.R. 8). Service of this notice on the solicitor who appeared at petty sessions for the opposite party is not sufficient (R. (Hamilton) v. Leitrim JJ., (1900) 2 I.R. 397; R. v. Oxfordshire JJ., (1893) 2 Q.B. 149), at all events in the absence of express authority to accept service (see R. (Campbell) v. Donegal JJ., (1890) 24 I.L.T.R. 47), but semble, this notice need not be personally served (see judgments of Holmes, J., and Murphy, J., in R. (Campbell) v. Donegal JJ., supra).

Notice of intention to prosecute.

(e) The clerk of petty sessions shall transmit the recognizance and all the proceedings in the case to the clerk of the peace, or proper officer of the Recorder's court,<sup>2</sup> at least seven days before the commencement of the sessions, or as soon afterwards as practicable, in the same manner as informations (s. 24 (4)); and shall also in offence cases cause a notice of the appeal to be duly served upon the complainant, who shall be the respondent in the appeal, the service to be effected in like manner as in the case of a summons; and by the said notice the respondent shall be required to attend with the necessary witnesses on the hearing of such appeal. The stamp duty on such notice, and the expenses of service thereof shall be borne and paid by the appellant. In case any respondent shall upon being served with such notice fail to comply with the exigency thereof, he shall be liable to a fine not exceeding £5, or such greater sum as the appellant may have been adjudged to pay upon such conviction, to be recovered and levied upon a prosecution by the constabulary; but the justices upon the hearing may remit the whole or any part of the

Petty Sessions District of

Between A.B., Complainant.

and

C.D., Defendant.

Take Notice that it is my intention to prosecute my appeal herein to the next quarter sessions to be held at in said county.

Dated

To A.B., the respondent.

Sessions Act.

penalty if they shall be of opinion that the respondent had any sufficient excuse for his non-compliance (Petty Sessions Clerk (Ireland) Act, 1858, 21 & 22 Vict. c. 100, s. 8 (6)). The service of an unstamped copy of this notice, provided the original is stamped, is sufficient (R. (Brennan) v. Armagh JJ., (1895) 29 I.L.T.R. 137).

Power of court on appeal.

The necessary preliminaries to the appeal having been complied with, the quarter sessions or Recorder may entertain the appeal, and may confirm, vary, or reverse<sup>1</sup> the order made by the justices as so certified in such form of appeal, and may award either party forty shillings for the costs of appeal (Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 24 (6)). The Court have also power to adjourn the appeal, or to remit the matter to the justices at the petty sessions where the original order was made, with such declarations or directions as to the court of appeal shall seem proper, and such justices shall have power to determine the matter when so remitted, having regard to such declarations or directions (County Officers and Courts (Ireland) Act, 1877, 40 & 41 Vict. c. 56, s. 72). The county court judge may proceed with the business of the sessions, even though no justice attends (14 & 15 Vict. c. 57, s. 2). The other justices are not bound to follow the opinion of the county court judge on a question of law. (R. (Kennedy) v. Antrim JJ., (1903) 2 I.R. 671). The appeal is a rehearing, and the complainant begins.

The Court has power to vary the original order by increasing the penalty (Ex parte M'Fadden, (1888) Judgment of the Superior Courts 165), or, while varying a sentence of imprisonment, to order, on its expiration, that the defendant shall give sureties to keep the peace, or in default be further imprisoned (Ex parte Harken, (1889) 24 L.R.I. 427).

An order "that the dismiss on the merits be reversed," and directing the defendant to pay a certain fine and costs, is a good conviction (R. (Conway) v. Tyrone JJ., (1906) 2 I.R. 164, 39 I.L.T.R. 225, 5 N.I.J.R. 211). The complainant appealed to quarter sessions from an order of "dismiss," and at the hearing of the appeal, on the ground that the dismiss (being neither "without prejudice" nor "on the merits") was a mere nullity, applied to have the case struck out, which was done, notwithstanding defendant's protest. The complainant then took out a fresh summons, which the justices refused to hear. The complainant applied for a mandamus, which was refused, on the ground that the first order was not a mere nullity, that it was the subject of appeal, and the quarter sessions had power to entertain the appeal and adjudicate thereon, and that the case came within the rule that the party had another remedy, which he himself abandoned (R. (Bridges & Ram) v. Armagh JJ., (1897) 2 I.R. 236). On the hearing of an appeal, the justices must confine themselves to the charge upon which the conviction was made, and cannot convict upon other charges included in the summons at petty sessions, which were dismissed (R. v. Gamble, (1847) 16 M. & W. 384). A. was charged in one summons with several different offences, and was convicted at petty sessions on one charge, the others being dismissed, and an order to that effect was duly entered in the order book. A. appealed, and an erroneous form of certificate (Form H) was made out, which recited the several charges, and stated generally that the defendant was convicted and fined, but containing no statement showing upon what charge, or as to the other charges having been dismissed. Held, that the order so affirmed was bad upon its face as not showing upon what charge the defendant was convicted, and that the defendant was entitled, upon continuances being entered, to prosecute his appeal (R. (M'Arde) v. Louth JJ., (1904) 2 I.R. 64). The court of quarter sessions has power during its sitting to alter its own judgment or order, and the continuity of the sessions is not broken by the presence or absence of individual justices other than the statutory chairman (R. (Callaghan) v. Cork JJ., (1895) 2 I.R. 350). As to power of amendment, see p. 93 et seq.; and as to power of adjournment, see p. 9.

Power of court on appeal.

There is no decision as to what is to happen in the event of an even division of justices. The chairman has no casting vote. It is suggested that an adjournment of the case would be a proper order; but, unless a majority of justices concur in adjourning, there can be no adjournment, and in that event it seems that the appeal fails, and the original order can be enforced (see R. v. Belton, (1848) 11 Q.B. 379, 389; Garten v. Southampton JJ., (1893) 9 T.L.R. 430; R. v. M'Mahon, (1875) I.R. 9 C.L. 372; judgment of Gibson, J., in R. (Mulcahy) v. Tipperary JJ., (1903) 2 I.R. 112).

Even division of justices.

Whenever any appeal shall not have been duly prosecuted, the clerk of the peace shall so certify upon the recognizances, and return the same to the justices of the petty sessions from which the same shall have been transmitted within seven days after the termination of the sessions, the certificate to be free of charge (Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 24 (6)). Costs not exceeding 40s. may be awarded to the person receiving any notice of appeal, although the appeal is not proceeded with (27 & 28 Vict. c. 99, s. 51). When the appeal is called on, and there is no appearance for the appellant, the proper course is to order the appeal to be struck out (R. (M'Monagle v. Donegal JJ., (1905) 2 I.R. 644, 5 N.I.J.R. 36). The appeal does not abate by reason of the death of the respondent (R. v. Leicestershire JJ., (1850) 15 Q.B. 88).

Abandonment of appeal.

The appeal operates as a stay of execution, and on a notice being given and recognizance duly entered into, a defendant, if in custody, is entitled to be liberated, or if a distress has been made, to have same returned (Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 23).

Death of respondent

Stay of execution pending appeal.

The justices who took part in the decision appealed from cannot adjudicate upon the appeal (County Officers and Courts Act, 1877, 40 & 41 Vict. c. 56, s. 73). No justice who has taken part in the hearing of a case in which there is an appeal ought, during the appeal, either to go or remain upon the bench, or converse or communicate with any member of the appellate court at all (per Andrews, J., in Ex parte Clarke, (1890) 26 L.R.I. 1, at p. 9). Where one of the justices who had adjudicated in the court below took his seat upon the bench, and remained there until the appeal was decided, and was consulted by the county court judge as to the number of justices who took part in the decision appealed from, and their unanimity, but took no other part in the appeal, it was held that the appeal was thereby invalidated (ib.).

Justices in original hearing cannot adjudicate.

The clerk of the peace shall certify the decision at the foot of the form of appeal (or, in case of no appearance, shall certify that fact on the recognizance), and shall within seven days (reckoned from the date of the order if appellant appeared, and if he did not appear, from the date of the termination of the sessions) return the proceedings to the justices from whom the appeal has been brought (Petty Sessions Act, s. 24 (6)).

Return of proceedings to petty sessions.

the warrant.

The necessary warrants of execution may be signed by the justices who made the original order, or by any other justice of the same petty sessions (s. 24 (7)), or by the court which shall have decided the appeal (40 & 41 Vict. c. 56, s. 72). Where a person has served portion of the sentence, he is to be imprisoned only for the remainder of the period (Petty Sessions Act, s. 24 (7)).

Mandamus to sessions to compel hearing.

Where the justices at quarter sessions, being wrongly of opinion that the conviction appealed from was bad upon its face, refused to go into the case, marking it "reversed on the ground that the order is bad upon its face," a certiorari was issued to quash the order of quarter sessions, and a mandamus was issued directing quarter sessions to rehear the case (R. (McGrath) v. Clare JJ., (1905) 2 I.R. 510; cf. R. v. Middlesex JJ., (1877) 2 Q.B.D. 516).

order.

When the order of sessions has been duly recorded, the King's Bench Division will not entertain the question whether it did or did not represent the opinion of a majority of the justices (R. v. Middlesex JJ., (1877) 2 Q.B.D. 516; see also R. (Quinn) v. Tyrone JJ., (1908) 2 I.R. 124).

Appeals under Fines Act
(14 & 15 Vict.
c. 90).

It would be difficult to conceive a section more obscure than section 9 of the Fines Act (Ireland), 1851, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 90; and neither the right of appeal nor the procedure is very clear.

It shall be lawful for any person against whom any order shall be made for payment of any such penal sum as aforesaid, by any such court or officer as aforesaid, exceeding the sum of forty shillings, and in cases of fines upon jurors, whatever the amount may be, to appeal for the reduction or remission thereof by petition to the court of assizes which shall be held next after such order shall be made, if the same shall be made at assizes, or to one of the superior courts of law in Dublin at the next term, if the same shall be made by a superior court, or to the court of quarter sessions of the county which shall be held next after such order shall be made, if the same shall have been made at quarter sessions, or to the Recorder of Dublin at his next sessions, if the same shall have been made at any of the divisional police offices of Dublin metropolis, or to the next quarter sessions to be held in the same division of the county where the order shall be made by any justice or justices in any petty sessions district, or to the Recorder of any corporate or borough town, where the order shall be made by any justice or justices in such corporate or borough town (unless when any such sessions shall commence within seven days from the date of any such order, in which case it may be made to the next succeeding sessions to be held for such division or town); and such appeal, when made against any order by the said divisional justices, or by any other justice upon summary conviction, shall be subject in all respects to the provisions of the said Petty Sessions Act, but in every other case it shall be made by petition to the court which shall have power to entertain the appeal, and shall be subject to the provisions following:

[Here follow provisions as to procedure, and the section goes on:]

In every case where an appeal shall be so made, the judges of the said superior courts, judge of assize, assistant barrister, or Recorder, as the case may be, shall and are hereby severally authorized to hear the matter of the said petition, and to make such order thereon for confirming the original order, or for reducing or wholly remitting the fine or other penal sum as may seem fit under all the circumstances of the case (s. 9).

The question arises, does the section give the right to the Appeal Court to reverse the justices' order, and pronounce a dismiss? or is their power limited to a reduction or remission of the fine? This is a question which, in Dublin, is of particular importance, for the Petty Sessions Act does not apply to Dublin, and the statutes applicable to Dublin give a very limited right of appeal. It is submitted that, having regard to the words "appeal for the reduction or remission thereof," to the wording of the repealed Fines (Ir.) Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 56), to the fact that no appeal is given in respect of a term of imprisonment, and to the fact that the Petty Sessions Act itself (passed upon the same day as the Fines Act) supplies an appeal where the amount ordered to be paid exceeds twenty shillings, the appeal given by the Fines Act is limited to an appeal for the reduction or remission of the penalty, and that no power is given under it to reverse a conviction.

Appeal under Fines Act.

In cases, therefore, where payment of a penal sum exceeding forty shillings is ordered, an appeal may be taken, whether the case is or is not within the Petty Sessions Act, under the Fines Act; but such appeal is of the limited character described.

As to the procedure under the section, apparently appeals from orders at petty sessions or by divisional justices are governed by the Petty Sessions Act, the procedure by petition being only applicable in case of appeals from penalties ordered by the Superior Courts, quarter sessions, or upon jurors.

The appeal, under the section, is to the Recorder of a city or borough from the divisional or borough justices, elsewhere to quarter sessions.

The adjudication upon appeal at quarter sessions<sup>1</sup> is not within the Cases Stated Act; and therefore a case cannot be stated pursuant to the provisions of that statute. But the opinion of the Superior Courts upon a question of law can be taken by making up a "speaking order," and having same removed into the King's Bench on certiorari (see p. 237).

Case stated
sessions.

The Summary Jurisdiction Act (14 & 15 Vict. c. 92), which applies to the Dublin metropolitan police district, provides, by section 23, that where an order shall be made under the provisions of the Act for the payment of any penal or other sum exceeding twenty shillings, or for any term of imprisonment exceeding one month, or for doing anything at a greater expense than twenty shillings, but in no other case, either party (whether he shall be the complainant or defendant in cases of a civil nature, or the person against whom any such order shall have been made in other cases) shall be entitled to appeal, the procedure to be the same as under the Petty Sessions Act. This statute deals with, amongst others, the following matters:—larceny by juvenile offenders, offering unwholesome food for sale, trespass, injuries to and nuisances upon the public highway, road offences, disputes between master and servant, disputes at markets and fairs, impounding and trespass of animals.<sup>2</sup>

Appeals under Summary
Jurisdiction
Act.

Appeals under the Excise Acts, e.g., in case of an alleged offence against the 6 Geo. 4, c. 84, are regulated by 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, ss. 82–84, 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 51, s. 23, 4 & 5 Vict. c. 20, s. 30, and

Appeals under

Appeal under Excise Acts.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 91, s. 19. In excise prosecutions an appeal may be taken against either a conviction or a dismiss (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, s. 82, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 91, s. 19), including a dismiss without prejudice (Lawless v. M'Aleer, 1897, 2 I.R. 248; R. (M'Aleer) v. Tyrone JJ., (1897) 31 I.L.T.R. 81). The appeal is to the quarter sessions held next after the expiration of twenty days from the date of the judgment appealed against (4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 51, s. 23).

Upon every such appeal the court of appeal may examine witnesses on oath, but may not receive evidence not received, or examine witnesses not heard, at original hearing. The court of appeal may reverse or confirm the whole or part of the judgment appealed against, or make a new or different order, and have the same power of mitigation as the court below (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, s. 84).

Notice in writing must, at and immediately upon the giving of the judgment appealed against, be given to the opposite party and to the justices, and the notice must be lodged with the clerk of the peace (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, s. 83). The words "immediately upon the giving of the judgment" mean while the Court is still sitting, though the notice would probably not be too late if given on the same day as judgment was pronounced, after an adjournment by the Court; but what the statute requires is, that the appeal shall be notified while the justices are sitting (Sumner v. Middleton, (1878) 15 Scot. L.R. 594<sup>1</sup>; see also R. (Hegarty) v. Dublin JJ., (1899) 2 I.R. 310, noted p. 131). But what is a sufficient compliance with the section must depend on the circumstances of each case. In Lawless v. M'Aleer, (1897) 2 I.R. 248, the summons was heard on the 15th May, and the notice was served upon the justices on that day. Owing, however, to the respondent having disappeared, and his house being shut up, the prosecutor was unable to serve him, but posted the notice on his house on the 16th May, and lodged the notice the same day with the clerk of the peace. Held, sufficient service within the section, Andrews, J., remarking (p. 256) that the words ought to be construed as meaning "with all the expedition reasonably practicable" (see also remarks of Cockburn, C.J., in R. v. Berkshire JJ., (1878) 4 Q.B.D., 469, at p. 471). The service may be personal, or by leaving the notice at the place of abode of the person to be served (R. v. North Riding JJ., (1845) 1 N. S. Cas., 574). In R. v. Eaves, (1870) L.R. 5 Ex. 75, it was held that service in court, in the presence of the justices, upon the clerk to the justices was good service upon the justices.

The notice of appeal need not state the grounds of appeal; and, if the appeal is from a dismiss, the appellant need not enter into recognizances or give security, by deposit of money or otherwise (R. v. Finucane, (1875) I.R. 9 C.L. 408). A further notice must be given at least seven clear days before the hearing of the appeal, stating the time and place of hearing of the appeal (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, s. 83; 4 & 5 Vict. c. 20, s. 30); but apparently the notice is good if it merely states "the next quarter sessions," without specifying the date (R. v. Donegal JJ., (1878) Q.B.D. (Ir.), unreported; noted, Highmore's Excise, 2nd ed., p. 67). The proper date to insert in the notice is the day when the sessions commence, and not the day upon which the Crown business is heard (R. (Sides) v. McGarvey, (1891) 25 I.L.T.R. 25).

The notice of appeal may be given by the excise officer who attends and conducts the proceedings, even though he is not the officer named in the information as informing or exhibiting the same (4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 51, s. 23) Appeal under Excise Acts.

When the judgment appealed from is a conviction, the appellant must, within three days from the date of the judgment, lodge in the hands of the commissioners, collector, or supervisor of excise, the amount of the penalty, or the amount to which the penalty has been mitigated, and any goods ordered to be forfeited must be likewise deposited pending the hearing of the appeal (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, s. 83).

The justices at quarter sessions may, on an excise appeal, state the facts of any case on appeal for the opinion and direction of the Superior Courts (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, s. 84).

The justices shall, three days at least before the commencement of the quarter sessions at which the appeal is to be heard, lodge with the clerk of the peace a record of the conviction or acquittal, as the case may be. Every such record shall and lawfully may be in the form in the schedule to the Act, with such variations as may be required by the circumstances of the case (40 Vict. c. 13, s. 10).

An appeal is provided by the Licensing (Ir.) Act, 1855, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 62, in the case of refusal of a publican's licensing certificate.<sup>1</sup> Appeal from refusal to renew publican's licensing certificate. Section 2 of that statute is as follows:—

In case any person shall feel aggrieved by such order of refusal, it shall be lawful for such person to appeal against the same to the quarter sessions of the division within which such person shall reside, or if in the Dublin metropolitan police district, to the Recorder of the city of Dublin, at the next quarter sessions after such order, but in case there shall not be fifteen clear days between the making of the order and such next quarter sessions, then to the quarter sessions next following in such division or city, as the case may be; and in such appeal the party opposing such application shall be respondent, and no other ground for refusing such certificate shall be entered upon, except such as shall be stated in such order of refusal; and such appeal shall be subject to the like incidents, and be heard and dealt with by the court of quarter sessions or Recorder in like manner,<sup>2</sup> as an appeal from an order of the justices at petty sessions under the "Petty Sessions (Ireland) Act, 1851," save that the recognizance to be entered into shall be in the form to this Act annexed: Provided always, that upon such person having lodged such appeal, and entered into the recognizance, as directed by this Act, the licence affected by such order shall remain in full force and effect, unless and until such court of quarter sessions or Recorder shall confirm the said order of refusal; and such appeal shall not be dismissed upon any point of form: Provided that, notwithstanding anything herein contained, any licence may be withdrawn or annulled under the provisions of any Act or Acts now in force, other than the said first-mentioned Act.

The following is the form of recognizance provided by the statute:—

[FORM OF RECOGNIZANCE.]

<sup>1</sup> As to application for such certificate, see p. 120. There is no appeal from a grant of a publican's certificate. But, in the case of a spirit grocer, or a beer dealer, or a beer retailer, an appeal lies from either a grant or refusal of the renewal certificate (see pp. 142, 143, post).

WHEREAS the justices [or, if in the City of Dublin, A.B., divisional justice], on the day of 19 , made an order refusing to grant to the appellant a certificate to entitle him [her] to obtain a renewal of a licence to sell beer, cider, or spirituous liquors (as the case may be), upon the grounds that [state grounds mentioned in the order]. The undersigned principal party to this recognizance hereby binds himself [herself] to perform the following obligation, that is to say, to prosecute his [her] appeal at the quarter sessions to be held at , and to pay such costs as the assistant barrister (chairman, or Recorder) shall order or direct; and the said principal party, together with the undersigned sureties, hereby severally acknowledge themselves bound to forfeit to the Crown the sums following, that is to say, the said principal party five pounds, and the undersigned sureties the sum of fifty shillings each, in case the principal party fails to perform his [her] obligation.

(Signed), Y. Z. (Justices or Divisional Justice).

The Licensing (Ir.) Act, 1860, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 35, s. 1, provides that if justices at petty sessions, or divisional justices, shall not have caused to be entered in the order the grounds of the refusal,<sup>1</sup> or in case the order of refusal shall be in any other respect erroneous or informal, the Court on the appeal shall hear and determine the appeal, notwithstanding such omission, error, or informality. By section 2, if the order of refusal is reversed, the excise officer shall renew the licence.

certificate.

The Beerhouses (Ir.) Act, 1864, 27 & 28 Vict. c. 35, provides an appeal in the case of the grant or refusal of a beer retailer's certificate,<sup>2</sup> and the like appeal is applicable in case of a beer dealer (Licensing (Ir.) Act, 1874, s. 8). Section 13 of the Beerhouses (Ir.) Act, 1864, provides that, after the hearing and determination by any justice or justices of any application for a beer retailer's certificate, either party to the proceedings<sup>3</sup> may, if dissatisfied with the decision, appeal to the justices at quarter sessions<sup>4</sup> for the county, city, town, or place in which such decision shall have been given (or if in the Dublin metropolitan police district, to the Recorder at his next sessions<sup>4</sup>). Such appeal to be subject to the provisions contained in the Licensing (Ir.) Acts, 1855 and 1860 (supra), and the recognizance to be in the form in the schedule to the Licensing (Ir.) Act, 1855, or as near thereto as the circumstances may admit: where the decision granting the certificate is reversed, the order on appeal

<sup>4</sup> The statute says "next" in reference to the Recorder's sessions, and omits it in reference to other quarter sessions. It is, however, submitted that, having regard to the incorporated provisions of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 62, the appeal in all cases must be to the next sessions, unless where less than fifteen days intervene, in which case the appeal will be to the next but one.

shall forthwith annul any licence granted on the faith of such certificate.

Section 82 of the Licensing Act, 1872, provides that applications for spirit grocer's licences shall be subject to the like conditions as to appeals as are prescribed by the Beerhouses (Ir.) Act, 1864. Accordingly an appeal lies from a grant or refusal of a spirit grocer's licensing certificate,<sup>1</sup> and the procedure is the same as an appeal from the grant or refusal of a beer retailer's certificate (supra).

Appeal from grant or refusal of spirit grocer's licensing certificate.

An appeal is provided by the Small Debts Act.<sup>2</sup> Either party may appeal from the order to the chairman at quarter sessions' at the next quarter sessions held in the same division and district of the county held next immediately after the decision of petty sessions, or to the Recorder, as the case may be; but if the next quarter sessions occur within three days from the hearing at petty sessions, then to the next sessions but one, the appellant, if defendant, to lodge with the clerk of petty sessions the amount ordered to be paid, or enter into recognizance as prescribed by the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1851, s. 24, and, if the plaintiff, to deposit the sum of 5s. for the costs of the appeal.

Appeals under the Small Debts Act.

Besides the special provisions as to appeal applicable to excise cases, a number of other statutes—e.g., the Licensing Acts, Public Health Acts, Game Acts, Fisheries Acts, Larceny Acts, Cottier Tenant Act—give special rights of appeal, which will be found noted under the various subjects with which they are concerned.

Special appeals under various statutes.

A writ of certiorari will not be granted to quash a conviction of a petty sessions court pending an appeal to quarter sessions (R. v. Barnes, (1910) 74 J.P. 231).

Certiorari not granted pending appeal.

Search Warrant.

Search warrant.

(1) At common law.

A SEARCH warrant is an order of a justice of the peace authorizing the persons named or described therein to enter a specified building, to search for goods named or described, and to seize them if found. At common law the only right to issue a search warrant was in respect of stolen goods (Entick v. Carrington, (1765) 19 State Trials 1030; 2 Hale, 113, 149, 150; 5 Burns, 30th ed., 1180). Such a warrant is not to be granted without a sworn information (2 Hale, 150, Entick v. Carrington, supra, p. 1067). In Jones v. German, (1896) 2 Q.B. 418, (1897) 1 Q.B. 374, it was held that it is not necessary to allege in such information that a larceny has in fact been committed; that it is enough to allege a suspicion that a larceny has been committed; and that it is not necessary to specify in the information the particular goods for which a search is desired. By section 103 of the Larceny Act, 1861, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, if any credible witness shall prove upon oath before a justice of the peace a reasonable cause to suspect that any person has in his possession or on his premises any property whatsoever, on or with respect to which any offence, punishable either upon indictment or upon summary jurisdiction by virtue of the Act, shall have been committed, the justice may grant a warrant to search for such property as in the case of stolen goods. The warrant is directed to the district inspector or head constable, or to such other person, not being a party interested, as the justice may see fit (Petty Sessions Act, s. 25). The form of warrant given in the Petty Sessions Act authorizes a search in the daytime; but justices are not bound to follow the form rigidly (see s. 36), and they have power to issue a warrant authorizing a search at any time (2 Hale, 150).

(2) Under Larceny Act.

There is, outside Dublin, no general statutory authority for the issue or execution of search warrants on Sunday.<sup>1</sup> At common law, a search warrant could only be granted in respect of stolen goods, and, as no judicial act<sup>1</sup> can be done on Sunday, it appears that there is no power to issue on Sunday a search warrant for stolen goods. But probably such warrant could be executed<sup>2</sup> on Sunday, such execution being a merely ministerial act, though the doing of ministerial acts on Sunday, unless in case of necessity, has always been looked upon as objectionable (see Sheppard's Abridgment, vol. ii., p. 181).

The warrant is a sufficient authority to the police officer to use force if necessary for the purpose of entering (2 Hale, 151), but he should first demand admission (Launock v. Brown, (1819) 2 Barn. and Ald. 592).<sup>3</sup> He may also break open boxes after demanding the keys (2 Hale, 151). There is no power to back this warrant. The form of warrant given in the Petty Sessions Act, 1851 (sch. E. e), authorizes the constable to apprehend the person in whose custody the goods are found; but unless there is some reason to suspect that the party has been guilty of an offence in relation to the goods, this should be omitted. A warrant to search a particular house does not justify a search in another house (2 Hale, 150); and where the warrant mentions specific goods, a trespass will be committed if goods other than those specified are taken (Crozier v. Cundy, (1827) 9 D. and R. 224; Price v. Messenger, (1800) 2 Bos. and P. 158, 3 Esp. 96). When the person in whose possession stolen property is found is brought before the justices, if the facts justify it, an information may be made and the prisoner remanded or sent forward for trial; but if there is no evidence against him, and his explanation as to his possession of the property is satisfactory, he may be discharged.

The following statutes authorize the issue of search warrants by justices:—bread, Bread (Ir.) Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 38, s. 10); child (ill-treatment), Children Act, 1908 (8 Ed. 7, c. 67, s. 24); clubs, Registration of Clubs (Ir.) Act, 1904 (4 Ed. 7, c. 9, s. 6); coining instruments, Coinage Offences Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 27); customs (uncustomed goods), Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 36, s. 205); excise (forfeited goods), Excise Management Act, 1827 (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, s. 34); explosives, Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 55), Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 65), Explosives Act, 1875 (38 Vict. c. 17, s. 73), Explosive Substances Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 3, s. 8); fishing (suspected places), Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 36, s. 205); forgery (bank-notes, forgers' apparatus), Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 46); gaming-houses, Gaming Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 3); illicit stills, Illicit Distillation (Ir.) Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 35, s. 17), Spirits Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 24, s. 140); intoxicating liquors, Licensing (Ir.) Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 69, s. 24); merchandise marks (goods in relation to which offences have been committed), Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28, s. 12); military property (stolen), Army Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 58, s. 136 (1));

Powers under warrant.

Search warrants under other statutes.

<sup>2</sup> See the English Indictable Offences Act, 1848, s. 4, authorizing the issue of a search warrant on Sunday, and thereby implying that there was no necessity to authorize its execution on Sunday. See also CATALOGUE OF SUMMARY OFFENCES, "SUNDAY."

<sup>3</sup> He should also, it is submitted, have the warrant with him. This is necessary in an arrest under warrant for a misdemeanour (Codd v. Cabe, (1876) 1 Ex. D. 352).

Search warrants under other statutes.

obscene books, Obscene Publications Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 83, s. 1); pawnbrokers (illegal pawning), Pawnbrokers (Ir.) Act 1786 (26 Geo. 3, c. 43, s. 13); petroleum, Petroleum Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 105, s. 13); pirated music, Musical Copyright Act, 1906 (6 Ed. 7, c. 36, s. 2); spirits, Spirits (Ir.) Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 89, s. 2); stamps (stolen or forged), Stamp Duties Management Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 38, s. 17(1)); stolen goods, Dublin Police Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 24, s. 54); textile manufactures (unlawful pawning, etc.), Textile Manufactures (Ir.) Acts, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 90, s. 5), 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 68, s. 2), 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 60, s. 1); unsound meat, Public Health (Ir.) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 52, s. 135); women and girls (illegal detention), Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 9, s. 10).

Some of these statutes confer the right to issue a search warrant upon one justice, others upon two justices, and others again upon a court of summary jurisdiction, and although in most cases the warrant can be directed only to the police, yet in several cases it may be directed to other persons. The time during which such warrants may be executed also vary. Reference should be made in each case to the particular statute.

Disposal of property.

Where property has come into the possession of police in connection with any criminal charge, or under the Larceny Act, 1861, s. 103, a court of summary jurisdiction may, on application either by an officer of police or by a claimant of the property, make an order for the delivery of the property to the person appearing to the magistrate or court to be the owner thereof, or, if the owner cannot be ascertained, make such order with respect to the property as to the magistrate or court may seem meet (Police Property Act, 1897, 60 & 61 Vict. c. 30, s. 1(1)). An order under the section shall not affect the right of any person to take within six months from the date of the order legal proceedings against any person in possession of property delivered by virtue of the order for the recovery of the property, but on the expiration of those six months the right shall cease (section 1(2)). Property was seized by virtue of a search warrant, and the parties in whose possession it was found were brought before two justices sitting in a day-room in a police barrack, and were returned for trial. Afterwards, in the absence of the defendants, the justices purported to make an order with regard to the property under the foregoing section. Held, (1) that the justices were not a court of summary jurisdiction within the section, the expression apparently meaning justices when sitting in petty sessions, and (2) that, even if the justices were sitting as a court of summary jurisdiction, there was no jurisdiction to make the order behind the backs of the defendants (Quinn v. Pratt, (1908) 2 I.R. 69). An illegal seizure of property by police subjects them to a civil action (e.g., see Stowe v. Benstead, (1909) 2 K.B. 415).

Arrest without Warrant.

Power of arrest: (1) at common law.

Felony.

Peace officers (a term which includes justices, constables, sheriffs, and coroners) have the following powers of arrest at common law:—

(1) Felony. Power to arrest in the actual commission of a felony, or on the point of committing or attempting to commit a felony (2 Hawk, c. 12, ss. 1, 19, R. v. Hunt, (1825) 1 Mood C. C. 93), or on suspicion of felony, whether a felony has or has not been committed (Hadley v. Perks, (1866) L.R. 1 Q.B. 456). The suspicion must be a reasonable suspicion; knowledge that a warrant has been issued for the arrest is a sufficient ground of reasonable suspicion (Creagh v. Gamble, (1888) 24 L.R.I. 458).<sup>1</sup>

A felonious assault having been committed, a justice, upon suspicion arising in his own mind that a certain person had been concerned in it, gave verbal directions that that person should be taken by a constable to the house of the person assaulted, for the purpose of identification, and if identified be taken to gaol. Held, that the conduct of the justice, although he acted bona fide, was illegal; a justice who arrests upon his own suspicion must be able to show not only that his suspicion was reasonable, but that what he did under the influence of it was no more than was necessary to prevent the escape of the suspected person and render him amenable; and the reasonableness of the suspicion is a question for the jury (Annett v. Osborne, (1840) 2 Jebb & Sym. 376).

(2) Breaches of the peace.

Breach of peace.

Power to arrest when committed in view, or when there is a reasonable ground for apprehending a renewal of the breach (Timothy v. Simpson, (1835) 1 Cr. M. & R. 757; Cooke v. Nethercote, (1835) 6 C. & P. 744; R. v. Light, (1857) 27 L.J.M.C. 1), or when the offender escapes immediately, and is taken in a pursuit which commenced immediately, and is continued without a break (Price v. Seeley, (1843) 10 Cl. & Fin 28).<sup>2</sup> A breach of the peace is committed:—(1) when an assault is committed (Coward v. Baddeley, (1859) 4 H. & N. 478); (2) by disturbing and obstructing a returning officer in the execution of his duty (Spilsbury v. Micklethwaite, (1808) 1 Taunt. 146, 151); (3) by a person who is guilty of abusive language and disorderly conduct on the highway, and causes a crowd to assemble and refuses to desist (Ingle v. Bell, (1836) 1 M. & W. 516). But mere abusive language or insult does not constitute a breach of the peace (Wheeler v. Whiting, (1840) 9 C. & P. 262), nor interruption of a meeting by derisive cries and putting questions (Wooding v. Oxley, (1839) 9 C. & P. 1).

(3) Misdemeanour or offences triable summarily other than breaches or apprehended breaches of the peace. Misdemeanour.

The law seems unsettled, and the following different views are laid down by the text-writers:—(1) No power to arrest unless where offence is of a character publicly scandalous and prejudicial to morals (Nun & Walsh, 2nd ed., p. 109); (2) no power to arrest (Halsbury, vol. ix, p. 299; Colman v. Griffin, (1859) 4 H. & N. 265; Hutton v. Treeby, (1897) 2 Q.B. 452); (3) constable has power of arrest where a misdemeanour is committed in his presence, but not otherwise (Russell, 7th ed., p. 725; Molloy, p. 79 n. (k)).

(4) By statute various powers are given to private persons and peace officers to arrest without warrant. Amongst the statutes giving power of arrest without warrant are:—Any person may arrest and bring before a justice of the peace any person found committing any indictable offence in the night (14 & 15 Vict. c. 19, s. 11, or any

(2) statutory.

<sup>1</sup> A private person has the same rights of arrest, with the exception that he has no right to arrest on suspicion, should it transpire that a felony has not been committed; see Bac. Abr. "Trespass," 7th ed., vol. vii, at p. 663.

person committing any offence punishable, either on indictment or summary conviction, by virtue of the Larceny Act, 1861, except the offence of unlawful angling in the daytime (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 103); or any offence against the Coinage Offences Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 31). Any constable or peace officer may take into custody and bring before a justice any person whom he shall find loitering in any highway, yard, or other place during the night, and whom he shall have good cause to suspect of having committed, or being about to commit, any felony against the Larceny Act, 1861, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 104, or any felony against the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 57); or any felony mentioned in the Offences against the Person Act (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 66); or any holder of a licence (ticket of leave) granted under the Penal Servitude Acts, whom he may reasonably suspect of having committed any offence, or having broken any of the conditions of his licence (27 & 28 Vict. c. 47, s. 6). Any person found committing any offence against the Malicious Damage Act, 1861, whether punishable upon indictment or summary conviction, may be arrested by any peace officer, or the owner of the property injured, or his servant, or any person authorized by him, and taken before a justice of the peace (s. 61). A justice may arrest without warrant persons engaged in illegal drilling (60 Geo. 3 & 1 Geo 4, c. 1, s. 2). A person drunk on the public highway may be arrested by a constable or justice of the peace, and forthwith conveyed before a justice (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 38, s. 12). Every person who in any highway or public place, whether a building or not, is guilty while drunk of riotous or disorderly behaviour, or who is drunk while in charge on any highway or public place of any carriage, horse, cattle, or steam-engine, or who is drunk while in possession of any loaded fire-arms, may be apprehended<sup>1</sup> (Licensing Act, 1872, s. 12). Any person who in any highway or other public place, whether a building or not, is so drunk as to be incapable of taking care of himself, may be detained by any constable until he can with safety to himself be discharged (Licensing (Ir.) Act, 1874, s. 25). Any person found drunk in any place, whether a building or not, to which the public have access, whether on payment or not, or on any licensed premises, while in charge of a child apparently under the age of seven years, may be apprehended<sup>1</sup> (Summary Jurisdiction (Ir.) Act, 1908, s. 9). Any constable may arrest any person found in premises where there is an illicit still working (Illicit Distillation (Ir.) Act, 1831, 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 55, s. 19), or carrying or removing illicit stills or spirits (ib., s. 25), and any person may arrest anyone unlawfully signalling to illicit distillers (ib., s. 30). By the Towns Improvement (Ir.) Act, 1854, any constable may arrest any person who commits any offence within his view mentioned in that section. By the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 36, s. 190), any person may arrest anyone signalling to smuggling vessels. Powers of arrest are given in the case of persons poaching at night or killing game and not producing certificates, in the case of persons not producing gun licences, and in fishery offences. Under the Acts relating to the army, navy, and militia, to railways, tramways, and merchant shipping, to hawkers, pedlars, explosives, indecent advertisements, diseases of animals, the revenue, public stores, cruelty to children, the customs, military lands, offences (other than felony) against women and girls, dangerous performances, powers of arrest without warrant are also given. In most of the above cases reference will be found under the appropriate titles in the CATALOGUE OF SUMMARY OFFENCES, or CATALOGUE OF INDICTABLE OFFENCES, as the case may be. Under ss. 25-29 of the Dublin Police Act, 1842 (5 Vict. c. 24), very extensive powers of arrest without warrant are given to the Dublin metropolitan police (see p. 318).

Power of arrest:
(2) statutory.

Where the statute authorizes the arrest of a person "found committing" the offence, this means in the act of committing it (R. v. Curran, (1828) 3 C. & P. 397; Simmons v. Millengen, (1846) 2 C.B. 532; Roberts v. Orchard, (1863) 2 H. & C. 769); and the lapse of several hours will prevent the arrest being lawfully made (Downing v. Capel, (1867) L.R. 2 C.P. 461; R. v. Walker, (1854) 23 L.J.M.C. 123).

A person arrested without a warrant should be brought before a justice, and formally charged as soon as possible (see Wright v. Court, (1825) 4 B. & C. 596). The constable may bring his prisoner before any justice he thinks fit (1 Hale, 582). The prisoner is in the custody of the constable until the justice discharges, bails, or commits him.<sup>1</sup>

A constable may search a prisoner, if he behaves with such violence of language or conduct that the constable may reasonably think it prudent to search him, in order to ascertain whether he has any weapon, &c., with which he might do mischief<sup>2</sup> (Leigh v. Cole, (1853) 6 Cox, 329, 332). He may take and detain property found in the offender's possession if such property is likely to afford material evidence for the prosecution in respect of the offence charged (Dillon v. O'Brien, (1887) 20 L.R.I. 300; Tyler v. L. & S.W.R. Co., (1894) Cab. & El. 285); but a constable has no right to take property in no way connected with the offence charged (R. v. O'Donnell, (1835) 7 C. & P. 138; R. v. Kinsey, (1836), 7 C. & P. 447; R. v. Bass, (1849) 2 C. & K. 822). As to orders for restoration of property to a prisoner, see p. 20.

Searching prisoner in custody.

A justice has no power to order the medical examination of a prisoner (see p. 20, ante).

Where a felony has been committed, the doors of a house may, without warrant, be broken open to arrest the offender (Smith v. Shirley, (1846) 3 C.B. 142, 4 Bl. Com. 289). A constable may, without warrant, break open a door to arrest a person who has taken part in an affray within his view, and whom he has immediately pursued (R. v. Marsden, (1868) L.R. 1 C.C.R. 131). Doors may be broken to prevent the commission of a murder or manslaughter or other violent felony (Handcock v. Baker, (1800) 2 Bos. & P. 260, 2 Hale, P.C. 95).

Breaking doors without warrant.

Riot and Unlawful Assembly.

A riot is a tumultuous disturbance of the peace, by three persons or more, who assemble together of their own authority, with an intent mutually to assist one another against anyone who shall oppose them in the execution of some enterprise of a private nature,

Riots and unlawful assemblies.

and afterwards actually execute the enterprise in a violent and turbulent manner, to the terror of the people, whether the act intended were of itself lawful or unlawful (Russell, 7th ed., 409). There are five necessary elements of a riot—(1) A number of persons, three at least; (2) common purpose; (3) execution or inception of the common purpose; (4) an intent to help one another by force if necessary against any person who may oppose them in the execution of their common purpose; (5) force or violence “displayed in such a manner as to alarm at least one person of reasonable firmness and courage” (Field v. Receiver of Metropolitan Police, (1907) 2 K.B. 853, 860).

Rout.

A rout is a disturbance of the peace by three or more persons assembling together with an intention to do a thing, which, if executed, will make them rioters, and actually making a motion to execute their purpose (Russell, 7th ed., 422).

Unlawful assembly.

An unlawful assembly is a disturbance of the peace by persons assembled together with an intention to do a thing which, if it were executed, would make them rioters, but neither actually executing it nor making a motion towards its execution. Hawkins, however, thinks this opinion much too narrow, and that any meeting of great numbers of people with such circumstances of terror as cannot but endanger the public peace, and raise fears and jealousies among the King's subjects, seems properly to be called an unlawful assembly (Russell, 7th ed., 422). Any meeting assembled under such circumstances as, according to the opinion of rational firm men, are likely to produce danger to the tranquillity and peace of the neighbourhood is an unlawful assembly (per Baron Alderson, R. v. Vincent, (1839) 9 C. & P. 109; O'Kelly v. Harvey, (1882) 10 L.R.I. 291). An unlawful assembly cannot take place unless three or more persons are assembled together (Stephens' Cr. Law, 6th ed., 55).

Affray.

An affray is the fighting of two or more persons in a public place, to the terror of His Majesty's subjects (Russell, 7th ed., 427).

Powers of justices and peace officers.

Powers are conferred by the 3rd Geo. 3, c. 19 (Ir.), upon justices of the peace, sheriffs, and mayors, within their respective jurisdictions, on knowledge or notice of a riotous assembly, to take necessary assistance, and to command the aid of all persons of sufficient age or ability,<sup>1</sup> and disperse and apprehend the offenders; and indemnity is given in case any of the rioters shall happen to be killed or wounded whilst being dispersed or seized. Justices, sheriffs, mayors, bailiffs, and other peace officers may raise the posse comitatus, and disperse and apprehend all concerned in Whiteboy Offences, and are indemnified for killing or hurting (15 & 16 Geo. 3, c. 21 (Ir.), s. 6; 26 Geo. 3, c. 24, s. 74). By 27 Geo. 3, c. 15 (Ir.), if any persons, to the number of twelve or more, are unlawfully and riotously assembled to the disturbance of the public peace, they may be commanded in the King's name by a justice of the peace, sheriff, or under-sheriff, or mayor, by proclamation<sup>2</sup> in the form thereafter,

<sup>2</sup> The proclamation is to be made by the justice, etc., amongst the said rioters, or as near to them as he can safely come, in a loud voice, in the following words:—Our Sovereign Lord the King charges and commands all persons assembled immediately to disperse themselves, and peaceably to depart to their habitations or lawful business under pains contained in the Act made in the 27th year of King George the Third, to prevent tumultuous risings and assemblies.

to disperse, continue unlawfully and riotously together to the number of twelve or more for one hour thereafter, then such continuing shall be deemed a felony.<sup>1</sup>

Riots and unlawful assemblies.

Apart from the statute, a justice not only has the power to disperse a riot or an unlawful assembly, but is guilty of an indictable misdemeanour, if in case of necessity he fails to do so: and it should be noted that the common law power of justices to disperse rioters or persons unlawfully assembled is not suspended during the hour that the Riot Act allows the rioters or the assembly to disperse. During that time justices have necessarily the same powers and are under the same duty at common law as they are at any other time (see charge of Lord Loughborough to the grand jury in R. v. Gordon, (1781) 21 St. Tr. 485, 493; 5 Burns, 30th ed., 149; R. v. Neale, (1839) 9 C. & P. 431; R. v. Pinney, (1832) 5 C. & P. 254).

Powers of justices and peace officers.

In the case of a riot or rebellious assembly, peace officers and their assistants, endeavouring to disperse the mob, are justified, both at common law and by the Riot Act, in proceeding to the last extremity in case the riot cannot otherwise be suppressed. And it has been said that perhaps the killing of dangerous rioters may be justified by any private persons who cannot otherwise suppress them, or defend themselves from them, inasmuch as every private person seems to be authorized by the law to arm himself for the preservation of the peace (Russell, 7th ed., 814). A justice of the peace is entitled to call in the military, and also any other citizens, to his assistance in quelling a riot (R. v. Pinney, (1832) 5 C. & P. 254, 263).

By the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 68, s. 21, it is provided that it shall be lawful for any one justice acting for any county in which any riot or tumult shall happen, or for any two or more justices of the peace where any riot or tumult is apprehended, to direct that any licensed person shall close his house for such length of time as such justice or justices shall direct; penalty on breach, £2. A similar provision is enacted by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 107, s. 30, in respect of wine retailers.

Closing of licensed premises.

Committal of Dangerous Lunatics.

By the District Lunatic Asylums (Ireland) Act, 1867, 30 & 31 Vict. c. 118, s. 10, if any person shall be brought before any two justices,<sup>2</sup> and it shall be proved to their satisfaction that such person was discovered and apprehended under circumstances denoting a derangement of mind and a purpose of committing some crime for which, if committed, such person would be liable to be indicted, such justices shall call to their assistance the medical officer, or if there be more than one, the nearest available medical officer of the dispensary district in which they shall be at the time, who shall examine such person,<sup>3</sup> and if such medical officer shall certify that such person is a dangerous lunatic or a dangerous idiot, it shall be lawful for the justices by warrant under their hands and seals to direct that such person shall be taken to the lunatic asylum established either wholly or in part for the county, county of a city, or county of a town in which he shall have been apprehended, to be there detained. Provided that nothing in the section shall be construed to restrain or prevent any relation or friend from taking such person under his own care and protection, if he shall enter into sufficient recognizance for his peaceable behaviour or safe custody before two justices of the peace, or chairman of quarter sessions, or a judge of the superior court. Such a person may be discharged from the asylum without any order of the Lord Lieutenant, on a certificate of the resident medical superintendent or visiting physician that he has become of sound mind, or has ceased to be, or is not, a dangerous lunatic or a dangerous idiot (s. 11). A form of warrant is provided for use by justices, and it must be borne in mind that the blanks must be properly filled up, as otherwise the warrant, which must show jurisdiction on its face (R. v. Riall, (1860) 11 I.C.L.R. 279), will be invalid, and the detention of the lunatic will render the justices signing it and the resident medical superintendent liable to an action. Thus, a warrant which does not state upon its face that the justices called in the assistance of the proper medical officer, and that such officer gave the proper medical certificate, is no answer to an action for false imprisonment brought by the person committed against the justice and the medical superintendent of the asylum (Coghlan v. Woods, (1882) 10 L.R.I. 29, 16 I.L.T.R. 105; cf. Hutchinson v. Walsh, (1904) 38 I.L.T.R. 133). A defective warrant or certificate may, with the sanction of one of the inspectors of lunatics be amended within fourteen days from the reception of the lunatic (38 & 39 Vict. c. 67, s. 5). Even though the relatives of the prisoner enter into the recognizance provided by s. 11 of the Act of 1867, they have no right to the custody of the prisoner (In the Matter of James O'Reilly, (1894) 29 I.L.T.R. 33). One of the committing justices shall, within two days after the signing of the warrant, transmit or cause the clerk of petty sessions to transmit, by post, to the registrar in lunacy a copy of the medical officer's certificate (34 & 35 Vict. c. 22, s. 4). A prisoner under remand certified to be insane may, by warrant of the Lord Lieutenant, be removed to a district asylum, and when sane be removed back for further examination before the justices (38 & 39 Vict. c. 67, s. 13). The solemn declaration at the beginning of forms of application for admission into a district lunatic asylum is not within the Stamp Act, 1891, but remains subject to the provisions of the Petty Sessions Clerks (Ir.) Act, 1858, 21 & 22 Vict. c. 100, and is therefore liable to a stamp duty of one shilling (Casey v. Pope, (1905) 40 I.L.T.R. 68).

As to the necessity for, and the grant of, licences to private asylums, see p. 117.

reasonable remuneration for a doctor's loss of time and professional services was held bad, as it awarded compensation for both loss of time and professional services (King v. Guardians of Delvin Union, (1908) 2 I.R. 16). The "other reasonable expenses" are not confined to the expenses of the medical officer, but would include expenses of the police incurred in connection with the conveyance of the lunatic before his committal (ib.). The certificate of such an order is not a certificate of order within schedule C of the Petty Sessions Clerks Act, 1858, and does not require a stamp (ib.), but does require to be sealed (Jennings v. Guardians of Clonakilty Union, (1895) 29 I.L.T. & S.J. 617, County Court).

Power is given by the Coroners (Ireland) Act, 1846, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 37, s. 44, to two justices of the peace to hold an inquest in the absence of the coroner, but the necessity for its exercise will now seldom arise, since the Coroners (Ir.) Act, 1908, 8 Ed. 7, c. 37, extends to Ireland the provisions of the Coroners Act, 1892, 55 & 56 Vict. c. 56, whereby every coroner, whether for a county or borough, is required to appoint a deputy coroner to act for the coroner at any inquest which the coroner is disqualified from holding, or during his illness or his absence from any lawful or reasonable cause. In the case of a borough coroner, the necessity of the deputies so acting is to be certified on each occasion by a justice of the peace (Coroners Act, 1892, s. 3). Duties as to inquests.

Any deputy coroner must have the same qualifications as the coroner, and is liable to be removed from office by the Lord Chancellor in the same way and for the same cause as the coroner (8 Ed. 7, c. 37, s. 1). When an inquest is held before a deputy coroner, the inquisition should be alleged in the caption to be taken before the coroner (see R. v. Perkin, (1845) 7 Q.B. 165), and the deputy should sign in the name of the coroner (ib.).

The appointment of coroner now lies with the county council, who may alter the coroner's districts (Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898, s. 14). The Lord Chancellor may, if he thinks fit, remove any coroner for inability or misbehaviour in the discharge of his duty (ib.). A duly registered surgeon or doctor, a barrister, a solicitor, or a justice of the peace of more than five years' standing, is eligible for the appointment (44 & 45 Vict. c. 35, s. 2).

Where, under the powers given to him by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 37, s. 35, a coroner has imposed a fine on a juror for non-attendance at an inquest to which he was duly summoned, no appeal lies from such fine to quarter sessions (R. (Redmond) v. Armagh JJ., (1895) 30 I.L.T.R. 17).

Visiting Prisons.

Powers of visiting and reporting on prisons are conferred by the Prisons (Ireland) Act, 1877, 40 & 41 Vict. c. 49. Section 24 gives power to the grand jury<sup>1</sup> to appoint a visiting committee of such number of justices as the Lord Lieutenant may determine. Where a prison is used for more counties than one, a joint visiting committee may be appointed, to consist of such members to be appointed by each grand jury as the Lord Lieutenant may prescribe (47 & 48 Vict. c. 36, s. 3). The duties of a visiting committee are laid down in rules made by the Lord Lieutenant from time to time; and, subject thereto, the committee shall from time to time, and at frequent intervals, visit the prison for which they are appointed, and hear any complaints which may be made to them by the prisoners, and if asked shall do so privately. They shall report to the Lord Lieutenant any abuses or urgent want of repairs, and generally perform all such duties in relation to a prison as they may be required by the Lord Lieutenant (40 & 41 Vict. c. 49, s. 25). Visiting prisons.

prisons.

Any justice having jurisdiction in the place in which a prison is situate, or in the place where the offence in respect of which any prisoner may be confined in prison was committed, may, when he thinks fit, enter into and examine the condition of the prison and of the prisoners, and he may enter any observations he may think fit in reference to the condition of the prison or abuses therein in the visitors' book to be kept by the governor, whose duty it shall be to draw the attention of the visiting committee at their next visit to such entry. A justice is not entitled, in pursuance of this section, to visit a prisoner under sentence of death, or to communicate with a prisoner except in reference to his treatment or to any complaint, nor does the section apply to convict prisons (40 & 41 Vict. c. 49, s. 26).

See CATALOGUE OF SUMMARY OFFENCES.

By section 5 of the Manor Courts Abolition (Ir.) Act, 1859, 22 Vict. Small Debts. c. 14,<sup>1</sup> jurisdiction is given to a justice or justices at petty sessions to hear and determine causes for the recovery of debts between party and party, "under the value of £2,"<sup>2</sup> where the right to recover same shall have accrued within twelve months from the date of the process.

The Act is confined to the recovery of debts. A "debt" is a sum payable in respect of a liquidated money demand recoverable by action (Stroud, sub verb.). The debt must be under the value of £2; so that apparently it is not competent for a person to whom a debt of £2 or over is due to bring the case within the jurisdiction by reducing his claim to under £2; but if the debt be under £2, it is

Small Debts. immaterial that it formerly exceeded that amount and was reduced by payment on account.

The justices can order payment of the sum claimed or dismiss the case on the merits or without prejudice (s. 5), and it is submitted they can issue a decree for an amount less than the sum claimed if they find a sum to be due that is less than the amount claimed. Costs not exceeding five shillings may be given to either party (s. 5). A form of process is provided (s. 6) to be served by a duly authorized process-server three clear days before the petty sessions (s. 9). No defendant is liable to be sued or proceeded against otherwise than in the petty sessions district where he resides; the occupation of a counting-house, shop, factory, or office to be deemed a residence (s. 10). When justices have once given a decree, their jurisdiction is spent, and they cannot make a second decree, whether in respect of the original debt or the old decree (Wrench v. O'Rourke, (1902) 37 L.T.R. 15).

The form of the decree, which orders that in default of payment the amount be levied off the goods of the defendant, is given in the schedule to the Act. When this order, which is not addressed to any person, is made and signed by the justices, and handed to the complainant, it is submitted that the court is functus officio, and that it will lie on the complainant himself to make arrangements for its execution. It is submitted that the provisions of s. 25 (2) of the Petty Sessions Act, 1851, as to directing warrants to the district inspector or police, are altogether inapplicable to orders under this statute.

Where a board of guardians recovered a decree at petty sessions for a sum in excess of the limits of jurisdiction under the Act, the order was quashed with costs against the guardians (R. (Ferris) v. Londonderry J.J., (1903) 3 N.I.J.R. 298).

An appeal is provided; for procedure, see p. 143.

Disputes as to wages.
14 & 15 Vict.
c. 92, s. 16.

The Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1851, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 92, s. 16,<sup>1</sup> enables the justices to hear and determine disputes as to wages claimed by any apprentice, artificer, labourer, servant, or other person employed to do any species of work or labour whatsoever, as well as to other matters dealt with at p. 160, provided that the amount of the demand shall not exceed £10. No definition is given of labourer or servant, and it is probable that an employé such as a clerk would not be held to be within the section. For the purpose of the Wages Attachment Abolition Act, 1870, 33 & 34 Vict. c. 30, it has been held that the expression "servant, labourer, or workman" does not include the secretary of a company in receipt of a salary of £50 a quarter, and subject to dismissal at a quarter's notice (Gordon v. Jennings, (1882) 51 L.J.Q.B. 417). The section applies whether the labourer, etc., finds the materials or not, and whether the wages shall be due in respect of any day's work, or of any labour done by task, job, or contract. In certain cases the order may be made against a steward or manager, in the absence of the master. The section enables the justices to award a further sum, not exceeding forty shillings, for loss of time in recovering the wages. An appeal by either party lies where an order is made for the payment of any sum exceeding twenty shillings (s. 23); see APPEALS TO QUARTER SESSIONS, p. 139.

It is submitted that costs, not exceeding twenty shillings, may be awarded to the successful complainant or defendant (see Summary Jurisdiction Act, s. 2, Petty Sessions Act, s. 22 (9)).

Disputes as to wages.

Any order for wages, or further sum of compensation in addition to wages, made in pursuance of section 16 may be enforced in like manner as if it were an order made by a court of summary jurisdiction in pursuance of the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, and not otherwise<sup>1</sup> (Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 86, s. 17).

By the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 90,<sup>2</sup> a court of summary jurisdiction<sup>3</sup> may determine a dispute under the Act (i.e. a dispute between an employer and workman arising out of or incidental to their relation as such (s. 3)), provided that such court shall not exercise jurisdiction when the claim exceeds £10, and shall not make an order for payment exceeding £10, exclusive of costs, and shall not require security to any amount exceeding £10 (s. 4). The expression "workman" does not include a domestic or menial servant, but save as aforesaid, means any person, who being a labourer, servant in husbandry, journeyman, artificer, handicraftsman, miner, or otherwise engaged in manual labour, whether under the age of twenty-one years or above that age, has entered into or works under a contract with an employer, whether the contract be expressed or implied, oral or in writing, and be a contract of service, or a contract personally to execute any work or labour (s. 10). The Act now applies to seamen and apprentices to the sea service (43 & 44 Vict. c. 16, s. 11); and see the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, infra, as to claims for wages by seamen.

Disputes between employer and workman.

Jurisdiction under 38 & 39 Vict. c. 90.

The court of summary jurisdiction may adjust and set off claims, whether such claims are liquidated or unliquidated, for wages, damages, or otherwise; may rescind any contract under this enactment (for the precise terms of which see the statute post),<sup>4</sup> on such terms as it thinks just; may in lieu of damages accept security for the performance of a contract with or without sureties, if the defendant is willing to give security and the plaintiff so consents (Employer and Workmen Act, 1875, ss. 3 & 4). The rules made under the Act will be found at the end of the statute in the APPENDIX OF STATUTES.

The jurisdiction of the justices to hear claims under the Act is ousted where the fact upon which the claim is grounded has been decided by another court (Routledge v. Hislop, (1860) 29 L.J.M.C. 90), where it was held that a judgment for the defendant in a county court action brought by a servant for wrongful dismissal before the end of a quarter for which she had been hired was a bar to proceedings before justices to recover wages for that quarter (see also Millett v. Coleman, (1873) 44 L.J.Q.B. 194). But where a factory-hand was dismissed without notice, or wages in lieu of notice, for negligence in regard to the manufacture of material given to him for manufacture, it was held that his employer could recover damages under s. 4 of the

<sup>4</sup> It has been held in Scotland that justices may adjudicate upon claims which by the terms of a contract of service are to be decided by arbitration (Glasgow Tramways Co. v. Dempsey, (1877) 3 Coup. 440; Wilson v. Glasgow Tramways Co., (1878) 5 R. 981). But in England it has been held that, where such a claim has been decided by the arbitrator, justices have no jurisdiction (London Tramways Co. v. Bailey, (1877) 3 Q.B.D. 217).

Act in the county court for the injury caused by such negligence, although the hand had recovered under s. 3, before justices, the amount of his claim for wages in lieu of notice, and no counter-claim in respect of his negligence had been made before the justices, it being held by the Queen's Bench Division that such negligence might not have been sufficient to justify dismissal, though sufficient to sustain a claim for damages (Hindley v. Haslam, (1878) 3 Q.B.D. 481).

“Dispute.”

The term “dispute” is not limited to strictly legal causes of action (Charles v. Plymouth Waterworks, (1890) 60 L.J.M.C. 20). It includes, for instance, a claim for damages caused by a workman wrongfully absenting himself from work (Clemson v. Hubbard, (1876) 1 Ex. D. 179; Perry v. Bowen, (1904) 38 I.L.T.R. 37); and a claim for damages for breach of contract in the potting trade, where the breach was caused by the refusal to work of the workman's sub-employees, though the defendant himself was ready to do the work (Grainger v. Aynsley, (1880) 6 Q.B.D. 182). On the hearing of a claim by an employer against a workman for damages for breach of contract, the justices can set off such damages against a debt due for wages by the employer to the workman, though no requisition or application for payment thereof has been made by the workman (Kcates v. Lewis Merthyr Consolidated Collieries, (1910) 1 K.B. 386, (1910) 2 K.B. 445).

“Workman.”

The Act has been held not to apply to the conductor of an omnibus (Morgan v. London General Omnibus Co., (1884) 13 Q.B.D. 832), the driver of a horse tramcar (Cook v. North Metropolitan Tramway Co., (1887) 18 Q.B.D. 683), a guard of a goods train (Hunt v. Great North Ry. Co., (1891) 2 Q.B. 189), a grocer's assistant (Bound v. Lawrence, (1892) 1 Q.B. 226; Pearce v. Lansdowne, (1893) 62 L.J.Q.B. 441), or a hairdresser (R. v. Louth JJ., (1900) 2 I.R. 714); but a seamstress and ironer has been held to be within the definition (Maynard v. Robinson, (1903) 89 L.T. 136).

The expression used in the statute is not “manual work,” but “manual labour,” for many occupations involve the former, but not the latter, such as that of telegraph clerks, and all persons employed in writing (Cook v. North Metropolitan Tramway Co., supra, per A. L. Smith, J.). The driver of a motor omnibus who is obliged to do such necessary repairs to it as he is able to do is within the Act (Smith v. Associated Omnibus Co., (1907) 1 K.B. 916).

Apprentices.

The Act applies also to disputes between masters and apprentices to the business of a workman (see definition, ante) upon whose binding either no premium is paid, or the premium (if any) paid does not exceed £25, and apprentices bound under the provisions of the Acts relating to the relief of the poor (ss. 5, 12). In such disputes the court shall have the same powers as if the apprentice were a workman, and the instrument of apprenticeship a contract between an employer and a workman, and may also (1) make an order directing the apprentice to perform his duties under the apprenticeship; (2) if it rescinds the instrument of apprenticeship, it may order the whole or any part of the premium paid to be repaid. When an order is made directing an apprentice to perform his duties under the apprenticeship, the court may, from time to time, if satisfied after the expiration of not less than one month from the date of the order that the apprentice has failed to comply with same, order him to be imprisoned for a period not exceeding fourteen days (s. 6); if there is any person liable, under the instrument of apprenticeship, for the good conduct of the apprentice, that person may, if the court so direct, be summoned, as if he were the defendant, to attend on the hearing, and the court may, in addition to, or in substitution for, any order which the court is authorized to make against the apprentice, order the person so summoned to pay damages for any breach of the contract of apprenticeship to an amount not exceeding the limit, if any, to which he is liable under the instrument of apprenticeship. The court may, if the person so summoned, or any other person, is willing to give security, accept such security instead of punishing the apprentice (s. 7). As to the mode of giving such security, see s. 8.

Disputes between employer and workmen.
(Act of 1875).

The portion of section 15 enacting that the court of summary jurisdiction shall be constituted, in Dublin, of one or more divisional justices, elsewhere of two or more justices of the peace, is repealed (Statute Law Revision (No. 2) Act, 1893). A court of summary jurisdiction, generally speaking, may consist of one justice (see Interpretation Act, 1889, 52 & 53 Vict. c. 63). The repeal of a section by the Statute Law Revision Acts is stated to be literary only (Hardcastle on Statutes, 4th. ed., p. 296; and see observations of Palles, C.B., in R. v. Dillon, (1891) 28 L.R.I., at p. 280), so that, even still, it is safer to act on the old provision, and have the court constituted of two justices (see also Scott v. Crawford, (1910) 44 I.L.T.R. 19; Sayers v. Collyer, (1884) 28 C.D. 107; Winfield v. Boothroyd, (1886) 34 W.R. 501).

justices.

Any dispute or matter in respect of which jurisdiction is given by the Act to a court of summary jurisdiction, shall be deemed to be a matter on which that court has authority by law to make an order on a complaint in pursuance of the Summary Jurisdiction Act,<sup>1</sup> but shall not be deemed a criminal proceeding; a warrant cannot be issued to enforce appearance, except in case of an apprentice; an order for the payment of money shall not be enforced by imprisonment, except in the manner and under the conditions by the Act provided<sup>2</sup> (s. 9).

Enforcement
of order.

No goods or chattels, save those seizable under a county court decree, can be taken; sums may be ordered to be paid by instalments; power is given to the Lord Chancellor to make rules (s. 9).<sup>3</sup>

Any sum ordered to be paid shall be deemed to be a debt due under a judgment within section 6 of the Debtors (Ireland) Act, 1872, 35 & 36 Vict. c. 57, and may be enforced accordingly (ss. 9, 15).<sup>4</sup>

The time limit for the enforcement of the claim is six years (see Charles v. Plymouth Waterworks, (1890) 60 L.J.M.C. 20).

Time limit.

Section 4 of the Act forbids the making of an order for the payment of any sum exceeding £10, "exclusive of the costs incurred in the case," which would seem to imply a power to give costs exceeding the limit of twenty shillings laid down by s. 22 (9) of the Petty Sessions Act. Section 9 of the Act enables rules to be made "with power to provide that the costs shall not exceed the costs

<sup>4</sup> The Debtors (Ir.) Act, 1872, gives power to imprison for six weeks in default of payment of a debt by the instalments directed, where proof is given that the person making default has or had since the date of the order or judgment the means to pay.

which would in a similar case be incurred in a county court." The rules, however, are silent as to the costs, save that the form of judgment prescribed by the rules leaves a blank for costs. It is probable that justices are not confined to the limit laid down by the Petty Sessions Act.

Appeal.

As the Petty Sessions Act is applicable, it follows that an appeal will lie in the cases mentioned in section 24 of that statute, namely, where an order is made for the payment of any sum exceeding twenty shillings, and other cases noted p. 132, ante.

Claims by seamen for wages
c. 60, s. 164).

By the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, a seaman, or apprentice to the sea service, or a person duly authorized on his behalf, may, as soon as any wages due to him, not exceeding £50, become payable, sue for the same before a court of summary jurisdiction in or near the place at which his service has terminated, or at which he has been discharged, or at which any person on whom the claim is made is or resides, and the order made by the court in the matter shall be final (s. 164). The master of a ship is given the same remedies as a seaman (s. 167 (1)). He may also recover disbursements or liabilities properly made by him on account of the ship (s. 167 (2)). Proceedings under the Act are to be brought within six months of the cause of complaint, or, if either party is absent from United Kingdom, within six months of the return of both (s. 683). The Petty Sessions Act applies (s. 681; Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 13).

Disputes as to hire and tuition.
(14 & 15 Vict.
c. 92).

Jurisdiction is given by the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 92, s. 16,<sup>1</sup> to determine demands, not exceeding £10, for the hire of horses or other animals of draught, or carts or vehicles drawn by such animal for the purpose of labouring work (and not being for the carriage of any passenger), for the hire of any boat for labouring work (and not for carriage of passengers), whether such hire is by the day, or by contract, or otherwise; and claims by a schoolmaster or teacher for teaching of a child. The order for payment may include any sum not exceeding forty shillings compensation for loss sustained owing to absence from home occasioned by non-payment. In certain cases the order may be made, in the absence of the master, against his steward or manager, &c. Justices may punish a servant who hires or engages under a false or forged discharge or certificate, by forfeiture of all wages due, and a fine not exceeding £5, and in default imprisonment not exceeding three months. An appeal by either party will lie if an order is made for payment of a sum exceeding twenty shillings (Summary Jurisdiction Act, s. 23: see APPEALS TO QUARTER SESSIONS).

fairs and markets
(14 & 15 Vict.
c. 92, s. 16).

Justices may make awards as to disputes at sales in fairs and markets where the value does not exceed £5, and this jurisdiction may be exercised out of petty sessions (Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1851, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 92, s. 17). The order should show upon its face that the dispute arose in a fair or market (R. v. Campbell, (1853) 3 I.C.L.R. 586). Justices may, it is submitted, award costs not exceeding twenty shillings (Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1851, s. 1; Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 22 (9)).

An appeal by either party<sup>2</sup> will also lie where the amount awarded exceeds twenty shillings (Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1851, s. 23).

By 2 Anne, c. 15 (Ir.), s. 12, no seller of any beasts in a fair or market is obliged to wait for the buyer for more than two hours after earnest given, after which the cattle may be re-sold, and the losses recovered by action from the buyer, whose earnest is forfeited.

Loans by charitable loan societies can be recovered by summary procedure before justices at petty sessions (6 & 7 Vict. c. 91, s. 30<sup>1</sup>); and this is the only procedure available (Moore v. Donagher, (1903), 2 I.R. 290). A society cannot make any loan on personal security to any one individual at any one time exceeding £10 (s. 24), and a mortgage given to secure a loan in excess of that amount is void (Irvine v. Teague, (1898) 32 I.L.T.R. 109); and no second or other loan shall be made to the same individual or to any person on his behalf or for his use till the previous loan shall have been paid (s. 24). Proceedings under the Act must be brought within six months from the time when the cause of the action arose (Petty Sessions (Ireland) Act, 1851, s. 10 (4); R. (O'Reilly) v. Fermanagh JJ., (1904) 2 I.R. 18).

An account setting forth the particulars of the amount sought to be recovered shall, not less than fourteen days before the issue of the summons, be forwarded by registered letter addressed to the borrower at his last known place of residence, showing the allowance made for all sums paid by the borrower in respect of principal, interest, or otherwise (63 & 64 Vict. c. 25, s. 2 (1),<sup>2</sup> as amended by Charitable Loan Societies (Ireland) Act, 1906, 6 Ed. 7, c. 23, s. 4 (2)).<sup>3</sup> The forms in the schedule to the Petty Sessions Act shall be used wherever applicable (63 & 64 Vict. c. 25, s. 3); costs up to the amount of twenty shillings allowed by section 22 of the Petty Sessions Act may be awarded, out of which costs remuneration may be given to any person directed by the Court to take an account (ib).

The order for payment must be for immediate payment, and the justices have no power to make an order for payment at a future time (Parker v. Boughey, (1862) 3 B. and S. 43). The justices, when appointing a bailiff to execute a levy warrant under the Acts, have no power to delegate their powers by referring the making of such appointment to some only of their members (R. (Nugent) v. Tyrone JJ., (1909) 43 I.L.T.R. 261).

Jurisdiction is given to a court of summary jurisdiction<sup>4</sup> to determine disputes as to registered friendly societies in the following cases (Friendly Societies Act, 1896, 59 & 60 Vict. c. 25, s. 68 (7); Friendly Societies Act, 1908, 8 Ed. 7, c. 32, s. 6) :—

- (1) Where the rules of a society or branch direct that disputes shall be referred to justices;<sup>4</sup>
- (2) Where the rules contain no directions as to disputes;
- (3) Where, after application, under the rules, to the society or branch to determine the dispute, no decision is made on the dispute for forty days after the application.<sup>5</sup>

society or branch, and the society or branch or an officer thereof; (b) any person aggrieved who has ceased to be a member, or any person claiming through such person aggrieved, and the society or branch or an officer thereof; (c) between a branch and the society or branch of which it is a branch; (d) between any officer of a branch and the society or branch of which such branch is a branch; (e) any two or more registered branches of any society or branch, or any officers thereof (Friendly Societies Act, 1896, 59 & 60 Vict. c. 25, s. 68; Friendly Societies Act, 1908, 8 Ed. 7, c. 32, s. 6). The dispute must be with the member as a member and not in any other capacity (Mulkern v. Lord, (1879) 4 A. C. 182). The justices have no jurisdiction where the rules of such societies provide a mode for settlement by arbitration (R. (Duane) v. Dublin JJ., (1891) 28 L.R.I. 516). The rules of an industrial and provident society, which substantially followed the terms of section 49 of the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1893, provided for the reference of all disputes between the society and its members to arbitration. A member of the society commenced an action against the committee of management of the society for a declaration that certain resolutions passed by them were ultra vires the society, and for consequential relief. Held, that the plaintiff's claim was a dispute within the arbitration rule and s. 49, and that the proceedings in the action must be stayed: where the rules of a registered society contain a provision for the reference of disputes between a member and the society and its officers to arbitration, it is not an answer to an application for a stay of proceedings that the question at issue is, whether or not the act complained of is ultra vires (Cox v. Hutchinson, (1910) 1 Ch. 513).

Refusal to repay subscriptions claimed to be due to a member is a "dispute" (Huckle v. Wilson, (1877) 2 C.P.D., which was decided upon 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 32, s. 4, and 10 Geo. 4, c. 56 s. 27, now replaced by the Building Societies Act, 1875, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 9; see also Clemson v. Hubbard, (1876) 1 Ex. D. 174, which was decided on the construction of the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, and is noted p. 158). The jurisdiction conferred by the section is exclusive; and, speaking generally, there is no recourse to any court of law outside the section (see Norton v. Counties Conservative Permanent Building Society, (1895) 1 Q.B. 246; Catt v. Wood, (1910) A.C., 404). In the last case, the decision of the society, under the rules as to expulsion, was held conclusive, and not reviewable in a court of law. Where, however, a society, in purporting to settle a dispute, acts with an informality which goes to the root of the jurisdiction, the aggrieved person is entitled to seek a remedy in a court of law (Ex parte Woolridge, (1862) 31 L.J.Q.B. 122; Andrews v. Mitchell, (1905) A.C. 78); but it is otherwise if the irregularity is in a mere matter of form (Andrews v. Mitchell, supra).

Procedure.

All offences and fines under the Acts may be prosecuted and recovered in the manner directed by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts<sup>1</sup> either (a) at the place where the offence was committed; or (b) as respects a prosecution against a registered society or branch, or an officer thereof, at the place where the registered office of the society or branch is situated; or (c) as respects a prosecution against a person other than a registered society or branch, or an officer thereof, at the place where the person is resident at the time of the institution of the prosecution (Act of 1896, s. 92).

(1) The trustees of a registered society or branch, or any other officers authorized by the rules thereof, may bring or defend any legal proceeding in their proper names, without other description than the title of their office. (2) In proceedings brought by a member, &c., a registered society or branch may also be sued in the name, as defendant, of any officer or person who receives contributions or issues policies on behalf of the society or branch within the jurisdiction of the court in which the legal proceeding is brought, with the addition of the words "on behalf of the society or branch" (naming the same). (3) A legal proceeding shall not abate or be discontinued by the death, &c., of any officer, or by any act of any such officer after the commencement of the proceedings. (4) The summons, &c., issued to or against the officer, &c., on behalf of a registered society or branch, shall be sufficiently served by personally serving that officer or other person, or by leaving a true copy thereof at the registered office, or at any place of business of the society or branch within the jurisdiction of the court in which the proceeding is brought, or, if that office or place of business is closed, by posting the copy on the outer door of that office or place of business. (5) In all cases where the service, &c., is not personal or at the registered office, a copy thereof shall be sent in a registered letter addressed to the committee at the registered office and posted at least six days before any further step is taken on the proceeding. (6) Where proceedings are taken against a society or branch for the recovery of any fine under this Act, the summons or other process shall be sufficiently served by leaving a true copy thereof at the registered office of the society or branch, or at any place of business of the society or branch, within the jurisdiction of the court in which the proceeding is brought, or, if that office or place of business is closed, by posting the copy on the outer door of that office or place of business. (7) Where the person against whom the proceedings are to be taken is himself a trustee of a society or branch, the proceedings may be brought by the other trustees or trustee of the society or branch (Act of 1896, s. 94; Act of 1908, s. 11).

Friendly Societies.
Procedure.

Every document bearing the seal or stamp of the central office shall be received in evidence without further proof, and every document purporting to be signed by the chief or any assistant registrar, or any inspector, or public auditor or valuer under this Act, shall, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, be received in evidence without proof of the signature (Act of 1896, s. 100).

Evidence of documents.

Any person may appeal from any order or conviction made by a court of summary jurisdiction (s. 93). Appeal.

Where the rules of a friendly society referred disputes to "one of the divisional magistrates of Dublin" it was held that no appeal lay from the decision of such magistrate (M'Caffrey v. M'Mahon, (1901) 35 I.L.T.R. 97). That case, however, turned upon the wording of the rules. In the case where, the rules being silent as to the tribunal to determine disputes, a court of summary jurisdiction has jurisdiction, there is an appeal to quarter sessions under the Petty Sessions Act, 1851, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 93 (R. (M'Aneney) v. Tyrone JJ., (1910) 44 I.L.T.R. 147).

through a member or person insured, or under the rules, that member or person may, notwithstanding any provisions of the rules of the society or company to the contrary, apply to the county court, or to the court of summary jurisdiction for the place where that member or other person resides, and the court may settle that dispute according to the provisions of the Friendly Societies Act, 1896. (Collecting Societies and Industrial Assurance Companies Act, 59 & 60 Vict. c. 26, s. 7).

Recovery of gas rents, &c.

Power is given by the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1871, 34 & 35 Vict. c. 41,<sup>1</sup> ss. 23 and 40, to justices to determine claims by gas undertakers for amounts due in respect of the supply of gas, gas meters, gas fittings, or of the cutting off of gas. Apparently a single justice may adjudicate in respect of claims for gas supply, under s. 23; but two justices are required in case of claims for gas rents or money due for the hire or fixing of the meter, or any expenses incurred in cutting off the gas (ss. 40, 44). There is no limit as to the amount that may be sued for. Such costs as to the justices shall seem just and reasonable may be awarded (34 & 35 Vict. c. 41, s. 1; 10 & 11 Vict. c. 15, s. 40; 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 142). The distress warrant for any money ordered to be paid shall include the amount awarded for costs (s. 43). The register of the gas meter is to be prima facie evidence of the quantity consumed, and differences between the customer and the undertakers as to the quantity may be settled by two justices whose decision is final, and who may order either party to pay the costs of the proceedings before them (s. 20). Where an automatic slot-meter is used, the customer cannot be compelled to pay over again the amount deposited by him in the meter, which has been stolen through no negligence on his part (Edmundson v. Longton Corporation, (1902) 19 T.L.R. 15).

Every person who shall carelessly or accidentally damage any pipe, pillar, or lamp belonging to the undertakers, or under their control, shall pay to the undertakers such sum by way of satisfaction as any two justices shall think reasonable, with costs in the discretion of the justices (Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, 10 & 11 Vict. c. 15, ss. 20, 40; Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 142). The summary remedy given by section 20 is not an exclusive remedy, and the undertakers can proceed by action if they so choose (Crystal Palace District Gas Co. v. Idris & Co., Ltd., (1900) 16 T.L.R. 180). Where, under sections 6-12, undertakers propose to break up streets, &c., for the purpose of laying or repairing pipes, &c., and any difference arises between the undertakers and the persons or officers having control of such street, &c., as to the plan to be adopted for the prevention of interference with drainage, &c., then such plan shall be determined, and orders given for its adoption by the undertakers, by any two justices (s. 9), whose power as to costs is the same as that noted under s. 20.

By section 16 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1871, where any owner or occupier is required by the special Act to give security to the undertakers, the amount of such security, in default of agreement, may be determined, on the application of either party, by two justices, who may order by whom the costs of the proceedings shall be borne. Recovery of gas rents, &c. Section 49 of the Alliance & Dublin Gas Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. cccv), empowers the Alliance & Dublin Gas Co., to require security from any person, not being the Dublin Corporation, or any local authority.

It is probable that the six months' limitation imposed by the Petty Sessions Act, s. 10 (4) applies to summary proceedings with regard to gas see East London Waterworks Co. v. Charles, (1894) 2 Q.B. 730; Elliott v. Russell, (1902) 2 K.B. 748, both noted, p. 166, infra.

As to offences relating to "Gas," see under that title in CATALOGUE OF SUMMARY OFFENCES, and under LARCENY in CATALOGUE OF INDICTABLE OFFENCES.

The Electric Lighting Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 56), s. 12, Electricity. incorporates sections 38-42 inclusive. and sections 45 and 46 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1871, and the provisions of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, "with respect to breaking up streets for the purpose of laying pipes" . . . and "with respect to injury to the pipes and other works," and provides that "electricity" and "electric line" are, for the purpose of such incorporation, to be substituted in those sections for "gas" and "pipe." Consequently (under section 40 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1871, noted supra) two justices can determine claims by electric undertakers for amounts due in respect of the supply of electricity, electric meters, electric fittings, or the cutting off of electricity: there is no limit to the amount that may be sued for; and the justice may award such costs as he pleases. Differences between undertakers and consumers as to the accuracy of meters are to be settled, not by justices, but by a Board of Trade Inspector (Electric Lighting Clauses Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 19), s. 57). "Subject as aforesaid, the register of the meter shall be conclusive evidence, in the absence of fraud, of the value of the supply" (ib.), but where a meter was conclusively shown to have registered a supply three times more than actually passed through it, Judge Rentoul, K.C., in the City of London Court, held on the facts that the meter was not conclusive evidence (City of London E. L. Co. v. Oakley, "Times" newspaper, 12 Nov., 1902).<sup>1</sup> The incorporation already mentioned of part of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, gives the justices precisely the same power to award compensation and costs for careless or accidental damage to any electric line, pillar, or lamp as they have in the case of such damage to gas-pipes, pillars, or lamps, and to determine, in case of dispute, just as already mentioned, as they may do with regard to the laying of gas-pipes, the plan on which streets are to be broken up so as not to interfere with drainage.

It would appear that the six months' limitation imposed by the Petty Sessions Act, s. 10 (4), applies to proceedings with regard to electricity also.

As to offences relating to "Electricity," see under that head in CATALOGUE OF SUMMARY OFFENCES, and under LARCENY, in CATALOGUE OF INDICTABLE OFFENCES.

Water rates and water rents may be recovered in a summary manner (Public Health (Ireland) Act, 1878, 41 & 42 Vict. c. 52, s. 66), and sections 68 to 74 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17, with respect to the payment and recovery of water rates, are made applicable (s. 67). The water rates shall be paid Recovery of water rent and water rates.

by the person using the water, and shall be payable according to the annual value of the tenement supplied with water.<sup>1</sup> The owner, and not the occupier, of a house not exceeding £10 in value is liable (s. 72). If the rates are not paid, the water may be cut off, and the rate, if not exceeding £20, with the expenses of cutting off the water and costs, may be recovered in the same manner as damages for the recovery of which no special provision is made are recoverable (s. 74), that is, the amount in case of dispute is to be determined by two justices, who may in their discretion award costs to either party, and, if not paid within seven days after demand, is recoverable by distress under the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, ss. 140, 142, and Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17, s. 85. The rate can be sued for, even though the water has not been cut off (R. v. Hutton, (1907) 2 K.B. 578). The six months' limit in the Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 10 (4), probably applies (see East London Waterworks Co. v. Charles, (1894) 2 Q.B. 730, decided on the construction of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43) the date running from the date of demand (Elliott v. Russell, (1902) 2 K.B. 748). An alternative remedy, by action in any court of competent jurisdiction, is given by the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 93, s. 21).

The statute requires the undertakers to supply water for domestic use of the inhabitants (Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, s. 35), without extra charge for domestic purposes beyond the payment of the water rate (s. 53). It therefore frequently becomes material to consider what are domestic purposes within the Act. The Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863, s. 12, enacts: "that domestic purposes shall not include a supply of water for cattle, or for horses, or washing carriages, where such horses or carriages are kept for sale or hire, or by a common carrier, or a supply for any trade, manufacture, or business, or for watering gardens, or for fountains, or for any ornamental purpose." "The words 'domestic purposes' include user, not merely for washing, drinking, flushing closets, and the like, but extend to user for what in Bristol W.W. Co. v. Uren, 15 Q.B.D. 637, were called 'the amenities of the house,' but the limits of such amenities must be ascertained with due regard to what is reasonable, and what is the ordinary user in our day" (per Buckley, J., in S. W. Suburban Water Co. v. St. Marylebone Gdns., (1904) 2 K.B. 184). The following have been held to be domestic purposes:—watering private horses, or washing private carriages (Bushy v. Chesterfield W.W. Co., (1858) 27 L.J.M.C. 174), including the supply for washing a motor car used by a medical man in the practice of his profession (Harrogate Corporation v. Mackay, (1907) 2 K.B. 611); water for (1) the supply of cisterns for flushing closets, (2) for a constantly running supply for urinals in a large building, (3) to supply fire hydrants used chiefly for washing the yards of such building, (4) to supply boilers for warming the building with hot water, and for heating water for ordinary laundry purposes (S. W. Suburban Water Co. v. St. Marylebone Gdns., supra); water for domestic use of inhabitants of a workhouse (Liskeard Union v. Liskeard W.W. Co., (1881) 7 Q.B.D. 505), or of a boarding-house (Pidgeon v. Gt. Yarmouth Water Co., (1902) 1 K.B. 310), or boarding-school (Frederick v. Bognor Water Co., (1909)

1 Ch. 149), or for the resident employes of a gas company (S. Suburban Gas Co. v. Met. Water Board, (1910) 26 T.L.R. 12). The important point is not the character of the house in which, but the character of the purpose for which, the water is used (ib.). The following are not domestic purposes:—the use of water for electric, steam, or other power, or for a swimming-bath in a school used for the purpose of making the teaching more effective (per Romer, L.J., in Barnard Castle v. Wilson, (1902) 2 Ch 756; per Buckley, J., in S.W. Suburban Co. v. St. Marylebone Gdns., supra), or water used for sanitary conveniences at a railway station Met. Water Board v. L. B. & S. C. Ry. Co., (1910) 1 K.B. 804; affirmed on appeal, 26 T.L.R. 676).

Recovery of water rents and water rates.

The Public Health (Ir.) Act, 1878, also (s. 67) incorporates ss. 28–67 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, and the whole of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863. By virtue of this incorporation two justices may, as in the case of the laying down of gas-pipes and electric lines, give directions as to the prevention of interference with drainage by the laying down of water-pipes, &c., in streets where a dispute about such a matter is referred to them (Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, ss. 31, 52), and they may at their discretion award costs to either party (s. 85; 8 & 9 Vict. ss. 140, 142); they have power to determine, and like power to award costs in, certain disputes between undertakers and consumers as to the pipes connecting the premises of consumers with the pipes of undertakers (Act of 1847, ss. 48, 49, 85; 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, ss. 140, 142). Where undertakers repair waterfittings that are causing waste on the premises of a consumer they may recover the cost of so doing as damages with costs before two justices (Act of 1847, s. 56; 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, ss. 140, 142); and the undertakers may recover in the same way that water rates (see supra) are recovered, the rents due for water meters supplied to consumers in cases where, the supply of water by measure being authorized by statute, they have hired such meters (Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863, s. 14).

For obtaining payment of an instalment due by any person for a supply of seed potatoes, or seed oats, or both, the county council, or urban district council, as the case may be, shall levy the amount, where the person is rated to the poor rate, by a special rate to be added to the poor rate assessed on the premises occupied by him, and to be collected therewith; where such person is not rated to the poor rate, the council shall make a special rate, recoverable in the same manner, and with the same remedies, by the collectors of the poor rate as if it were poor rate (Seed Potatoes & Seed Oats Supply (Ir.) Act (1908), 8 Ed. 7, c. 19, s. 2). As to summary proceedings for recovery of poor rate, see p. 203.

seed rate.

The Dogs Act, 1906, 6 Ed. 7, c. 32, s. 1, enacts as follows:—

(1) The owner of a dog shall be liable in damages for injury done to any cattle<sup>1</sup> by that dog; and it shall not be necessary for the person seeking such damages to show a previous mischievous propensity in the dog, or the owner's knowledge of

Damage to
dogs.

<sup>1</sup> "Cattle" includes horses, mules, asses, sheep, goats, and swine (s. 7). Knowledge of a dog's mischievous habits is still necessary to support an action for personal injuries from a dog bite; and it is necessary to show that the dog had, to the defendant's knowledge, bitten or attempted to bite some person before it attempted to bite the plaintiff; it is not sufficient to show that the defendant knew it had attacked and bitten another animal (Osborne v. Chocquet, (1896) 2 Q.B. 109; Barnes v. Lucille, (1907) 96 L.T. 680). As to evidence of scienter, see Applebee v. Percy, (1874) L.R. 9 C.P. 647; Parsons v. King, (1891) 8 T.L.R. 114.

such previous propensity, or to show that the injury was attributable to neglect on the part of the owner; (2) where any such injury has been done by a dog, the occupier of any house or premises where the dog was kept or permitted to live or remain at the time of the injury shall be presumed to be the owner of the dog, and shall be liable for the injury unless he proves that he was not the owner of the dog at that time: provided that where there are more occupiers than one in any house or premises let in separate apartments, or lodgings, or otherwise, the occupier of that particular part of the house or premises in which the dog has been kept or permitted to live or remain at the time of the injury shall be presumed to be the owner of the dog; (3) if the damages claimed under this section do not exceed five pounds they may be recovered under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts<sup>1</sup> as a civil debt; (4) where a dog is proved to have injured cattle or chased sheep, it may be dealt with under section 2 of the Dogs Act, 1871, as a dangerous dog.

If a horse is frightened by a dog, and injures itself in consequence, this will apparently be an "injury" within the section (see Elliott v. Longden, (1901) 17 T.L.R. 648). The fact that the cattle are trespassing on defendant's land at the time of the injury makes no difference (see Grange v. Silcock, (1897) 18 Cox, 644).

Having regard to the application of the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, it is submitted that costs, not exceeding twenty shillings, may be awarded to a successful complainant or defendant under s. 22 (9) of the Petty Sessions Act.

As to destruction of dangerous dogs, see CATALOGUE OF SUMMARY OFFENCES, DOGS.

Entry on lands to survey new line of road.

It shall be lawful for any person or persons to survey and measure any line intended for a new road for the making of which an application is to be made, and for that purpose to enter in and upon any lands or premises through which such intended line may pass, provided that such person or persons shall be thereunto authorized by a certificate in writing under the hand of the county surveyor, stating that such survey and entry to make same, is proper, and that such certificate shall be allowed by two justices of the peace for the county wherein the lands or premises may be situate, such allowance being signified under their hands by endorsement upon such certificate (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 116, s. 58; and for County Dublin, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 106, s. 59, both adapted by the Adaptation of Irish Enactments Order, 30th January, 1899).

Jurisdiction.

The Grand Jury Act, 1836, 6 & 7 William 4, c. 116. s. 162, as applied by the Adaptation of Irish Enactments Order of 30th January, 1899, provides as follows:—

Every county surveyor, and every contractor for any work to be executed in pursuance of a resolution of a county council, shall have power and authority to dig for, raise, and carry away in or out of any lands, not being a deer park, bleach green, orchard, walled garden, haggard or yard, or planted walk, lawn, or avenue to a mansion house, any gravel, stones, sand or other materials, whether the same be found in the same or any adjoining county, which may be wanted for the building, rebuilding, enlarging, or repairing any bridge, arch, gullet, pipe or wall, or for the making, repairing, or preserving of any road or footpath, and such surveyor or contractor is hereby further empowered to make drains in order to carry off water which might injure any bridge, gullet, arch, pipe, wall, or road in or through any lands not being a deer park, bleach green, orchard, walled garden, haggard or yard, or planted walk, lawn, or avenue to a mansion house, and shall make such satisfaction for the damage done thereby, or by taking any such materials as aforesaid, as shall be assessed by three substantial householders, which householders shall view the ground immediately previous to and immediately after such damages shall be committed, one of such householders to be named by the owner or occupier of the land, and another by the surveyor or contractor, and the third by any neighbouring justice of the peace, and in case any surveyor or contractor shall refuse, or after four days' notice in writing from such landowner, neglect to name a householder on his part, then one shall be named for him by such justice. and such three householders shall be sworn by such justice of the peace (previous to the damage being committed) to be appraisers of such damages as may occur, and to make a true estimate thereof, in which estimate the value of any stones, gravel, or other material shall not be included, but only the waste committed by breaking the surface and making a passage through the land, unless where such stones, gravel, or materials shall be taken from any quarries and gravel-pits, bona fide demised with liberty to work the same,<sup>1</sup> provided nevertheless that it shall not be lawful for any such contractor or surveyor to enter any land for any such purpose against the will of the occupiers thereof, without the previous order of a justice of the peace, which order any such justice is hereby authorized and required to grant, on its being proved, to his satisfaction, that the gravel, stones, or other materials sought cannot be conveniently procured elsewhere, nor such drain otherwise sufficiently made or cleansed.

materials.

This section is extended to authorize the digging for, raising, and carrying away of gravel, stone, sand, or other materials, out of any river or brook at a distance of at least one hundred and fifty feet above or below any bridge, dam, or weir, where the same can be taken away without diverting or interrupting the course of the river or brook, or prejudicing or damaging any building, highway, ford, or spawning bed (Local Government (Ir.) Act, 1898, s. 12).

The county of Dublin is governed by the County Dublin Grand Jury Act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 106, s. 136, which is verbatim the same as section 162, with these differences: that the word "appraisers" is used instead of "householders," and that the order must be made by two justices sitting in petty sessions. The provisions of section 12 of the Local Government (Ir.) Act, 1898, supra, are not applicable.

An order under section 162, though not necessarily made at petty sessions (see R. (De Vesçi) v. Queen's Co. JJ., (1908) 2 I.R. 285, at p. 302), cannot be made until notice has been given to the occupier of the lands (Clarke v. Clarke, (1895) 2 I.R. 451; 29 I.L.T.R. 70). The owner need not be served, and he has no locus standi to object (R. (De Vesçi) v. Queen's Co. JJ., supra, at p. 302). Where the application is made to the justices at petty sessions, the order under the section is not the entry in the petty sessions book, but the document which is issued to the contractor as his authority to enter<sup>2</sup> (R. (Murphy) v. Wexford JJ., (1894) 2 I.R. 81, 28 I.L.T.R. 17). A contractor has no right to enter without an order for the purpose of taking materials against the will of the occupier, even though the landlord assents (Sullivan v. Collins, (1869) 3 I.L.T. and S.J. 638). Though one justice has power to make the order, yet the decision at petty sessions of an application under the section is the decision of the entire then assembled court, and not of one magistrate, and the order should be signed by all the justices who concur in making it (see remarks of Gibson, J., in R. (De Vesçi) v. Queen's County JJ., supra, at p. 306). The presence of one biased justice on the bench vitiates the order (ib.). When the contractor has obtained the order he is not bound to serve a copy of same on the occupier of the lands, though he ought to allow the occupier to inspect same if required (Steward v. Anderson, (1901) 35 I.L.T.R. 234). If a contractor enters in pursuance of an order which is defective, he will be liable in damages as a trespasser (Fitzpatrick v. Pine, (1861) 13 I.C.L.R. 32). A case cannot be stated by justices from an order under the section (R. (Hale) v. Down JJ., unreported, noted Brett's Grand Jury Laws, p. 43; Collen v. Lord Howth, (1903) 3 N.I.J.R. 350), nor is there any appeal; but certiorari lies to quash an order ex facie bad, or if the justices have wrongfully assumed jurisdiction to make an order in respect of lands of the classes exempted by the section (R. (De Vescei) v. Queen's Co. JJ., supra). A justice who, as a member of a county council, takes an active part in promoting and carrying a resolution of the council that the county surveyor shall apply at petty sessions for a certain order under the section, is disqualified by bias from afterwards adjudicating upon the hearing of the application (ib.). A grazing tenant is an occupier for the purpose of the section (R. (Guinness) v. Louth JJ., (1898) 2 I.R. 248, 33 I.L.T.R. 9).

<sup>1</sup> In Murphy v. Macrory, (1909) 43 I.L.T.R. 243, it was held by Andrews, J., on case stated by county court judge of Wicklow, that an owner in fee simple is entitled to recover by action the value of the road material taken. This decision follows that of Lawson, J., in Smith v. M'Ilwainey, (1886) 20 I.L.T.R. 12, and conflicts with that of Murphy, J., in La Touche v. Condy, (1900) 35 I.L.T.R. 44.

Procedure.

The justices should not give a contractor a greater right of entry than he asks for in his summons, so that, where the summons merely asked for an order to take away gravel, the order was held bad because it purported to authorize the contractor to take gravel, stones, sand, and other materials (R. (Booth) v. Meath JJ., (1898) 4 I.W.L.R. 233).

The order must contain all the necessary elements to show jurisdiction, and must negative the statutory exemptions. The following cases show the necessity for care in drawing up an order under the section.

Essentials of
order.

The order must show that the contractor was a contractor for the repair of the road in pursuance of a resolution of the county council (R. (May) v. Mayo JJ., (1884) 16 L.R.I. 11); the personal representative of the original contractor would probably be deemed to be a contractor within the meaning of the section (per Palles, C.B., in Tracy v. McCabe, (1893) 32 L.R.I. 21, at p. 29); and that the justice making it is himself satisfied that the materials cannot be conveniently procured elsewhere (Fitzpatrick v. Pine, (1861) 13 I.C.L.R. 32). It is not sufficient that the order should state that the justice is satisfied that the lands are the most convenient place for procuring the materials (Butler v. Leahy, (1867) 1 I.L.T. and S.J. 477). The right of entry must be limited to a definite time (R. (Bentham) v. Dublin JJ., (1884) 14 L.R.I. 443; R. (Fitzgerald) v. Limerick JJ., (1892) 27 I.L.T.R. 35; R. (Murphy) v. Wexford JJ., (1894) 2 I.R. 81, 28 I.L.T.R. 17). In the last-mentioned case it was held that the time is sufficiently limited by the order, where the order recites that the contract is to continue for a specified time from a given date, and authorizes entry during the period of such contract.<sup>1</sup> But where the order recites the contract, but does not specify the period of time in the contract, this is not sufficient, for the limit of time must appear on the face of the order itself, and not merely by reference to the contract, which the occupier of the lands is not bound to investigate at his own expense (R. (Guinness) v. Louth JJ., (1898) 2 I.R. 248, 33 I.L.T.R. 9). An order under the section can apparently be made for the entire period of the continuance of the contract, and need not be limited to the immediate necessity of the contractor (R. (Coyle) v. Monaghan JJ., (1908) 2 I.R. 1). The order must show that the lands are not lands coming within the exceptions mentioned in the section

The order should limit the right of entry to a specified place from which the materials are to be taken, so that there be no doubt where the contractor is to operate (R. (Dove) v. Westmeath JJ., (1904) 4 N.I. J.R. 73; R. (O'Farrell) v. Meath JJ., (1910) 44 I.L.T.R. 267), but the order is bad if it prescribes a particular road by which the contractor must enter (R. (Coyle) v. Monaghan JJ., (1908) 2 I.R. 1). The order must authorize the contractor or the surveyor, and an order which empowers a county council through its surveyor is bad (R. (Maher) v. Kilkenny JJ., (1905) 5 N.I.J.R. 113).

The following is the form of order in use :—

Specimen order.

A.B.	Complainant ;	} County of
C.D.
	Defendant.	Petty Sessions District of

Whereas at the quarterly meeting of the county council of held in and for the county of a presentment to keep in repair perches of a public road from to between and for the period of years, viz., from to , was made by the county council of the said county under the authority of the Act 6 & 7 William IV, chapter 116 (61 & 62 Vict., chapter 37).<sup>1</sup>

And whereas of is the county' council contractor for the execution of such work in the said presentment mentioned.

And whereas it has been proved to the satisfaction of me, the undersigned justice of the peace,<sup>2</sup> that gravel, stones, sand, or other materials wanted for the repair of the said road during the said period cannot be conveniently procured elsewhere than in a certain part of the lands of now in occupation of in the said county, and which said land is not a deerpark, bleachgreen, orchard, walled garden, haggard or yard, or planted walk, lawn, or avenue to a mansion house.

Now I, the undersigned justice of the peace, in pursuance and exercise of the power and authority in that behalf, given to me by the 162nd section of the said Act 6 & 7 William IV, chapter 116, and 61 and 62 Vict., chapter 37,<sup>3</sup> section 12, sub-section 2, do hereby authorize the said during the said period specified in the said presentment, should he so long continue county council contractor as aforesaid, or for such portion of said period as he shall so continue, to enter as such contractor, with his assistants, into the said part of the lands of now in the occupation of hereinbefore mentioned, for the purpose of digging for, raising, and carrying away in and out of the same any gravel, stones, sand, or other materials wanted for the repair of the said road during said period so as aforesaid specified, or for such portion thereof as he may continue to be county council contractor as aforesaid under the said presentment.

Given under my hand at this day of 19 .

Signed, One of His Majesty's justices of the peace for said county.

To of County council contractor for said work.

Entry on land for road materials.      The said county of      of occupier of the said land, nominates in said of acting under the authority of this order, given to him pursuant to the aforesaid recited Acts;<sup>1</sup> and the applicant for this order, in the said of road contractor, nominates on his part one of ; and I, as a neighbouring justice of the peace, herein name on my part of in the said county of the three parties so named being substantial householders,<sup>2</sup> who shall, previous to the damage being committed, have been sworn by me to appraise and make a true estimate of such damage as may be occasioned the occupier of the said lands, in and according to the manner prescribed by the 162nd section of 6 & 7 William IV, chapter 116,<sup>3</sup> and who shall view the ground immediately previous to, and immediately after, such damages shall be committed, as by the said statute is required and ordered to be done.

Signed,

Justice of the peace for the said county.

Costs.

As mentioned above, this order, save in the county Dublin, may be made out of sessions (see R. (De Vesci) v. Queen's Co. JJ., (1908) 2 I.R. 285, at p. 302). It is submitted that costs cannot be given, at all events elsewhere than in county Dublin, and possibly not even there.

Enforcing road contract.

The Grand Jury (Ireland) Act, 1856, 19 & 20 Vict. c. 63, s. 17. as adapted by the Adaptation of Irish Enactments Order of 30th January, 1899, provides as follows:—

If in the opinion of the county council on the report of the county surveyor, the contractor for the repair of any road shall be guilty of neglect or inattention in the performance of his contract, it shall be lawful for such council to summon the said contractor and his sureties before the justices at petty sessions of the district in which such work may be situate; and if such charge of neglect or inattention be established before such justices, it shall be lawful for them to make an order<sup>4</sup> directing the said contractor and his sureties to execute his contract within a period to be stated in such order; and if at the expiration of such order the county council shall still see reason for being dissatisfied with the manner in which such work has been executed, it shall be lawful for them again to summon the contractor and his sureties before the justices at petty sessions, and the justices thereupon shall proceed to enquire into and finally adjudicate upon the complaint; and if it shall appear that such work has been insufficiently executed or contrary to the terms of the contract, it shall be lawful for such justices, having ascertained the amount which it may require for the completion of such work according to the contract, to authorize such council to complete the same, and to levy such amount by warrant of distress upon the goods of such contractor or his sureties, not exceeding the amount of the recognizance or bond of such sureties.<sup>5</sup>

The remedy provided by the above section applies to all contracts for the repair of roads, including maintenance contracts (R. v. Kerry JJ., (1875) I.R. 9 C.L. 471; Stokes v. Buckley, (1876) I.R. 10 C.L. 158).

Order to cut hedges, &c. Jurisdiction.

The scheme of the section seems (see (R. (Winder) v. Kildare JJ., (1909) 2 I.R. 686), to be as follows:—(1) the county surveyor or contractor shall, by notice in writing, require the person guilty of the neglect or offence, or the owner of the land on which such hedges or trees are growing, to remedy the matter;<sup>1</sup> (2) on default, after ten days from the service of the notice, the contractor may summon such person to appear before the justices at petty sessions to show cause why he has not complied with such request; (3) at the hearing of such summons, the justices, if they shall think fit,<sup>2</sup> may order that such person or owner shall act as required by the notice; (4) if this order be not obeyed within ten days, the justices may make a second order<sup>3</sup> directing the contractor or county surveyor to do the work himself; (5) the county surveyor or contractor, upon complaint to the justices, and proof of the expenses, may obtain a warrant for the levy of the expenses. This warrant, of course, should only be granted after service of a summons or complaint upon the party to be affected thereby, so that then there will be three hearings in a case where the person or owner refuses to do the necessary work himself. The owner of the lands cannot be compelled, nor can any county surveyor or contractor be permitted, to cut or prune any hedge at any other time than between 30th September and 31st March.

The second order, above referred to, may be less extensive than the first, but it cannot be more extensive, so that, where the first order merely directed hedges to be cut, a second order, directing hedges to be cut and trees to be lopped, was held bad (R. (Winder) v. Kildare JJ., (1909) 2 I.R. 686). Seem, the first order should not contain a provision that the work be completed “to the satisfaction of the county surveyor” (ib). The order should negative the statutory exemptions, that is, it should show that it does not apply to hedges or trees planted for ornament or shelter of any dwellinghouse, courtyard, or garden (R. (Kennedy) v. Dublin JJ., (1909) 43 I.L.T.R. 271). The order should be drawn with great care. Gibson, J., in the last case, said the expression “cut down” had a different meaning from cut. “Lopping” a tree means cutting off the branches laterally, and does not include “topping,” and the section therefore gives no power to a county surveyor or contractor, or to justices, to order the cutting off the tops of any trees (Unwin v. Hanson, (1891) 2 Q.B. 115).

It is submitted that the duties of the county surveyor are unaffected

<sup>1</sup> This, of course, is merely a paraphrase: the notice should follow the words of the section that are applicable to the particular case

by section 72 of the Local Government (Ir.) Act, 1898, and still remain vested in him.

Under the Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 12, the entry of the order in the order-book, according to the form in use, is the order; but if a formal order is required, the following are suggested forms, and they at any rate will form a foundation for summonses under the section:—

ORDER No. 1.

County of .

Petty Sessions District of .

Between A.B., Complainant; C.D., Defendant.

Whereas it has been proved to the satisfaction of us, justices assembled at petty sessions for the above county and district, that the complainant, who is the county surveyor of the said county of (or the contractor for the repairing of the public road at in the above county and district), is of opinion that the public road at in the above county and district is prejudiced by the shade of hedges and trees, and it has also been proved to our satisfaction that said public road is prejudiced by the shade of such hedges and trees, and that the complainant has by notice in writing dated the day of , 19 , and served on the defendant on the day of , 19 , required the defendant, who is the owner of the land on which such hedges and trees are growing, to cut or plash such hedges, and to prune or lop such trees so as that such road may not be prejudiced by the same, and that the defendant has not complied with such request. And whereas the complainant has summoned the defendant before us to show cause why he should not comply with such request. Now we do hereby order that the defendant shall act as required by such notice as aforesaid, that is to say, do cut or plash such hedges, and do prune or lop such trees (except those planted for ornament or shelter of any dwellinghouse, courtyard, or garden<sup>1</sup>) so as that such road may not be prejudiced by the same: Provided that this order shall not extend so as to compel the defendant to cut or prune any hedge at any other time than between the last day of September and the last day of March.

Whereas the complainant, who is the county surveyor of the said county of (or the contractor for the repairing of the public road at in the above county and district), being of opinion that the public road at in the above county and district is prejudiced by the shade of hedges and trees, and having by notice in writing dated day of , 19 , and served on the defendant on the day of , 19 , required the defendant, who is the owner of the land on which such hedges and trees are growing, to cut or plash such hedges and to prune or lop such trees so that such road might not be prejudiced by the same, and the defendant not having complied with such request, an order was made by the justices at the above petty sessions on the day of , 19 , to the following effect, namely, that the defendant should act as required by such notice as aforesaid, that is to say, should cut or plash such hedges, and should prune or lop such trees (except those planted for ornament or shelter of any dwellinghouse, courtyard, or garden<sup>1</sup>) so as that such road might not be prejudiced by the same, provided that said order should not extend so as to compel the defendant to cut or prune any hedge at any other time than between the last day of September and the last day of March. And whereas, the defendant not having obeyed such order, a further order was duly made on the by the justices at said petty sessions to the following effect, namely, that it should be lawful for the complainant to do all or any of the said acts so required by such order and notice as aforesaid for the benefit and improvement of said road to the best of his skill and judgment and at the expense of the defendant. And whereas the complainant has done the said acts required by such notice and order of the<sup>2</sup> for the benefit and improvement of such road to the best of his skill and judgment. And whereas it has been proved to our satisfaction that he has incurred the sum of £ s. d., expenses in so doing. Now we do hereby order and direct that the defendant do pay to the complainant the said sum of £ s. d., or in default thereof that a warrant do issue for the levying of the said sum by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the defendant.

Having regard to the provisions of s. 1 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1851, it is submitted that the justices may award costs, not exceeding 20s., to either party under s. 22 (9) of the Petty Sessions Act.

The Poor Relief (Ir.) Act, 1847, 10 & 11 Vict. c. 31, s. 28, provides for the recovery before two justices of the amount of disallowance or reduction by an auditor in the accounts of a union, and the section has been applied to all surcharges under the Local Government (Ir.) Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 109, s. 13). The auditor's certificate is conclusive as to the validity of the disallowance or reduction, and it is imperative on the justices, on proof of non-payment, to order payment of the amounts disallowed or reduced (R. (Jephson) v. Roscommon JJ., (1883) 12 L.R.I. 331; O'Connor v. O'Neill, (1903) 3 N.I.J.R. 362). The justices may award costs (Poor Relief (Ir.) Act, 1847, s. 28). There has been no decision as to whether such costs can exceed 20s. (See Petty Sessions Act, s. 22 (9); Hosford v. Devine, (1898) 2 I.R. 28).

In cases in which it is applicable, the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, gives two justices power to determine, in case of difference, the amount of compensation payable in respect of lands taken compulsorily. The jurisdiction arises (1) where the amount claimed does not exceed £50 (s. 22), and (2) where lands are in the possession of any person having no greater interest than as tenant for a year or from year to year (s. 121). A tenancy from year to year, on which a fair rent has been fixed by the Land Commission, is not a yearly tenancy within section 121 (R. v. Cork J.J., (1900) 2 I.R. 105). The hearing is before two justices ss. 22, 121), assembled and sitting together (s. 3), after summons duly issued on the application of either party, and such justices may, in their discretion, award costs to any amount to either party (s. 24). In Ireland, however, the procedure for regulating the compulsory acquisition of land for public purposes is mainly governed by statutes which confer no jurisdiction on justices,<sup>1</sup> and the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, will rarely apply.<sup>2</sup>

Salvage jurisdiction.

Jurisdiction to determine summarily the amount of salvage, whether in respect of life or property, is conferred by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, 57 & 58 Vict. c. 60, ss. 547-554, in each of the following cases:—(1) where the parties so consent; (2) where the value of the property saved does not exceed £1,000; (3) where the amount claimed does not exceed £200. A claimant who proceeds in the High Court and does not recover more than £200 shall not be entitled to any costs unless the Court certify that the case is a fit one to be tried otherwise than summarily. Apparently, if less than £200 is claimed, the jurisdiction of the High Court is excluded (The William and John, (1863) 32 L.J. Adm. 102, 8 L.T. 56). The dispute may be determined on the application of either the salvor or the owner of the property saved or of their respective agents. Where a dispute as to salvage is to be determined summarily, it shall be referred to the arbitration of, and be determined by, two justices of the peace or a stipendiary<sup>3</sup> magistrate, or the recorder of any borough having a recorder, or the chairman of quarter sessions of any county, called the "arbitrators" (s. 547). Where the dispute relates to the salvage of wreck, it shall be referred to a court or arbitrators having jurisdiction at or near the place where the wreck is found; where it relates to salvage in the case of services rendered to any vessel or to the cargo or apparel thereof, or in saving life therefrom, it shall be referred to a court or arbitrators having jurisdiction at or near the place where the vessel is lying, or at or near the port in the United Kingdom into which the vessel is first brought after the occurrence by reason whereof the claim of salvage arises. Any court or arbitrators may call in a nautical assessor, and there shall be paid, as part of the costs of the proceedings, to such assessor, in respect of his services, such sum not exceeding £5 as the Board of Trade may direct (s. 548). A party aggrieved by the decision may appeal to the High Court if the sum in dispute exceeds £50, and the appellant, within ten days from the date of the award, gives notice to the arbitrators of his intention to appeal, and, within twenty days after the date of the award, takes such proceedings as according to the practice of the High Court are necessary for the institution of an appeal (s. 549 (1)). If the sum in dispute exceeds £50, an appeal lies irrespective of the value of the property (The Generous, (1868) 37 L.J. Adm. 37). The sum in dispute does not mean the sum awarded by the arbitrators (The Andrew Wilson, (1863) 32 L.J. Adm. 104, 8 L.T. 177). Where the claimants by a written claim demanded £40, but before the arbitrators claimed £200, and they were awarded nothing; Held, that the sum in dispute was £40 (The Mary Ann, (1865) 34 L.J. Adm. 73, 12 L.T. 238). The term "sum in dispute" means "sum in litigation," which is only another way of saying "the amount claimed" (see Scrutton, 2nd ed., p. 424). The Court will not entertain an appeal upon the mere question of amount unless plainly exorbitant (The Cuba, (1860) 6 Jur. N.S. 152), or quite inadequate (The Harriett, (1857) Swabey 218, The Jeune Louise, (1868) 37 L.J. Adm. 32, The Andrew Wilson, supra). The court rarely admits new evidence on the hearing of an appeal from an award of arbitrators (The Generous, supra). The arbitrators shall transmit to the proper officer of the court of appeal a copy on unstamped paper certified under their hands to be a true copy of the proceedings had before them or their umpire (if any), and of the award so made by them or him, accompanied with their or his certificate in writing of the gross value of the article respecting which salvage is claimed, and such copy and certificate shall be admitted in the court of appeal as evidence in the case (s. 549 (2)).<sup>1</sup> The Lord Lieutenant may appoint, out of the justices for any borough or county, a rota of justices by whom jurisdiction in salvage cases shall be exercised. Where no such rota is appointed, the salvors may, by writing addressed to the justices' clerk, name one justice; and the owner of the property may in like manner name another; and if either party fails to name a justice within a reasonable time, the case may be tried before two or more justices at petty sessions. The justices may appoint an umpire. The award is to be made by the arbitrators within forty-eight hours after the dispute has been referred to them, and the umpire within forty-eight hours after his appointment, with power to the arbitrators or umpire by writing duly signed to extend the time. There shall be paid to every umpire such sum not exceeding £5 as the Board of Trade may direct. All the costs of the arbitration, including any payment to the umpire, shall be paid by the parties in such manner and in such shares and proportions as the arbitrators or umpire may direct by the award. The arbitrators or umpire may call for the production of documents, and may examine the parties and their witnesses on oath, and administer the oath necessary for the purpose. A Secretary of State may determine the scale of costs to be awarded (s. 550).<sup>2</sup> The receiver of wreck may, on the application of either party, appoint a valuer to value the property (s. 551). The receiver shall detain the property until the salvage is paid or process is issued for the arrest or detention thereof by some competent court, or until security given (s. 552), and may sell the property, if amount due not paid within twenty days (s. 553). Where the salvage awarded does not exceed

<sup>2</sup> R. v. Cork J.J., supra, was a case where the lands were taken by the Secretary of State for War under the Defence Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 94), and the Act of 1845 was made applicable by the Lands Clauses Consolidation Acts Amendment Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 106, s. 7).

<sup>3</sup> This term does not, it is submitted, include a Resident Magistrate; though s. 610 of the same statute enacts that, for the purpose of that section, the term shall include "Resident Magistrate" (see p. 8, ante).

jurisdiction.

£200 and a dispute arises between the claimants as to the apportionment, the receiver of wreck may give a valid discharge for the entire amount and apportion it between the claimants (s. 555).

Three things are necessary to found a claim to salvage: that (1) the thing saved was in danger, (2) the service of the salvor was a voluntary and not an obligatory act, and (3) the service was successful. As to the amount of salvage, the elements to be considered are (a) the danger to life of the salvors and those saved, (b) the value of the thing saved, (c) the danger to the thing saved, (d) the labour, skill, and conduct of the salvors, (e) the value of, and the risks to, the salving property, (f) the losses, expenses, and responsibilities of salvors. The limit in practice is half the value of the property saved.

income tax.

By the Income Tax (Ir.) Act, 1853, 16 & 17 Vict. c. 34, s. 17, the collector of income tax may recover income tax assessed under schedule A, from the landlord or immediate lessor of the premises so assessed, in any of the ways provided by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 56, and 6 & 7 Vict. c. 92, for recovery of poor rates from a lessor primarily liable, that is, by summons before a magistrate at petty sessions.

Poor rate.

As to jurisdiction of justices in valuation, appeals, and recovery of Poor Rate, see RATING AND VALUATION, p. 194.

Labourers' dwellings.
Correcting Scheme.

The Labourers Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict., c. 77), s. 19 (4), incorporates sec. 7 of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 Vict. c. 20), which is as follows:—

If any omission, misstatement or erroneous description shall have been made of any lands or of the owners, lessors, or occupiers of any lands described on the plans or books of reference mentioned in the special Act (i.e., the Provisional Order), or in the schedule to the special Act (i.e., the Provisional Order), it shall be lawful for the company (Rural District Council) after giving ten days' notice to the owners of the lands affected by such proposed correction to apply to two justices for the correction thereof; and if it shall appear to such justices that such omission, misstatement, or erroneous description arose from mistake, they shall certify the same accordingly, and they shall in such certificate state the particulars of any such omission, and in what respect any such matter shall have been misstated or erroneously described. . . .

There is no jurisdiction under this section to make an order purporting to correct the plans deposited, so as to substitute for a plot actually acquired by a rural district council, another plot which had been selected by the sites committee, although the error arises from a bona fide mistake of the engineer (R. (McCarthy) v. Cork JJ., (1910) 2 I.R. 421). Similarly, where a council agreed to take a site on the lands of A, but by mistake a site on the lands of B was inspected and purported to be conveyed by A, it was held that the justices had no power to substitute the plot on A's lands for the other (R. (Casey) v. Cork JJ., (1910) 44 I.L.T.R. 134).

The sanitary authority, or any person who has contracted with such authority for the carrying out or execution of the buildings or other works provided for in any improvement scheme, or any part thereof, shall have power and authority to dig for, raise, and carry away in or out of any lands, whether within or adjoining the sanitary district, any gravel, stones, sand, or other materials which may be required for any such buildings or works, subject to the following conditions, that is to say:—(1) this section shall not apply in the case of any lands, being an orchard, bleach green, walled garden, haggard, or yard, or planted walk, lawn, demesne, or avenue to a mansion house; (2) this section shall not apply in case the occupier or owner of the lands shall not consent thereto, unless and until the sanitary authority or such contractor shall have obtained an order granting such power and authority as aforesaid, from a justice of the peace sitting in petty sessions for the petty sessions district, within which such lands are situate, which order such justice is hereby empowered to grant: Provided that a justice shall not grant such order unless after due notice to the occupier of such lands, nor unless he is satisfied that such gravel, stones, sand, or materials cannot be conveniently procured elsewhere: (Labourers Act, 1886, 49 & 50 Vict. c. 59, s. 14).<sup>1</sup>

Where an inspector, on holding an inquiry for a scheme under the Labourers Acts, is of opinion that any house occupied as a dwelling-house by a labourer is unfit for human habitation, and a notice has been served by the sanitary authority on the owner directing him to close it, which notice has not been obeyed, a court of summary jurisdiction may order the house to be demolished, or prohibit the using of the house as a dwelling-house till it has been rendered fit for that purpose; and if this is done they may determine their prior order: penalty for acting contrary to an order of prohibition, not exceeding 10s. a day (Labourers Act, 1885, 48 & 49 Vict. c. 77, s. 17).

A sanitary authority shall postpone serving a notice under the section until such time as they are in a position to supply house accommodation for the persons occupying such dwelling-house (ib. s. 17 (4)).

The tenancy under a letting by a sanitary authority of any cottage and allotment to an agricultural labourer shall be deemed to be a cottier tenancy within the meaning of the Landlord and Tenant (Ir.) Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 154), notwithstanding that the allotment exceeds half an acre, and that by the terms of such letting the tenant is bound to keep the windows of such cottage and the fences of such allotment in repair, and notwithstanding that the rents reserved in such lettings may exceed the limits prescribed by section 81 of the Landlord and Tenant (Ir.) Act, 1860 (Labourers Act, 1883, 46 & 47 Vict. c. 60, s. 13; Labourers Act, 1896, 59 & 60 Vict. c. 53, s. 5). The effect of this is to give justices jurisdiction in ejectment: see chapter on PROCEEDINGS BY LANDLORD AGAINST TENANT, p. 186.

Where an application is made to the Court for the determination of a judicial rent in respect of any holding, the Court, if satisfied that there is a necessity for improving any existing cottages or building any new cottages, or assigning to any such cottages an allotment not exceeding half an acre, for the accommodation of the labourers employed on such holding, may, if it thinks fit, in making the order determining such rent, add thereto the terms as to rent and otherwise on which such accommodation for labourers is to be provided by the person making the application (Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881, 44 & 45 Vict. c. 49, s. 19).

This section is extended, by section 3 of the Labourers' Cottages and Allotments (Ir.) Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 60), to all cases where an agreement and declaration as to a fair rent is filed, and by section 26 (1) of the Purchase of Land (Ir.) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 48) to all cases where an advance is made for the purchase of a holding under the Land Purchase Acts.

<sup>1</sup> The sanitary authority or such contractor shall make compensation to the occupier for the waste or injury by entering on the lands, or by breaking the surface, or making a passage through the lands, and to the owner or occupier, according to their respective interests therein, for the value of materials, the amount thereof to be determined in case of dispute, by the county court judge (s. 14). The section authorizes blasting operations if reasonable precautions are taken (Walker v. M'Gowan, (1911) I.R. 1).

Providing for dwellings in fair rent order.

Where an order shall be made under this Act, or has been made or is made under section nineteen of the principal Act,<sup>1</sup> for providing accommodation for the labourers employed on any holding, and such order has not been complied with within six months from the date of such order, or six months from the passing of this Act, whichever shall last happen, the person failing to comply with such order shall be liable thenceforth to a penalty of one pound for every week during which such order is not complied with, and such penalty shall be recoverable in a summary manner before two or more justices in petty sessions in manner provided by the Petty Sessions (Ireland) Act, 1851, upon the complaint of any labourer employed on the holding, and in whose favour such order has been or shall have been made, and the justices shall award such penalty to the guardians of the poor of the union within which the holding is situate to be applied in aid of the poor rate of such union (Labourers' Cottages and Allotments (Ireland) Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 60), s. 4).

It shall be the duty of the sanitary authority, and of the Local Government Board on the complaint of six householders of the district, to put the provisions of section 4 of the Act of 1882 in force (Labourers (Ir.) Act, 1883, s. 11; Labourers (Ir.) Act, 1891, s. 5).

Orders for support of lunatics.

Where any person shall be confined in any district lunatic asylum as a patient, it shall be lawful for a court of summary jurisdiction,<sup>2</sup> in case it shall be proved to the satisfaction of such court that such patient has an estate applicable to his maintenance and more than sufficient to maintain his family (if any), by order to require the relation or other the person in receipt of the income of such patient, within one month after the service of such order, to pay the charges of the examination, removal, lodging, maintenance, clothing, medicine, and care of such patient, and within one month from the times in such order respectively specified, to continue to pay, so long as such patient shall remain in such district lunatic asylum, the charges which may from time to time be incurred in respect of the lodging, maintenance, clothing, medicine, and care of such patient in such district lunatic asylum; and in case such charges shall not be paid within the times by this section respectively prescribed, it shall be lawful for the resident medical superintendent of such district lunatic asylum . . . to apply to a court of summary jurisdiction,<sup>2</sup> and thereupon it shall be lawful for such court, on proof of the service of such order and of the non-payment of such charges respectively in accordance with the terms of such order, by an order to direct the resident medical superintendent or any officer of such district lunatic asylum to seize so much of any money, and to seize and sell so much of the goods and chattels, and to take and receive so much of the rents and profits of the lands and tenements of such patient, and other income of such patient, as may be necessary to pay such charges, accounting for the same to such court, such charges having been first proved to the satisfaction of such court, and the amount of such charges being set forth in such order; and if any trustee or other person having the possession, custody, or charge of any property of such patient, or if the Governor and Company of the Bank of Ireland, or any other body or person having in their or his hands any stock, interest, dividend, or annuity belonging to or due to such patient, pay any money according to any such order to any person authorized to receive the same to defray such charges, the receipt of the person authorized to receive such money shall be a good discharge to such trustee, governor, and company, or other body or person as aforesaid.

In case any such patient shall not have an estate applicable for the payment of such charges as aforesaid, then and in such case any person who under the Acts for the relief of the destitute poor in Ireland, or under any other Act, would be liable to maintain or support such patient,<sup>3</sup> or to contribute to the maintenance or support of such patient if such patient were not in such district lunatic asylum, shall be liable to pay or to contribute to such charges according to his ability; and it shall be lawful for a court of summary jurisdiction, on the application of the resident medical superintendent of such district lunatic asylum, and after seven days' notice of such application to the person so liable, to make an order for the payment from time to time of such charges or such part thereof as to such court shall seem just; and in case of non-payment of such charges, or such part thereof according to the terms of such order, payment of the same shall be recoverable by the resident medical superintendent in like manner as penalties are recoverable under the Acts for the relief of the destitute poor in Ireland (Lunatic Asylums (Ir.) Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 67), s. 16).

Orders for support of lunatics.

The above section is extended to criminal lunatics, and to dangerous lunatics, or dangerous idiots, sent to an asylum<sup>1</sup> in pursuance of section 10 of the Lunacy (Ir.) Act, 1867, 30 & 31 Vict. c. 118, (Lunacy (Ir.) Act, 1901, 1 Edw. 7, c. 17, s. 3 (2)).

The Drainage (Ir.) Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 89, s. 58), provides that any party whose lands may be injured by neglect to maintain the banks or scour the channels of existing drains or streams, may require the proprietors guilty of such neglect to join in effectually cleansing and maintaining the same, and in case of refusal, may do the work necessary and sue for the expense thereof: provided that, in case where the drain or stream is not a boundary between the adjoining lands, a warrant or authority in writing from two or more justices in petty sessions is necessary, such warrant or authority to be granted if upon inquiry, had before justices upon a summons to be served upon the neglecting proprietor or occupier, it shall be proved that the neglect causes injury or prevents improvement.

Drainage Acts.
5 & 6 Vict.
c. 89, s. 58.

The Drainage (Ir.) Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 4, s. 42), provides remedies in case aqueducts, culverts, or tunnels under canals, either by reason of original construction or from neglect, are insufficient to discharge the flood waters of the streams or drains upon which they are constructed at a sufficiently low level for the purpose of draining the lands lying above. Where the defect is due to neglect, a fourteen-day notice may be served upon the canal company to whom they belong, and in case such company for ten days after the expiration of the notice neglect or refuse to cleanse same, the justices at petty sessions may, upon the complaint of the injured party, summon before them the canal company and such other persons as they may deem fit, and may order and direct any persons to be named in a warrant to be issued by them to enter and cleanse such aqueduct, culvert, or tunnel, the expense of so doing to be recovered from the canal company by civil bill. If the injury is caused by reason of the original construction, the section provides for a memorial praying alteration, to be presented to the Lord Lieutenant.

By the Land Drainage (Ir.) Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 26), persons interested in land who are desirous to drain the same, and in order thereto deem it necessary that new drains should be opened through lands belonging to another owner or owners, or that existing drains in, or immediately adjoining lands belonging to another owner or owners, should be cleansed or otherwise improved, are authorized to seek compulsory powers before justices for the purpose. Section 5 provides for a written application to be served on the owner or owners, and also, if the owner be not the occupier, on the occupier or occupiers, stating the nature of the improvements, and the compensation proposed to be paid, and accompanied by a map. If the adjoining owner assent under his hand and seal, such assent shall (subject to certain provisions if any of the owners are under disability or incapacity) be binding upon all parties interested in the lands, and the occupier or person other than the owner shall be entitled to compensation, to be claimed within twelve months after the completion of the work, the amount to be determined by two or more justices in petty sessions, or if such occupier or other person do not consent to a determination by such justices, then by arbitration (s. 6). The adjoining owner shall be deemed to have dissented if he fails to express his assent within one month, and in the event of such dissent, the following questions shall be decided by two or more justices in petty sessions (unless the adjoining owner requires same within such period of one month to be decided by arbitration):—whether the proposed drains or improvements will cause injury to the adjoining owner or to the occupier or other person interested in such lands, and whether such injury can be fully compensated for in money. If the decision is that no injury will be caused, the applicant may proceed forthwith; if the decision is that injury will be caused, but that the same may be fully compensated for in money, the justices or arbitrator may assess such compensation, and apportion the same amongst the parties in their judgment entitled thereto, and on payment of the said sum so assessed, the applicant may proceed to make the drains or improvements; but if the decision is that injury not admitting of compensation in money will be caused, the applicant shall not be entitled to make the proposed drains (s. 8). The compensation in the case of owners under disability is to be applied under the Land Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (ss. 6, 9). If the justices or arbitrators approve of the scheme as proposed or amended by themselves, a map is to be prepared and forwarded to the clerk of the peace (s. 10). The statute gives the applicant power for ever thereafter to enter upon lands for the purpose of cleansing, &c.; if he fails to do so, the owner or occupier of the lands may do so, and recover the expenses thereof in a summary manner at petty sessions or by civil bill (s. 11). The adjoining owner may fill up or divert drains made in pursuance of the Act on condition of making drains equally efficient, the dispute as to the efficiency to be settled by two or more justices in petty sessions or, if desired by either party, by arbitration (s. 12). The applicant shall bear all reasonable costs of the application (s. 14). Provision is also made by section 15 for the diversion of any brook, river, or watercourse from its ordinary channel upon notice to be published by advertisement, &c., and the owner of any lands apprehensive of injury from drains referred to in the section, upon service of the prescribed notice, shall be entitled to the same privileges as if he were an adjoining owner under the previous section. Section 16 provides for the appointment of arbitrators. A penalty not exceeding £10 for obstructing the making of, or injuring drains, is provided, and is recoverable summarily before two justices at petty sessions (s. 13), who, if it is submitted, can award costs not exceeding 20s. to either party (s. 13).

Drainage Acts.
26 & 27 Vict.
c. 26.

The Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, contains provisions giving certain jurisdiction to justices in the event of railway companies constructing railways being in default in the duties imposed upon such companies of restoration and substitution, &c., of roads injured or destroyed by them, including the following:—"Justices may impose a penalty of £5 a day, payable to the trustees, commissioners, surveyor, or other person having the management of the road interfered with by the company" (or, in case of a private road, to the owner), in case of default to restore or substitute a road within the periods in the Act, or in the special Act provided (Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 57).

Railways.
Orders on company to repair roads, &c.

If, in the course of making the railway, the company shall use or interfere with any road, they shall from time to time make good all damage done by them to such road;<sup>1</sup> and if any question shall arise as to the damage done to such road by the company, or as to the repair thereof by them, such question shall be referred to the determination of two justices; and such justices may direct such repairs to be made in the state of such road, in respect of the damage done by the company, and within such period as they may think reasonable, and may impose on the company for not carrying into effect such repairs, any penalty not exceeding £5 per day as to such justices<sup>2</sup> shall seem just; and such penalty shall be paid to the surveyor or other person having the management of the roads interfered with by the company, if a public road, and be applied for the purposes of such road, or if a private road the same shall be paid to the owner thereof (s. 58).

Authority may be given to the company to carry the railway across a highway (other than a public carriage road) on the level, on obtaining the consent thereto of two or more justices in petty sessions after application in the prescribed manner (s. 59), with power to any aggrieved party to appeal from such order to quarter sessions (s. 60).

If, where the railway shall cross any highway<sup>3</sup> on the level, the company fail to make convenient ascents and descents or other convenient approaches, and such hand-rails, fences, gates, and stiles as they are required to make, it shall be lawful for two justices, on the application of the surveyor of roads, or of any two householders within the parish or district where such crossing shall be situate, after not less than ten days' notice to the company, to order the company to make such ascent and descent or other approach, or such hand-rails, fences, gates, or stiles as aforesaid, within a period to be limited for that purpose by such justices; and if the company fail to comply with such order they shall forfeit £5 for every day that they fail so to do; and it shall be lawful for the justices by whom such penalty is imposed to order the whole or any part thereof to be applied, in such manner and by such person as they think fit, in executing the work in respect whereof such penalty was incurred (s. 62).

Where, under the provisions of this Act or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, the company are required to maintain or keep in repair any bridge, fence, approach, gate, or other work executed by them, it shall be lawful for two justices, on the application of the surveyor of roads or of any two householders of the parish or district where such work may be situate, complaining that any such work is out of repair, after not less than ten days' notice to the company, to order the company to put such work into complete repair, within a period to be limited for that purpose by such justices; and if the company fail to comply with such order, they shall forfeit £5 for every day that they fail so to do; and it shall be lawful for the justices by whom any such penalty is imposed to order the whole or any part thereof to be applied, in such manner and by such persons as they think fit, in putting such work into repair (s. 65).

of damages, etc., under Railway Clauses Act, 1845.

"Where any damages, costs, or expenses are, by this or the special Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, directed to be paid, and the method of ascertaining the amount or enforcing the payment thereof is not provided for, such amount, in case of dispute, shall be ascertained and determined by two justices; and if the amount so ascertained be not paid by the company or other party liable to pay the same within seven days after demand, the amount may be recovered by distress of the goods of the company or other party liable as aforesaid," and any justice may issue a warrant so to distrain (s. 140).

If sufficient goods of the company cannot be distrained, then means of enforcing payment from the treasurer of the company are provided (s. 141).

"Where in this Act or the Special Act any question of compensation, expenses, charges, or damages, or other matter, is referred to the determination of any one justice or more, it shall be lawful for any one justice, upon the application of either party, to summon the other party to appear before one justice, or before two justices, as the case may require, at a time and place to be named in such summons; and upon the appearance of such parties, or in the absence of any of them, upon proof of due service of the summons, it shall be lawful for such one justice, or such two justices, as the case may be, to hear and determine such question, and for that purpose to examine such parties or any of them, and their witnesses on oath; and the costs of every such inquiry shall be in the discretion of such justices, and they shall determine the amount thereof" (s. 142).

"Every penalty or forfeiture imposed by this or the Special Act, or by any bye-law made in pursuance thereof, the recovery of which is not otherwise provided for, may be recovered by summary proceeding before two justices" (s. 145). Distress is dealt with in ss. 148, 149. Half of any penalty, the application whereof is not otherwise provided for, is to be awarded to the informer, and the other half is to be awarded, "to the overseers of the poor of the parish in which the offence shall have been committed" (s. 150); though, possibly, no effect can be given in Ireland to the words in italics. Witnesses duly summoned failing to appear, or appearing and refusing to give evidence, penalty not exceeding £5 (s. 153).

trees.

If any tree standing near to a railway shall be in danger of falling on the railway so as to obstruct the traffic, it shall be lawful for any two justices, on the complaint of the company which works such railway, to cause such tree to be removed or otherwise dealt with as such justices may order. And the justices making such order may award compensation to be paid by the company making such complaint to the owner of the tree so ordered to be removed or otherwise dealt with as such justices shall think proper; and the amount of such compensation shall be recoverable in like manner as compensation recoverable before justices under the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (Regulation of Railways Act, 1868, 31 & 32 Vict. c. 119, s. 24). Railways.

(1) A railway company may enter on any land and do all things reasonably necessary for the purpose of extinguishing or arresting the spread of any fire caused by sparks or cinders emitted from any locomotive engine. (2) A railway company may, for the purpose of preventing or diminishing the risk of fire in a plantation, wood, or orchard, through sparks or cinders emitted from any locomotive engine, enter upon any part of the plantation, wood, or orchard, or on any land adjoining thereto, and cut down and clear away any undergrowth, and take any other precautions reasonably necessary for the purpose; but they shall not, without the consent of the owner, cut down or injure any trees, bushes, or shrubs. (3) A railway company exercising powers under this section shall pay full compensation to any person injuriously affected by the exercise of those powers, including compensation in respect of loss of amenity, and any compensation so payable shall, in case of difference, be determined by two justices in manner provided by s. 24 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (Railway Fires Act, 1905 (5 Ed. 7, c. 11), s. 2). Damage by sparks or cinders.

Where hurt or damage is caused by the commission of any offence under ss. 12-14 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1851, the justices may award compensation not exceeding 40s. (Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1851, s. 14 (4), q. v. APPENDIX OF STATUTES: see also McGarry v. Fairbairn and McNulty v. Hope, noted p. 312 n.). Damage by negligence.

The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, s. 89, which, by s. 16 of the Labourers (Ir.) Act, 1883, is incorporated with the Labourers (Ir.) Acts, provides for a penalty of £10, over and above the amount of damage done, to be paid by undertakers entering without having complied with the necessary statutory requirement as to deposit, &c., and without consent, on lands required for the undertaking, the penalties to be recovered (s. 136) summarily before two justices. After a conviction the undertakers remaining in possession are liable to a penalty of £25 a day, recoverable by action (s. 89). Wrongful entry on lands compulsorily taken.

A summary remedy for the recovery of tolls is provided by section 39 of the Markets and Fairs Clauses Act, 1847: but section 1 provides that the Act shall not apply to any fair or market unless incorporated by the special Act authorizing such fair or market. The Act of 1847 has not been incorporated in Dublin (R. (Dublin Corporation) v. Dublin JJ., (1898) 2 I.R. 762). Recovery of tolls.

Statutes.

JURISDICTION in ejectment proceedings in respect of certain tenements is given by section 15 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 92), the Cottier Tenant (Ireland) Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 65), the Landlord and Tenant (Ireland) Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 154, ss. 81, 86, and 87), and the Labourers Act 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 60), s. 13.

Summary
Jurisdiction
Act, 1851,
s. 15.

The Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1851, s. 15 (verbatim, APPENDIX OF STATUTES), gives jurisdiction in the case of—

- (1) Any house or any part of a house—
- (2) situate in any city, town, borough, or village in which a fair or market is usually held,
- (3) held by the tenant for any term not exceeding one month,
- (4) at a rent not exceeding the rate of £1 sterling by the month,
- (5) where the term or interest of the tenant has ended or been duly determined by notice to quit.

The term "house" generally includes building, curtilage, orchard, and garden (Coke Litt. 56A and 56B). There is nothing to prevent a house being let by the same landlord to the same tenant in two different takes, so that the rent of each does not exceed the rate of £1 per month; and each of such holdings is within the jurisdiction conferred by the section (Tuaffe v. Sheridan, K.B.D., 18th April, 1890, not reported). A tenancy from month to month is a holding for a term not exceeding one month (Blue v. Fullerton, (1876) I.R. 10 C.L. 233, 10 I.L.T.R. 138). A month's notice is always sufficient to put an end to a monthly tenancy, and a week's notice to a weekly tenancy (Beamish v. Cor, (1885) 16 L.R.I. 276). Strictly speaking, the law only requires a reasonable notice to determine the tenancy in such cases (Cherry, 3rd ed., 221). Where a tenant held premises at a weekly rent payable on each Thursday, it was held that a notice served on Thursday, 5th November, to quit, "on or before Friday, 13th November," was sufficient (Harvey v. Copeland, (1892)

30 L.R.I. 412, 26 I.L.T.R. 105). It is submitted that it is competent for the landlord's known agent, or receiver, to take out the summons and obtain an order for possession in his own name.<sup>1</sup> Where the title of the landlord has accrued since the letting, proof of the right by which he claims possession must be given. A single justice at petty sessions has jurisdiction to issue a warrant under the section (Blue v. Fullerton, (1876) I.R. 10 C.L. 233; 10 I.L.T.R. 138). Sunday must be reckoned in the computation of the time within which the warrant is to be executed (ib.) There is no jurisdiction to grant an order under the section unless the summons has been served in manner provided thereby; and therefore, where the summons was served upon a person whom the landlord had accepted and dealt with as tenant, but was not served upon the person in occupation, the landlord being unaware that the last-mentioned person was in occupation at all, the service was held insufficient (R. v. Cork JJ., (1875) I.R. 9 C.L. 203). Every person in possession as tenant or sub-tenant must be served (Deasy v. Hickey, (1905) 5 N.I.J.R. 209). The justices have jurisdiction to find as a fact the persons necessary to be served (ib.) The words "cannot be found" are not equivalent to "cannot be found in Ireland," but mean cannot with due diligence be found, so that personal service can be effected (Blue v. Fullerton, supra). If a person gets into possession, as a trespasser, of premises which were let at a rent within the jurisdiction, there is jurisdiction to make the order against such trespasser under the section (Tullamore R.D.C. v. Burke, (1902) 2 N.I.J.R. 55). A district inspector may, under sections 25 and 26 of the Petty Sessions Act, endorse a warrant<sup>2</sup> to a constable under his orders, but the constable so appointed has no authority to delegate to others the duty so imposed upon him; therefore, when a warrant is endorsed to constable A, and it was executed by constable B, the execution was held illegal (Blue v. Fullerton, supra). The jurisdiction conferred by the section is extended to all towns and townships within the Dublin metropolitan police district, although no fair or market be held therein (34 & 35 Vict. c. 76, s. 10). Semble, the summons, if issued elsewhere than in the Dublin metropolitan police district, should allege that the town is a market town (Deasy v. Hickey, supra).

Summary
Jurisdiction
Act, 1851,
s. 15.

By the Defence Act, 1859 (22 Vict. c. 12), s. 6, where any lease or agreement of or concerning land in Ireland, vested in the Secretary of State for War on behalf of the Crown, is determined by expiration, notice, or forfeiture (except for non-payment of rent), possession of such land may be recovered by or on behalf of the said Secretary of State as provided by s. 15 of 14 & 15 Vict. c. 92, and such provision shall be applicable in all cases to the recovery of land in Ireland holden under any such lease or agreement as aforesaid, wherever such land may be situate, and at and for whatever rent and term the same may be holden, and, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the said provision, the justices authorized to issue a warrant for giving possession may by such warrant authorize such possession to be given forthwith or on or before such day as the justices may think fit to name, and may, if they think fit, issue such warrant notwithstanding the tenant may be willing to give such undertaking as therein mentioned.

Cottier Tenant Act, 1856.

Jurisdiction is given by the Cottier Tenant (Ireland) Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 65), (verbatim, APPENDIX OF STATUTES), in the case of the overholding of tenements within the Act, wherever situate. Jurisdiction arises in case of—(1) any dwellinghouse held with not more than half an acre (if any) of land as a garden or cultivated allotment, (2) of which the tenure is by the year, half year, quarter, month, or week, and (3) of which the rent does not exceed the rate of 12s. a month; provided (4) that the letting is by written or printed agreement as nearly as possible of the form in the schedule to the Act, which agreement shall expressly state whether the tenement and “requisites” shall be maintained in good tenantable condition by the landlord or by the tenant, or what part by each respectively (s. 1); (5) that the tenement has certain primary “requisites” for the comfort and health of the tenant set forth in section 2; (6) that the tenant has made default in observing the obligations set forth in section 2; and (7) that the tenement has been provided by the landlord for the use of the tenant occupying the same (s. 11).

The procedure under section 15 of the Summary Jurisdiction Ireland Act, 1851, is made applicable (s. 2). The overholding tenant is liable to full rent (s. 3); the outgoing tenant is to have compensation for crops, to be fixed by a distinct order of the justices (s. 4). An appeal is provided in the same manner as prescribed by section 24 of the Petty Sessions (Ireland) Act, 1851, with variations as to the length of the notice of appeal, and the amount and conditions of the recognizances (s. 8).

Landlord & Tenant (Ir.) Act, 1860.

Jurisdiction.

The Landlord and Tenant (Ireland) Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 154), confers jurisdiction on justices to order the summary recovery of possession of tenements in the following cases:—

(A.) Overholding. (1) Certain cottier tenements wherever situated (ss. 81, 86); (2) any lands or premises occupied by a servant, herdsman, caretaker (s. 86), including premises occupied by persons who have been converted into caretakers by service of a notice under section 7 of the Land Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 33, s. 7).

(B.) For waste, in case of cottier tenants, or tenants for a shorter period than a month, or at will or by sufferance (s. 84).

(C.) For non-payment of rent, in case of cottier tenements (s. 85).

Cottier tenements for purpose of Act.

Section 81 defines cottier tenements for the purpose of the Act:—

Where any landlord shall by any agreement or memorandum in writing let a tenement, wherever situate, consisting of a dwellinghouse or cottage without land, or with any portion of land not exceeding half an acre statute measure, at a rent not exceeding the rate of £5 by the year for one month or from month to month, or in like manner for any lesser period of time, and shall thereby undertake to keep and maintain the said dwellinghouse or cottage in tenantable condition and repair, such tenancy shall constitute and be deemed to be a cottier tenancy within the meaning of this Act, and shall be subject to the provisions hereafter contained in respect thereof (s. 81), including the provisions as to summary ejectment conferred by sections 84, 85, and 86, infra.

An undertaking to keep a house thatched is not a sufficient undertaking to repair to make the tenancy a cottier tenancy within the section (R. (Connor) v. Londonderry JJ., (1894) 28 I.L.T.R. 92). A breach of such undertaking does not preclude a landlord from recovering under s. 86 (Listowel R.D.C. v. Stack, (1910) 44 I.L.T.R. 255).

The tenancy under a letting by a sanitary authority of any cottage and allotment to an agricultural labourer shall be deemed to be a cottier tenancy within the Act, notwithstanding that the allotment exceeds half an acre, and that by the terms of such letting the tenant is bound to keep the windows of such cottage and the fences of such allotment in repair (Labourers Act, 1896, s. 5), and notwithstanding that the rents reserved in such lettings may exceed the limits prescribed by s. 81 (Labourers Act, 1883, s. 13).

Landlord & Tenant (Ir.) Act, 1860.
Application to labourers' cottages.

In case any such cottier tenant, or any tenant for a shorter period of time than a month, or at will, or by sufferance, shall maliciously or wilfully injure or destroy, or permit to be injured or destroyed, any part of the premises holden by him, and which the landlord is bound to keep in repair, it shall be lawful for the landlord to make his complaint before any one or more justices of the peace for the county, not being interested in the said premises, at petty sessions, and such justice or justices shall summon the tenant before him or them, and hear and determine such complaint; and if it shall be proved to his or their satisfaction, that such tenant committed or permitted such injury or destruction upon the said premises, the said justice or justices shall, by their warrant in writing, direct any person to be therein named as special bailiff on the part of the landlord to deliver possession of the said premises to the said landlord or owner; and such warrant shall be obeyed and executed by such special bailiff, who shall have full power and authority so to do (Landlord and Tenant (Ir.) Act, 1860, s. 84).

In case any gale of rent or compensation reserved or payable upon any such cottier tenement shall be in arrear for the space of forty days, it shall be lawful for the landlord of the premises to exhibit his complaint in respect thereof before a justice or justices of the peace in petty sessions, and to cause the said tenant to be served with a summons in writing, signed by a justice or justices having jurisdiction in the place in which the premises shall be situate, to appear before two or more justices at the petty session or other place in which such justices usually meet for the dispatch of public business, to show cause why possession of the said premises should not be delivered up to his landlord, or his agent or receiver, and such justices, or any two or more of them, shall, in the presence of such tenant, or on proof of the service of the said summons on the said tenant personally, or by leaving a copy of the same at his usual place of abode, determine the matter; and if it shall appear to the said justices that at least one gale of such rent, over and above all just credits and allowances, and any valid set-off claimed by the tenant, is in arrear for the space of forty days aforesaid, the said justices shall cause their warrant to be prepared, directing possession of the said premises to be delivered to the landlord, and to be executed by any special bailiff therein named, and such warrant shall be obeyed and executed by such bailiff, who shall have full power and authority so to do (s. 85).

In case the term or interest of any tenant in any such cottier tenement shall have ended, or shall have been duly determined by a notice to quit, and such tenant or any person by whom the premises or any part of them shall be then actually occupied shall neglect or refuse to deliver up the possession of the same, or in case any person shall have been put or shall be put into possession of any lands or premises by permission of the owner, as servant, herdsman, or caretaker, and shall refuse or omit to quit and deliver up the possession of the premises on demand made by the owner thereof or his known agent or receiver, it shall be lawful for the landlord or owner of the said premises, or his heirs, executors, or administrators, or his known agent or receiver, to cause the person so neglecting or refusing to quit or deliver up the possession to be served with a summons in writing, signed by a justice or justices not interested in the said premises, but having jurisdiction in the place in which the premises shall be situate, to appear before two or more justices at the petty sessions, town hall, or divisional justice room, or other place in which such justices usually meet for the dispatch of public business of such city, town, district, or other place, to show cause why possession of the said premises should not be delivered up to such landlord or owner or his agent or receiver as aforesaid; and if the said tenant or occupier shall not appear at the time and place appointed, or if such tenant or occupier shall appear and shall not show to the satisfaction of such justices reasonable cause why possession should not be given, and shall still neglect or refuse to deliver up possession of the said premises, or such part of them as was in his actual occupation at the time of the service of such summons to the said landlord or owner, or his agent or receiver, it shall be lawful for such justices or any two or more of them not interested as aforesaid, on proof being made before them of the holding or permissive possessions, as the case may be, and of its end or determination, and the time and manner thereof, and where the title of the landlord shall have accrued since the letting of the premises, the right by which he claims the possession, to issue a warrant under their hands and seals to any person as a special bailiff in that behalf on the part of the landlord or owner, requiring and authorizing him within a period to be therein named, and not less than seven or more than fourteen clear days from the date of such warrant, to give the possession of the said premises to the said landlord or his agent or receiver; and such warrant shall be a sufficient authority to the said bailiff to enter upon the said premises, with such assistants as he shall deem to be necessary, and to give possession accordingly, provided that no entry shall be made under such warrant on any Sunday, Good Friday, or Christmas Day, or at any time except between the hours of nine in the morning and four in the afternoon; provided also that nothing herein contained shall prejudice or affect the right of any owner of property entrusted to the care of any servant or caretaker peaceably to resume the possession thereof without process of law if he shall so think fit (s. 86).

summons.

Such summons as last aforesaid may be served either personally or by leaving the same with some person being in occupation of such house, or part of a house or tenement, and where the tenant of such house or part of a house or tenement shall not reside therein, by serving the same personally, or by leaving the same at the place of abode of the tenant so holding over as aforesaid, four clear days before the day appointed for the hearing of the matter of the said summons: provided that if the person so holding over cannot be found, and admission into the premises so overholden cannot be obtained, and the place of abode of such person shall not be known, the posting of such summons on some conspicuous part of the premises so holden over shall be deemed to be good service of such person (s. 87).

Procedure,
proofs, etc.

The summons under section 86 must be heard at petty sessions before two or more justices, whereas a single justice at petty sessions has jurisdiction in cases within section 15 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Ireland) Act, 1851 (see Blue v. Fullerton, (1876) I.R. 10 C.L. 233). It is a condition precedent to the jurisdiction that the demand and refusal of possession must be made before the summons is issued (R. (Houlihan) v. King's County JJ., (1900) 6 I.W.L.R. 56). It is not, however, necessary that the demand of possession should be made personally by the landlord or his agent. Where an agent signed a written demand of possession, and caused same to be personally served upon the caretaker by a bailiff who was authorized in writing to take over possession, it was held that there was a sufficient demand of possession within the section (Massareene v. Bellew, (1889) 24 L.R.I. 420, 24 I.L.T.R. 74). Where a bailiff who for many years had acted in that capacity on the estate of the landlord, and as such was personally known to the tenant, was verbally authorized by the landlord to demand possession, and did demand possession. Held, that the section was sufficiently complied with (Murphy v. Grady, (1903) 37 I.L.T.R. 161). If a person gets into possession as a trespasser of premises which were let at a rent within the jurisdiction of justices, they can make the order against such trespasser if he has been served (Tullamore R.D.C. v. Burke, (1902) 2 N.I.J.R. 55).

Where a person who has been put out of possession under writ of ejectment for non-payment of rent is afterwards readmitted as a caretaker, he is estopped from disputing the regularity of the proceedings in the ejectment (Ford v. Byrne, (1863) 8 Ir. Jur. N.S. 65).

If the case was originally one to which the jurisdiction of the justices under the section would attach, that jurisdiction is apparently not taken away by an allegation of matters subsequent relied upon as constituting a question of title for the purpose of ousting the jurisdiction of the justices. Where an evicted tenant who had been put back into possession as a caretaker alleged a subsequent agreement for a new tenancy, which was denied, it was held that the justices had jurisdiction to determine whether or not such new agreement had been entered into (R. (Quinn) v. Tipperary JJ., (1883) 12 L.R.I. 393; R. (Power) v. Tipperary JJ., (1895) 1 I.W.L.R. 173). Where a petty sessions comprises part of two counties, a justice of the district may adjudicate as to any lands within the district, even though such lands are not within the county for which he is in commission (14 & 15 Vict. c. 93, s. 74; R. (Houlihan) v. King's County JJ., (1900) 6 I.W.L.R. 56)). It is not necessary that the warrant should be signed at the time the adjudication is made (R. (Byrne) v. Knox, (1888) 22 L.R.I. 599). The entry in the petty sessions book is a final adjudication of the case, and the issue of the warrant is merely a ministerial act (ib.). Proceedings under s. 86 can be brought either in the name of the landlord or agent; but under s. 85 can be brought only in the name of the landlord (R. (Corker) v. Cavan JJ., (1904) 5 N.I.J.R. 94).

Landlord & Tenant (Ir.)
Act, 1860.
Procedure,
proofs, etc.

In proceedings under section 86 of the Landlord and Tenant (Ireland) Act, 1860, to recover possession from a permissive occupier, it is unnecessary, either in the complaint or in the order of the justices, to distinguish the precise character of the occupation—namely, whether the occupier is in occupation as a servant or herdsman, or caretaker, or otherwise particularly to specify the precise character of the occupation; where the complaint stated that the occupation was as “herd, servant or caretaker,” and the justices simply gave an order for possession, it was held that the order was good on its face (R. (Mahony) v. Cork JJ., (1910) 2 I.R. 38, 43 I.L.T.R. 194).

A stay of execution of the warrant for fourteen days shall be granted in case the tenant appears and gives an undertaking (to be entered in writing by the clerk of the court) quietly and peaceably to deliver up possession within fourteen days (s. 88). A mere irregularity or informality in the proceedings shall not make the landlord or any person acting on his behalf a trespasser (s. 89).

As to appeal and case stated, see p. 193.

In the case of any agricultural or pastoral holding for which a judgment in ejectment for non-payment of rent has been recovered, where the rent does not exceed £100 per year, and in every other case of judgment in ejectment for non-payment of rent in which the plaintiff shall elect to take advantage of the section, the plaintiff may, by adopting the procedure indicated by the Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 33, s. 7), recover possession of lands by proceedings before justices at petty sessions.

Land Law
Act, 1887, s. 7

The following is a summary of the procedure (see Cherry, 3rd ed., 407):—

(1) Judgment or decree in ejectment; (2) notice prescribed by section 7 to be served by registered letter not earlier than six weeks, unless the High Court

Land Law
Act 1887,
s. 7.

otherwise allow;<sup>1</sup> (3) summary of notice to be posted on police barrack or courthouse in the district<sup>2</sup> within fourteen days of service; (4) copy of notice to be filed in the court from which the writ of summons or process issued within twenty-one days of service.

The tenancy is then determined, and the former tenant becomes a caretaker. He may be removed from possession after one month by taking the following steps (Cherry, 3rd ed., p. 407):—

(5) Demand of possession; (6) service of summons under section 86, in the prescribed manner, either four clear days<sup>3</sup> before the day of the petty sessions, if personal service is effected (s. 87), or seven days before the same date, if the service is effected (under High Court Order 47, Rule 9, or County Court Order 24, Rule 14), by posting one copy of the summons in manner prescribed regarding the summary, supra, and by sending another copy of the summons by post to the person to be served, in a registered letter addressed to him at his usual place of residence; (7) warrant of justices at petty sessions to give possession to sheriff or special bailiff; (8) where there is an inhabited dwelling-house on the lands, notice to relieving officer forty-eight hours before execution of warrant (11 & 12 Vict. c. 47, s. 2); (9) execution of warrant and delivery of possession to landlord not less than seven days nor more than two months from the issue thereof.

Restraining waste.

Where any person shall be in possession of lands, or of any dwellinghouse, outhouse, or buildings as tenant thereof, or as a servant or caretaker of any owner, or having obtained the possession thereof from any such tenant, servant, or caretaker, and the landlord, or owner, or other person interested in the preservation of the premises, or any agent acting on his behalf, shall, by affidavit, satisfy any justice of the peace of the county, not being a party interested in the said premises (who is hereby authorized and required to take such affidavit), that there exists probable and just grounds of suspicion that such person is about to commit, or to permit or suffer, any unlawful waste, injury, alteration, destruction upon, or removal from any such dwellinghouse, outhouse, or other building, or intends unlawfully to burn or break up any part of the soil or surface or subsoil of the lands, or unlawfully to remove the soil or surface or subsoil of the said lands, or unlawfully to cut down, top, lop, or grub any trees, woods or underwoods growing on the said lands, or otherwise use or misuse the premises or any part thereof contrary to his agreement, or that he is in the act of doing or suffering any of the aforesaid matters, it shall be lawful for such justice of the peace to issue his precept in writing under his hand and seal stating that information had been received that such waste or injury is intended to be, or is in the act of being, done or permitted, and commanding all such persons and all other persons whomsoever to desist from such waste or injury, and not to continue the same until special leave and authority for that purpose shall be first procured from the magistrate who shall have signed such precept, or until the subject-matter of the said information be inquired into at the next petty sessions of the district in which the said premises are situate, or such other time as may be therein mentioned, and such precept may be according to the Form No. 1 in the Schedule (A) to this act annexed, and shall be served on every or any person by whom it shall be suspected that such waste or injury is intended to be, or is being committed, by delivering a copy thereof to such person if he can be found, and if not, by affixing a copy thereof on the principal door or entrance to the dwellinghouse, outhouse, or other building; and, if there be no such house or building, on some conspicuous part of the premises, and the said persons shall and may attend at the petty sessions, and such order may be made thereat by the court of petty sessions for annulling or continuing for a limited period the said precept or otherwise as may be agreeable to justice (Landlord and Tenant Act (Ireland), 1860, s. 35).

<sup>1</sup> If no person who has been served with the writ of summons or process is in possession, service is to be effected by posting a copy of the notice in manner prescribed regarding the summary, infra, Cherry, 3rd ed., p. 409.

An information which, after referring to past acts of waste, avers that the tenant "persists in committing acts of unlawful waste" (without specifying them), and does not aver what future acts of waste are apprehended, is insufficient to ground a good precept (Brady v. Slator, (1864) 9 Ir. Jur. N.S. 152). The affidavit is not sufficient if it merely states that the deponent has just grounds of suspicion that waste is about to be committed; it must aver facts warranting the suspicion (Ex parte Donaghy, (1867) I.R. 2 C.L. 22). The act of waste must be committed upon the demised premises; cutting turf upon adjoining lands is not within the section (Kelly v. Drought, (1887) 21 I.L.T.R. 31). Restraining waste.

If any person shall after the service or posting of such precept, in disobedience thereto, without such leave and authority as aforesaid, proceed with or continue to do the act prohibited by such precept, or wilfully aid, abet, or assist in so doing, he shall on conviction thereof before two or more justices of the peace at petty sessions, be liable to be imprisoned for a period not exceeding one calendar month, and all the provisions of the Petty Sessions (Ireland) Act respecting summary convictions before justices at petty sessions, and respecting appeals therefrom, shall be applicable to every conviction under this section<sup>1</sup> (s. 36).

The precept, or order, or conviction in relation thereto, may be annulled by any of the Superior Courts of Law or Equity in Ireland, or any judge thereof, or the going judge of assize, or the chairman of the county, on a summary application on behalf of the person aggrieved by such precept, order, or conviction, of which due notice shall be given to the opposite party (s. 37). Apparently the words "going judge of assize" are not confined to the next going judge of assize (Kelly v. Drought, (1887) 21 I.L.T.R. 31).

There is no appeal under any of the foregoing statutes except s. 37 of the Act of 1860; but either party may apply for a case stated on a question of law.<sup>2</sup> Appeal and case stated.

An appeal does not lie from the decision of the King's Bench Division in a case stated from the decision of the justices in connection with ejectment proceedings (Kean v. Robinson, (1910) 2 I.R. 306). If, however, an order is challenged on certiorari as being without jurisdiction, an appeal lies to the Court of Appeal.

<sup>2</sup> Lord Justice Cherry points out that, if the justices agree to state a case from a decision granting an order under the ejectment jurisdiction, their proper course is to make an order to put the landlord or owner into possession, but not to issue a warrant; for if they issue a warrant at once, as it only remains in force fourteen days in ordinary cases, and two months in cases under the seventh section of the Land Act, 1887, it will probably be out of date before the case stated is disposed of (Irish Land Law Acts, 3rd ed., p. 144). As to the power of justices to issue the warrant after the decision in favour of the plaintiff of the High Court, or if the case stated is not proceeded with by the appellant, see CASE STATED, p. 244.

Jurisdiction. JUSTICES of the peace have certain jurisdiction as to rating and valuation :—(1) appeals at quarter sessions on questions of valuation ; (2) appeals at quarter sessions as to rating ; (3) recovery of poor rate at petty sessions.

The various Valuation Acts referred to in this chapter are those Acts, as amended by the Adaptation of Enactments Order of 30th January, 1899, made pursuant to the Local Government (Ir.) Act, 1898.

Tenements subject to annual revision. An annual revision of valuation is made by the commissioner of valuation. This revision comprises two classes of tenements—(a) tenements the limits whereof have been altered ; (b) tenements the annual value of which is liable to frequent alteration, including buildings (Valuation (Ireland) Act, 1854, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 8, s. 4).

It is now definitely settled that the valuation of any building, though there has been no alteration in its area or otherwise, may be annually revised (McCusker v. Commissioner of Valuation, (1902) 36 I.L.T.R. 176). As regards land, there is power to revise the valuation of any separate unit of land within each denomination, the valuation to depend on the price of produce ; but as the total valuation of the townland or other denomination cannot be varied, no revision of valuation takes place unless where the area of the tenement has been altered (15 & 16 Vict. c. 63, s. 11 ; 17 & 18 Vict. c. 8, s. 5).<sup>1</sup>

Annual revision of valuation. The poor rate collector in each county and urban district is obliged, under a penalty of £5, to make out and send each year before the 15th June, to the secretary of the county council, or clerk of the urban district council, as the case may be, a list of all the tenements or hereditaments within his district, which require revision “for any of the reasons aforesaid, or in respect of any property the annual value of which is liable to frequent alteration as aforesaid” (17 & 18 Vict. c. 8, s. 4).<sup>2</sup> Furthermore, any ratepayer within any part of the county (including any urban county district in the county) may send to the same officer, on or before the said date, a list of

<sup>2</sup> This section is obscure. In a preceding portion it speaks of “providing for the necessary revision of the valuation of the rateable tenements and hereditaments, the limits whereof have been altered, and also of rateable tenements or hereditaments the annual tenements which in the opinion of such ratepayer may require revision (17 & 18 Vict. c. 8, s. 4).

Annual revision of valuation.

These lists are left open for public inspection at the office of the secretary of the county council or clerk of the urban district council for a period of ten days, during which extracts may be made. On or before the 27th June, such secretary or clerk shall make out a full and complete list of all tenements and property mentioned in such lists, and transmit same to the commissioner of valuation, with the opinion of his council whether such revision is necessary on account of such changes or alterations (ib.). It has been held that, where the secretary of a county council had omitted to lay the lists before the council and take the opinion of his council thereon, and had sent forward the lists to the commissioner without such opinion, the commissioner had jurisdiction to revise the valuation (McCusker v. Commissioner of Valuation, (1902) 36 I.L.T.R. 176). As regards tenements not included in the list sent forward, if, before the revision is actually begun, the secretary of the county council or the clerk of the urban district council gives notice to the commissioner of any tenements or hereditaments the valuation of which requires revision, the commissioner may proceed with the revision of the valuation of these tenements or hereditaments as if they were included in the original list<sup>1</sup> (Order of 30th January, 1899, art. 37). The commissioner of valuation has no power, proprio motu, to make a valuation of any property other than that included in the list sent to him (Switzer v. Commissioner of Valuation, (1902) 2 I.R. 275, 35 I.L.T.R. 235, 2 N.I.J.R. 15); but the right to take advantage of such a point may be lost by the conduct of the party, e.g., by an appeal to quarter sessions founded upon a notice in which the point as to jurisdiction is not taken (see R. (Kildare County Council) v. Commissioner of Valuation, (1901) 2 I.R. 215).

Transmitting
commissioner.

What tenements commissioner may revise.

The procedure in connection with the ordinary annual revision is as follows:—the commissioner, working on the materials (the lists), supplied to him as aforesaid, commences the revaluation in July, and completes it before the 1st March. Before the latter date, he transmits to the secretary of the county council and clerk of the urban district council a copy<sup>2</sup> of the revised list; he also sends to the county council secretary for use in the several rural districts a statement for each rural district of any changes made (17 & 18 Vict. c. 8, s. 5, Order 30th January, 1899, art. 37). For the information of the public, notices are published by the secretary of the county council, the clerks of the urban district councils, and the clerks of the rural district councils, of the receipt of the lists, and that the lists lie at the office of said value of which is liable to frequent alteration, such as fisheries, railways, canals, tolls of roads, bridges, mines, gas and water-works, and buildings." The practice, which has been judicially approved of (see judgment of Fitzgibbon, L.J., in Switzer v. Commissioner of Valuation, (1902) 2 I.R. 275, at p. 307), is not to include in this list all buildings or other variable tenements, but only such as, in the opinion of the poor rate collector, may require revision.

officials for inspection. These lists are posted on the doors of the Episcopalian church, Roman Catholic chapel, and Presbyterian meeting house in each district. The lists are open for inspection for twenty-one days, and extracts may be taken (15 & 16 Vict. c. 63, s. 18). Within twenty-eight days after the receipt of the revised valuation lists by the secretary of the county council or the clerk of the urban district council, any person aggrieved by reason of the valuation of any tenement contained in such lists<sup>1</sup> may send by post or deliver to the secretary of the county council or clerk of the urban district council in which the tenement is situate, a notice in writing signed by him or his known agent, setting forth the grounds of such grievance; and all such notices shall forthwith be forwarded to the commissioner of valuation (15 & 16 Vict. c. 63, s. 19).

The commissioner of valuation then reconsiders the cases in which such notice has been given, and may alter or amend the original valuation (15 & 16 Vict. c. 63, s. 20), and returns the list of cases, unaltered or altered as the case may be, to the secretary of the county council and the urban district clerk (s. 21) by whom the same shall be published, within three days from receipt, in the same manner as the revised lists are published (ib; Order, 30th January, 1899, art. 37). At any time within twenty-one days after the receipt of such last-mentioned lists by the county council secretary, or the urban district clerk, any person (or county or urban district council in case of an appeal by them)<sup>2</sup> feeling aggrieved by the valuation may serve notice of appeal to the next quarter sessions for the division of the county, or county of borough<sup>3</sup> in which the tenement is situate. Such notice shall be in writing and signed by the appellant or his known agent, and shall state the grounds of the appeal; but in case the next quarter sessions shall commence within forty days from the receipt of such last mentioned lists, the appeal shall be to the second next quarter sessions. The notice of appeal is to be sent to the secretary of the county council or the clerk of the urban district council within the twenty-one days specified, and to be by him forwarded to the commissioner of valuation, who shall be the respondent (15 & 16 Vict. c. 63, s. 22). In any appeal to quarter sessions by the county council or urban district council, the occupier of the hereditament and the commissioner of valuation shall be the respondents (27 & 28 Vict. c. 52, s. 2). If the cause of appeal shall be such as to require alteration to be made in the valuation of any tenement for which any other person or persons is or are liable to be rated, the appellant shall give like notice to such other person or persons, who shall, if he or they so desire, be heard upon such appeal (15 & 16 Vict. c. 63, s. 22). Any ratepayer appealing must, within five days after giving notice of appeal, enter into a recognizance of £5 before a justice of the peace with sufficient sureties conditioned to try the appeal and to abide the order of the court (15 & 16 Vict. c. 63, s. 22). Where such recognizance appears to the court of quarter sessions to have been insufficiently entered into, or to be otherwise defective or invalid, such court may permit the substitution of a new and sufficient recognizance, or new and sufficient recognizances, to be entered into before such court in the place of such insufficient, invalid, or defective recognizance, allowing such time, and making such order, as to payment of costs to the respondent or respondents as to such court seems just and reasonable (Civil Bill Courts (Ir.) Act, 1864, 27 & 28 Vict. c. 99, s. 50). It is not necessary for a council appealing to quarter sessions against a revised valuation to enter into any recognizance (27 & 28 Vict. c. 52, s. 4). The recognizance shall be forwarded by the justice or clerk of petty sessions to the clerk of the peace. The decision of the quarter sessions as to a question of value shall be final (s. 23). On a question of law the appellant or respondent may require the chairman to state a case for the opinion of the High Court (23 & 24 Vict. c. 4, s. 10). As to appeal to Court of Appeal, see p. 200.

Costs.

The following is a summary of the procedure, under the enactments above set forth, to be adopted by a person who wishes to have the valuation of premises revised:—

Procedure to have valuation revised, and
appeal.

(1) Before the 15th June, serve notice in the form No. 1, infra, on the secretary of the county council, or clerk of the urban district council, as the case may be.

(2) The revised lists will be completed before the 1st March, and published on that date. Within twenty-eight days from the time of their receipt, serve notice No. 2 on the secretary of the county council or clerk of the urban district council.

(3) The commissioner will then again have the matter gone into, and the final lists will be sent by him to the secretary or clerk, and published within three days. Serve notice No. 3 on the secretary of the county council, or clerk of the urban district council as the case may be.

(4) Appellant must enter into a recognizance of £5 (see form, infra), with sufficient sureties conditioned to try the appeal and to pay such costs as may be awarded. Within three days from the date of the recognizance the magistrate before whom such recognizance shall have been entered into, or the clerk of the petty sessions, shall forward the recognizance to the clerk of the peace; and

(5) The appeal will come on at the next quarter sessions held after the expiration of forty days from the receipt of the last mentioned list.

General revaluation of borough.

A general revaluation of premises within a county borough may be made on the application of the borough council, and, upon such general revaluation, the land shall be valued in the same manner as buildings (Local Government (Ireland) Act, (1898) s. 65). Where under section 65 (1) of the Local Government (Ir.) Act, 1898, application was made for a general revaluation of rateable hereditaments, and the municipal council struck the municipal rate for the year upon the list supplied to them by the commissioner of valuation in response to this application, and no separate list on the basis of an annual revision was furnished:—Held, that art. 37 (n) of the Adaptation of Irish Enactments Order applies only to an annual revision, and does not contemplate or include general revaluations or revisions, and accordingly that the rate in question, having been struck upon a list that was irregular and illegal, should be quashed (R. (M'Curker) v. Belfast Corporation, (1901) 35 I.L.T.R. 198, 1 N.I.J.R. 241). On an application for a writ of mandamus directed to the commissioner of valuation to proceed with the revaluation of the city of Dublin as directed by the Dublin Corporation Act, 1900, s. 60:—Held, that the 60th section was mandatory, and cast upon the commissioner of valuation a duty to proceed within a reasonable time to carry out the revaluation; that there had been a refusal on his part to perform the statutory duty imposed on him, as he had not taken steps to make the necessary arrangements within a reasonable time; and that, though the commissioner was appointed by the treasury, he was for this purpose an independent officer against whom a writ of mandamus could be granted (R. (Bradshaw) v. Commissioner of Valuation, (1906) 40 I.L.T.R. 174).

General re-valuation of borough.

Within three months after the hearing and decision by any court of general or quarter sessions of any appeal against any valuation or exemption, the commissioner of valuation, or any other party to such appeal, if dissatisfied with the decision of such court, may by notice in writing, signed by the said commissioner, or by such other party, or by the attorney of such commissioner or other party, require the chairman of such court of general or quarter sessions to state and sign a case, setting forth the facts and grounds of such decision for the opinion thereon of one of the superior courts of law at Dublin, and such chairman shall state such case in writing, and sign the same, and transmit it to the commissioner of valuation within twenty-one days after the receipt of such notice, and such commissioner shall transmit the same to one of the superior courts of law at Dublin, first giving notice in writing of such appeal, with a copy of the case so stated and signed, to the other party to the proceedings in respect of which the decision was given (23 & 24 Vict. c. 4, s. 10). The superior court to which a case is transmitted under the Act shall hear and determine the question or questions of law arising thereon, and shall thereupon reverse, affirm, or amend the decision in respect of which the case has been stated, or remit the matter to the court of general or quarter sessions with the decision of such superior court thereon, or may make such other order in relation to the matter, and to the costs thereof, as to such superior court may seem meet; and such superior court may send back the case for amendment, and thereupon the same shall be amended by such chairman accordingly, and judgment shall be delivered after it shall have been so amended: provided always that the decision of the court of general or quarter sessions shall be binding and conclusive on all parties,<sup>1</sup> and shall be acted on, notwithstanding the pendency of any such case, until such decision shall have been reversed or altered by the decision of such superior court (s. 11).

Case stated.

Case stated.

Apparently, even if the appeal is by the ratepayer, the commissioner has carriage of the case stated, and serves notice of appeal and copy case stated on the opposite party (23 & 24 Vict. c. 4, s. 10).

Now by 60 & 61 Vict. c. 17, an appeal lies to the Court of Appeal from the decision on a case stated under the Act (see, for instances, Commissioner of Valuation v. Sligo Harbour Commissioners, (1899) 2 I.R. 214; and Switzer v. Commissioner of Valuation, (1902) 2 I.R. 275, 35 I.L.T.R. 235, 2 N.I.J.R. 15).

Net annual value.

The valuation in regard to houses and buildings<sup>1</sup> shall be made upon an estimate of the net annual value thereof, that is to say, the rent for which, one year with another, the same might in their actual state be reasonably expected to let from year to year, the probable average annual cost of repairs, insurance, and other expenses (if any) necessary to maintain the hereditaments in their actual state, and all rates, taxes, and public charges, if any (except tithe-rent charge), being paid by the tenant (Valuation Act, 1852, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 63, s. 11; see also s. 20 as to duty of commissioner to have regard to value of adjoining houses).<sup>2</sup>

In case of a general valuation of a county borough, on the application of the borough council, the land within the borough shall be valued in the same way as buildings are valued under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 63, s. 11 (Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898, s. 65).

In estimating the annual value of premises to which a licence for the sale of intoxicating liquors is attached, the premises must be valued as licensed premises (Armstrong v. Commissioner of Valuation, (1905) 2 I. R. 448).

The cost of construction of the building may afford a rough test of the valuation in some cases, e.g., where the place is occupied by the owner himself (R. v. London School Board, (1885) 55 L.J.M.C. 33); but in most cases, though it is admissible in evidence, it is not the sole test, nor even a good test (Fletcher v. Commissioner of Valuation, (1907) 2 I.R. 112). Where several sets of premises, held under different takes, are thrown together, they must, nevertheless, be separately valued (Switzer v. Commissioner of Valuation, (1902) 2 I.R. 275, 35 I.L.T.R. 235, 2 N.I.J.R. 15; see also Wheeler & McCutcheon v. Commissioner of Valuation, (1902) 2 N.I.J.R. 17). "In my opinion, the unit of valuation of premises in the occupation of tenants is such hereditaments, of the descriptions in s. 12 of the Act of 1852, as are in the occupation of the same occupier, holding from the same immediate lessor, under the same lease or contract of tenancy. In this definition the expressions "occupier" and "immediate lessor" may include a plurality of persons being joint occupiers, or joint immediate lessors, who between them may constitute one occupier or one immediate lessor. But, if premises (1) are in the occupation of several distinct occupiers; or, (2) although in the occupation of the same persons, are held under separate immediate lessors; or, (3) although in the occupation of the same person, and held under the same immediate lessor, are so held under several distinct leases or contracts of tenancy, each of those premises is a separate rateable hereditament, and more than one of them cannot be included in any one single valuation. In other words, in my opinion, the characteristic of a tenement to be separately valued is a tenement, all of which is in the occupation of the same occupier, under the same immediate lessor, under one contract of tenancy" (per Palles, C.B., in Switzer v. Commissioner of Valuation, supra, at p. 281).

<sup>2</sup> In England, by the Union Assessment Committee Act, 1862, s. 15, net annual value is defined as the rent at which the hereditaments might reasonably be expected to let from year to year, free of all usual tenant's rates and taxes, and tithe commutation rent charges (if any), and deducting therefrom the probable average annual cost of the repairs, insurance and other expenses (if any), necessary to maintain them in a state to command such rent.

Net annual value.

The foregoing remarks deal with the question of valuation, that is, the assessment of the value of the rateable property. The statute also provides a rating appeal, that is an appeal in respect of the liability of a person to be rated, or the principle of his liability.

Rating appeal.

If any person is aggrieved by any rate made under the Poor Relief (Ireland) Act, 1838, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 56, or shall have any material objection to any person or persons being put in or left out of such rate, or to the sum charged on any person therein, it shall be lawful for such person to appeal to the quarter sessions for the county in which the rate shall have been made, within four calendar months next after the cause of complaint shall have arisen, or, if such sessions shall be held before the expiration of one calendar month next after such cause of complaint, then such appeal shall be made to the next following sessions (1 & 2 Vict. c. 56, s. 106; see also 2 & 3 Vict. c. 1, s. 9). The court of quarter sessions are empowered to hear and finally determine the appeal, to order the name of a person to be inserted or struck out, or the sum at which any person is rated to be altered, or to quash the entire rate (1 & 2 Vict. c. 56, s. 107). This section does not apply to any poor rate assessed upon any property in conformity with the valuation thereof made pursuant to 15 & 16 Vict. c. 63, s. 28. If any person shall, previous to the appeal, have paid any sum with which he ought not to have been charged, the quarter sessions shall order every such sum to be repaid, together with all reasonable costs, charges, and expenses (1 & 2 Vict. c. 56, s. 108). Fourteen days' notice in writing of the intention to appeal, and of the matter or cause thereof, shall be given to the secretary of the county council or clerk of the urban district council, or the respondent or respondents; and the quarter sessions shall not examine or inquire into any other cause or ground of appeal than such as is stated in the notice of appeal; and the appellant shall also give notice of the appeal to any person interested or concerned in the appeal who shall have the right to be heard (s. 109). The known agent of the appellant, appointed under his hand, may sign the notice and enter into the recognizances (1 & 2 Vict. c. 56, s. 84; 12 & 13 Vict. c. 104, s. 22). Costs may be awarded against either party (1 & 2 Vict. c. 56, s. 112). If the rateable hereditament is situate wholly within any county at large, or wholly within any county of a borough<sup>1</sup> or town for which a quarter sessions shall be held, the appeal shall be to the sessions of the county or county of the borough within which such hereditament shall be situated; and if the hereditament shall be situate or arise partly within a county at large and partly within a county of a city or town, then to the sessions of such county at large or such Rating appeal. county of a city or town to which the appellant shall choose to appeal (6 & 7 Vict. c. 92, s. 8). The appellant shall, within five days from the giving of the notice of appeal, enter into a recognizance before a justice of the peace, with sufficient sureties conditioned to try the appeal and to abide the order of and to pay such costs as shall be awarded on the appeal (12 & 13 Vict. c. 104, s. 23). The chairman or Recorder, if he shall so think fit, may correct or amend any variance, clerical error, or irregularity not affecting the substantial merits of the question to be tried, and which may be found in the notices, recognizances, processes, decrees, or other forms or instruments of a like kind (12 & 13 Vict. c. 104, s. 29).

Liability for poor rate.

The occupier is primarily liable to the poor rate, except (1) where under section 4 of the Poor Relief (Ireland) Act, 1843, the rate is made on the landlord as the immediate lessor of a house let in separate apartments or lodgings, and (2) except where made in respect of a half rent under section 63 of the Poor Relief (Ireland) Act, 1838, and the enactments amending the same<sup>1</sup> (Local Government (Ir.) Act, 1898, s. 52 (1)).

In case the person primarily liable to pay the rate fails to do so, then on his default the rate shall be paid by the subsequent occupier (1 & 2 Vict. c. 56, s. 71). Where the rate is made on the immediate lessor, and is not paid by him within thirty-one days of making thereof, such rate may be recovered from the occupier or occupiers of the lodgings or apartments, who may deduct same from their rent (6 & 7 Vict. c. 92, s. 4). No proceedings can be commenced against any persons not primarily liable unless within the two years next after the making and publishing of the rate<sup>2</sup> (12 & 13 Vict. c. 104, s. 19). In any given case the rating authority, that is, the county or urban district council, may determine that the persons primarily liable, and the subsequent owner or occupier shall be liable respectively only for the portion of the rate proportionate to the period during which each such person was owner or occupier of the property (53 & 54 Vict. c. 30, s. 2, Local Government Act, 1898, s. 62).

Unoccupied buildings are exempt from rates if unoccupied during the whole of the period for which the rate is made, but if occupied during any part of such period the occupier or immediate lessor shall be liable for the portion of the rate proportionate to the time of occupation (25 & 26 Vict. c. 83, s. 12).<sup>3</sup> The poor rate is now levied in the city of Dublin in like manner as in the rest of Ireland, and any enactments in respect of making, levying, collecting, and recovering the poor rate shall apply accordingly (Local Government Act, 1898, s. 66 (1)); and accordingly a subsequent occupier is liable in Dublin as elsewhere (Farrell v. Ryan, (1904) 2 I.R. 596, 4 N.I.J.R. 193).

A person, who is not an occupier, is at liberty to deny his liability, even though his name appears in the rate books and he has not appealed from the assessment (see Lemon v. McIntyre, (1877) I.R. 11 C.L. 479); and, semble, the decision of the King's Bench Division, upon a case stated for their opinion upon a question of valuation or exemption, "though final and conclusive on all parties as to amount," still leaves it open to a person assessed in pursuance thereof to question his liability when sued for rates (ib.).

By the Poor Relief (Ireland) Act, 1838, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 56, s. 73, collectors of county cess became collectors of poor rate, and were authorized to collect, on warrant from the guardians, the poor rate in the same way as county cess. County cess was recoverable by summary proceedings before a justice of the peace, under section 152 of the Grand Jury Act, 1836, 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 116. By the last named statute a collector may leave at the house of the party chargeable a notice, bearing the date of service, and subscribed with the name and abode of the collector, demanding payment within six days, and on failure of payment may prefer a complaint to a justice of the peace for the county in which the party may reside; and such justice may order the payment of the sum found due with such sum for costs<sup>1</sup> as to the justices shall seem meet, and in default may issue a distress warrant, which may be made available in another county. This section disappears as a substantive enactment in consequence of its repeal by the Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898 (s. 110, 6th schedule); but its procedure is incorporated in the 73rd section of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 56, and may be still followed, the complaint being made in the name of the collector (County Council of Clare v. M'Inerney, (1902) 2 I.R. 536, 35 I.L.T.R. 158, 1 N.I.J.R. 230). The exemption of instruments of husbandry from a distress for rent does not extend to an execution under a justice's warrant (Swan v. Sloan, (1894) 29 I.L.T.R. 109, Co. Court). The only statute which limits the right of distress under a distress warrant is 11 & 12 Vict. c. 28, s. 9, which protects wearing apparel and bedding and tools and implements of trade not exceeding £5 in value, from seizure under any execution or order of any court.<sup>2</sup>

Proceedings
for recovery of poor rate, 1 & 2
Vict. c. 56.

A justice of the peace may act as such in matters relating to the poor law and local rates, notwithstanding that he is rated for or chargeable with rates affected by such matter (6 & 7 Vict. c. 8, s. 1); but, nevertheless, a justice was held disqualified by bias where the decision of a question by the court of which he was a member ruled a rating appeal of his own to be heard at the same quarter sessions (R. v. Great Yarmouth JJ., (1882) 8 Q.B.D. 525). Where any poor rate has been made, allowed, and published, and a warrant of distress issued against any person named and rated, no action shall be brought against the justice or justices issuing such warrant by reason of any irregularity or defect in the rate or non-liability of the person rated (12 & 13 Vict. c. 16, s. 4).

The warrant of execution may be directed to the constabulary (R. (Moore) v. Dublin JJ., (1910) 2 I.R. 681, noted fully p. 75, ante).

<sup>1</sup> The costs of distress, where the sum due does not exceed £20, are regulated by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 111, ss. 15 & 18, and schedule B, and if greater expenses are exacted, the party aggrieved may issue a summons before the justices at petty sessions, and may recover from the defendant treble the amount of the moneys unlawfully paid (ib. s. 16).

<sup>2</sup> A rate collector may, without any justice's order or warrant, distrain by virtue of his own collecting warrant; but such distraint is limited to goods on the premises.

Towns Improvement
Act.

Under s. 60 of the Towns Improvement Act (Ir.) 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 103) provision is made for an annual assessment for rating purposes under that Act, and by s. 63<sup>1</sup> it is provided that if any person assessed refuses or neglects to pay the rate for ten days after demand, it shall be lawful for the collector to levy the same by distress and sale of goods and chattels and to satisfy the rate with costs of distraining not exceeding 12*d.* in the £1, or in the alternative, the collector may serve a notice bearing the date of service, and his name and abode requiring the payment of the rate within ten days, and on default may prefer a complaint to any justice of the peace having jurisdiction in such town. The justice shall summon the party complained against to appear before him or any other justice at the petty sessions, and at the time specified in the summons, examine into the matter on oath, and shall direct the payment of such sum as is found due, together with a sum certain for costs; in default of appearance, or on refusal or neglect to pay the sum or sums so directed to be paid, any justice of the peace having jurisdiction in the town may issue a warrant for levying the sum or sums so due by distress or sale, the overplus on such sale to be rendered to the party complained against less the necessary charges and expenses of distraining as directed by the justice. The collector is bound to keep the warrants of such seizures or sales, and to enter in a book kept for that purpose the names of the parties proceeded against, the assessment due, the expense of proceedings, and the true proceeds of sale, and the book is to be open for inspection by parties interested for three months after such sale. At any time within three months after the sale any party aggrieved may by petition subscribed by the complainant complain to any such justices as above mentioned, of anything done unjustly or oppressively in regard of such seizure or sale, on which petition the decision of the justices is final. If the goods or other effects seized or sold under such warrant are bona fide the property, or in the lawful possession, of the person actually liable to the payment of the assessment under the Act, any mistake, informality, or misnomer shall not enable a person to sue or take any action or proceeding against the commissioners, collectors, officers, or other persons employed in executing any warrant in reference to any assessment under the Act. The "ten days" which must elapse between demand and seizure or summons are computed inclusive of the first and exclusive of the last, and also exclusive of Sunday, Christmas Day, or Good Friday where any of these days occur in the period (Towns Improvement Act (Ir.), 1854, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 103, s. 1). Under the similar provisions of the repealed s. 152 of the Grand Jury Act (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 116) it was held that growing crops were not distrainable for grand jury cess (M Namara v. Apjohn, (1850) 13 I.L.R. 394); and, where a Court receiver was in occupation managing the lands, it was held that cattle grazing on the lands could not be seized without leave of the court appointing the receiver (Harvey v. Wallis, (1851) 3 Ir. Jur. 409). Where the rate before the justice is good on its face, the justice can only inquire whether it has been paid, and if not he should make an order for payment, his functions being merely ministerial (Buckley v.

Finucane, (1897) 31 I.L.T.R. 124). In order to test the validity of the rate, an appeal to quarter sessions should be made under s. 29 of the Local Government Act, 1871, 34 & 35 Vict. c. 109).<sup>1</sup> Where distress is under a warrant in the nature of an execution by a particular statute, instruments of husbandry are not exempt (Swan v. Sloan, (1895) 29 I.L.T.R. 109 (Co. Ct.).

<sup>1</sup> Note s. 30 as to applicability of s. 29 in towns having a special Act.

Distinction between ouster of jurisdiction at common law and by statute.

APART altogether from statute, the rule at common law is that the jurisdiction of justices is ousted by a bona fide question of title raised before them. Several statutes also contain enactments to the like effect. It is very important, in considering whether the jurisdiction is ousted, to note whether the case is one governed by the common law doctrine, hereinafter stated, or whether the construction of the particular statute is the governing principle. For the law is, that where there is an express statutory provision, such provision will override the common law rule (White v. Frost, (1872) L.R. 7 Q.B. 353, R. (White) v. Wicklow JJ., (1900) 1 N.I.J.R. 6); and confusion frequently arises by endeavouring to apply the common law rule to statutory offences, to which, in reality, it has no application.

Another source of confusion on the subject arises from a failure to remember that, in cases in which mens rea, or malice, is an ingredient in the offence charged, (a) the presence or absence of such mens rea is the question the justices have to try; (b) if such mens rea is present, the duty of the justices<sup>1</sup> is to convict, and (c) if such mens rea is absent, the jurisdiction is not ousted, but such absence entitles the defendant to an acquittal. The rule as to mens rea, is discussed infra, p. 208; and the remarks there made are applicable to all cases where mens rea, whether under the common law or by statute, is necessary to constitute the offence.

Common law rule.

The rule that a bona fide question of title ousts the jurisdiction of justices "does not arise from any legislative enactment, but is an old legal maxim applicable to summary trials in general, which has been so generally applied for ages that it is assumed to be intended to be applied by every Act relating to such matters, though not specifically mentioned, unless a contrary intention is clearly indicated" (Palles, C.B., in Johnston v. Meldon, (1891) 30 L.R.I. 15, at p. 27, citing R. v. Cridland, (1857) 7 E. & B. 853; R. v. Stimpson, (1863) 4 B. & S. 301). The rule was thus laid down by Blackburn, J., in R. v. Stimpson, supra (at p. 309):—"The general rule of law applicable to justices exercising summary jurisdiction is that they are not to convict where a real question as to the right of property is raised between the parties; then their jurisdiction ceases, and the question of right must be settled by a higher tribunal; for the justices would be settling a question of title, conclusively and without remedy, if their decision happened to be wrong." In order, however, to oust the jurisdiction, the right claimed must be one that is possible in law (Leatt v. Vine, (1861) 30 L.J. (M.C.) 207; Cornwell v. Sanders, (1862) 3 B. & S. 206, 32 L.J. (M.C.) 6; R. v. Westmeath JJ., (1866) 11 Ir. Jur., (N.S.) 405, 15 W.R. 59; Simpson v. Wells, (1872) L.R. 7 Q.B. 214; Hargreaves v. Diddams, (1875) L.R. 10 Q.B. 582; Mussett v. Burch, (1876) 35 L.T. 486; Hudson v. McRae, (1863) 4 B. & S. 585; Watkins v. Major, (1875) L.R. 10 C.P. 662). And even if the claim is possible in law, yet, if it is vague and improbable, and not substantially supported by evidence, the jurisdiction is not ousted (l. c.; see also Reece v. Miller, (1882) 8 Q.B.D. 626). There must be "some colour or show of reason for the claim" (per Cockburn, C.J., in Cornwell v. Sanders, (1862) 3 B. & S. 206, at p. 212). The justices should go sufficiently into the case to satisfy themselves that there is a question of title, and if so satisfied then proceed no further (R. (Punch) v. Cork JJ., (1898) 32 I.L.T.R. 179).

(a) Common law rule.

The title relied on by the defendant as justifying his action must be a right in himself, and not a right in a third party (Cornwell v. Sanders, (1862) 3 B. & S. 206), that is, it is submitted, if complainant proves possession or a prima facie right.

As already pointed out (supra), a statutory provision, purporting to take away jurisdiction from justices in case a question of title is raised before them, overrides the common law doctrine. The following are the principal of such statutory provisions:—

Statutory provisions.

A. Trespass.—"Nothing herein contained shall extend to any case where the party trespassing acted under a fair and reasonable supposition that he had a right to go into or upon any such place" (Summary Jurisdiction (Ir.) Act, 1851, s. 8.) The test in each case will be: did the defendant act under a fair and reasonable supposition that he had a right to go into or upon such place? (see White v. Feast, (1872) L.R. 7 Q.B. 353; R. (Ryan) v. Wicklow JJ., (1900) 1 N.I.J.R. 6). As to the application of this test, see remarks, infra, p. 209, on ss. 52 and 53 of the Malicious Damage Act, 1861; see also examples infra.

Trespass.

B. Assault.—"Nothing shall authorize any justice to hear and determine any case of assault and battery in which any question shall arise as to the title to any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any interest therein or accruing therefrom" (Offences against the Person Act, 1861, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 46.) The question in each case, on the principle of White v. Feast (supra), will be: did a question as to the title arise in the assault? (see examples, including R. v. Pearson, infra).

Assault.

C. Injuries to Property.—With regard to offences of this character, it is important to note under what section the prosecution is brought.

Injuries to property.

Statutory
provisions.

Sections 1 to 51, inclusive,<sup>1</sup> of the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), deal with injuries to certain specified classes of property; and the words of the sections<sup>2</sup> are, "whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously." These sections contain no special provisions as to a question of title. Section 52 deals with damage to property in any case not provided for in the previous sections, and the words of the section, are "wilfully or maliciously," and the section contains the following provision:—"Provided that nothing herein contained shall extend to any case where the party acted under a fair and reasonable supposition that he had a right to do the act complained of." Section 53 provides for injuries to trees, &c., for which no punishment is thereinbefore provided, and the provisions of s. 52 are applicable.

Malicious Damage Act,
1861, ss. 1-51.

It will be noted that under ss. 1-51, malice, or mens rea, is of the essence of the offence. In any case brought under any of these sections dealing with a summary offence<sup>3</sup> the test as to whether an offence has been committed is the same as that laid down in respect of an indictable offence under s. 51 by Lord Russell of Killowen, L.C.J., in R. v. Clemens, (1898) 1 Q.B. 556, at p. 559: "It seems to me that the proper direction to give to a jury in such a case is that they should ask themselves this question: Did the defendants do what they did in the exercise of a supposed right?" adding, "that if, on the facts before them, the jury come to the conclusion that the defendants did more damage than they could reasonably suppose to be necessary for the assertion or protection of that right, then the jury might probably and ought to find the defendants guilty of malicious damage under s. 51."

In R. v. Clemens, a hotel company proceeded to build upon land leased to the company, but which the defendants claimed as a common. The defendants entered upon the land, pulled therefrom a wooden building, used as an office, and smashed same up and threw the pieces into the sea. On a charge under s. 51 the jury found the defendants guilty, and explained their verdict by saying that they found that the defendants acted in the assertion of a right in the first place, but that, by destroying the wooden building, they did more than was necessary to be done in asserting that right. The conviction was sustained. To give another example: suppose a defendant, charged under s. 25 with breaking a fence, claimed a right to break the fence to assert a right of way, such claim could in no way be held to warrant him in breaking the fence at places other than that where he claimed the right; and no justice could reasonably hold him to have acted in his exercise of his supposed right in so doing (see Heaven v. Crutchley, infra, p. 214). But the justices are not warranted in convicting in cases under these sections merely because the title or right claimed is ill-founded, or even absurd (see Watkins v. Major, (1875) L.R. 10 C.P. 662, at p. 666). if they believe (1) that defendant believed in the right, and (2) that defendant did the act complained of in assertion of the right. What is the gist of the offence is the conscious wrongdoing of the defendant.<sup>4</sup>

malice in proceedings under these sections. A gamekeeper, acting bona fide in the protection of his master's property, and in the belief that no other means were adequate to protect it, shot a dog. Held, that he was not guilty of the offence, under s. 41, of wilfully and maliciously killing the dog (Miles v. Hutchings, (1903) 2 K.B. 714).

Statutory provisions.
Malicious Damage Act,
1861, ss. 1-51.

The occupier of land sown with seed shot domestic fowls that were trespassing; he had previously warned the owner of the fowls that unless they were kept off his land he would shoot them. Held, that he could not be convicted of an offence under section 41 (Smith v. Williams, (1892) 56 J.P. 840; 9 T.L.R. 9). Apparently the laying of poison on one's own land for the purpose of killing a trespassing dog, in the belief that same is justified, is not an offence against section 41 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 17, enacting penalties on who-soever shall unlawfully and maliciously kill any dog<sup>1</sup> (Daniel v. Jones, (1877) 2 C.P.D. 351).

From what has been stated, it will be seen that the above cases, which are decisions on the merits in respect of offences under ss. 1-51 of the Malicious Damage Act, 1861, and not on the question of jurisdiction, have little, if any, bearing on the question of ouster of jurisdiction by a claim of title, either at common law, or under the statutory provisions above mentioned.

In cases brought under ss. 52 and 53, the test is, did the party act under a fair and reasonable supposition that he had a right to do the act complained of? (White v. Feast, (1872) L.R. 7 Q.B. 353). If he did, the jurisdiction of the justices is ousted. It should be noted that, in respect of these offences, two questions arise:—(a) did the defendant act under the supposition that he had a right to do the act? and (b) was that supposition a fair and reasonable supposition, having regard to all the circumstances? There are, therefore, two distinctions between cases under ss. 52 and 53, and cases under ss. 1 to 51 of the Act. In cases under ss. 1 to 51, a bona fide belief, however unfounded, in the right to do the thing complained of affords a defence, not by way of plea to the jurisdiction, but by way of answer on the merits. In cases under ss. 52 and 53, the belief must not only be bona fide, but must be fair and reasonable; and if these things co-exist, they establish a plea to the jurisdiction. Whether such fair and reasonable supposition under ss. 52 and 53 exists is, in all cases, within reasonable limits, a question of fact for the justices (R. v. Dodson, (1839) 9 A. & E. 704; Charter v. Greame, (1849) 13 Q.B. 216); and the High Court will not interfere where there is evidence to support a finding by justices that the defendant charged under these sections did not (White v. Feast, (1872) L.R. 7 Q.B. 353; R. (White) v. Wicklow JJ., (1900) 1 N.I.J.R. 6), or did (R. (Dowd) v. Cavan JJ., (1900) 6 I.W.L.R. 33), act under such fair and reasonable supposition.

Malicious Damage Act,
& 53.

But the High Court have interfered in cases where the finding of the justices as to the supposition of right was so obviously wrong that it was apparent the justices could not have properly understood the question which they had to consider. Thus, where the justices found that the defendant, a county surveyor acting in the discharge of his duty, had, in respect of damage that he was summoned for under s. 52, acted bona fide, but that he did not act under a fair and reasonable supposition that he had a right to do the act complained of, it was held that the justices were wrong; and, semble, they should upon the facts stated have inferred and found a fair and reasonable supposition within the statute (Denny v. Thwaites, (1876) 2 Ex. D. 21). In the following case also the right alleged was so palpably unsustainable that the Court held that jurisdiction was not taken away under the section. The conservators of M. common and certain lords of manors authorized and licensed a company to form and use golf links on the common. That company transferred all its rights to trustees for the conservators. The appellants, by permission of the M. parish council, who were the owners of the lamp-posts on certain highways crossing M. common, affixed to certain of these lamp-posts, boards on which the following notice was printed:—"Croydon Rural District Council.—Persons are requested to refrain from playing golf on or across the public highway." A golf club, which had obtained a licence from the conservators of M. common to play golf thereon before such notices were affixed, contended that these notice-boards constituted a slander upon their title to play golf over the common and roads, and asked the appellants to remove them. The appellants did not remove the notice-boards, and the respondents, acting on the golf club's instructions, removed the notice-boards. At the hearing of an information against the respondents for wilfully and maliciously damaging the notice-boards, under section 52 of the Malicious Damage Act, 1861, the respondents contended that they had acted in the exercise of a bona fide claim of right, and under a fair and reasonable supposition that they had a right to do the acts complained of, and that, therefore, the jurisdiction of the justices was ousted. Held, that the right claimed by the respondents was wholly unsustainable, because (1) the club had no right (as agents of the trustees of the conservators) to interfere with the lamp-posts, which did not belong to the trustees, but to the parish council, and (2) the alternative right suggested—to remove the boards on the ground that they constituted a slander of title—did not exist in law, and that, therefore, the jurisdiction was not ousted (Croydon R.D. Council v. Cowley, (1909) 25 T.L.R. 306).

Examples.

The following are instances of the application of the common law rules, or of statutory provisions:—

TRESPASS IN PURSUIT OF GAME.

Leatt v. Vine, (1861), 30 L.J. (M.C.) 207, 8 L.T. 581. The mere assertion by a defendant that he, as a member of the general public, had a right to shoot, on the ground that any person who chose had always shot on the land in question until recent acts of interruption. Held not sufficient to oust the jurisdiction, such a right being unsustainable in law.

Watkins v. Major, (1875) L.R., 10 C.P. 662. The defendant honestly believed that he had a right to shoot over a certain common, forming part of the complainant's manor; but his document of title, consisting of a lease of lands near the common, was silent as to such a right, and there was no evidence of any custom of shooting over the common. Held, that the justices were right in trying the case.

Adams v. Masters, (1871) 24 L.T. 502. Complainant proved a grant to him from the lords of the manor, made in 1815, of a right of shooting which enured to the time of the complaint. Defendant relied on a lease of the lands dated 1859 not reserving the right to game. Held, that the jurisdiction was ousted.

JURISDICTION OUSTED BY QUESTION OF TITLE.

The preliminary circular announcing the publication of this volume was accompanied by a copy of the chapter "Jurisdiction Ousted by Question of Title." A number of readers have written to put the following query—How far is the jurisdiction ousted by a question of title where the complaint is one of abusive and threatening language, and the application is one to bind to the peace?

As, perhaps, the matter is not made quite clear by the case of R. v. French, (1902) 1 K B. 637, and the note thereto, the following opinion is submitted:—

It is difficult to conceive a case occurring in which a question of title is involved in the determination by the justices of a complaint of abusive and threatening language. If A said to B, "I own Blackacre, and I will use force to prevent you crossing Blackacre," no justice could be so misguided as to bind A to the peace for using such words, because if A were really entitled to Blackacre, and B had no right to cross it (matters which the justices could not decide), A's use of the language would be perfectly legal and justifiable.

But the ordinary case of abusive and threatening language, where the defendant raises a question of title, is far removed from the case above supposed. The complaint is usually made where a scolding match has been occasioned by the fact that the parties owe each other a spite arising out of a dispute over land. In such a case the mere fact that the dispute is the origin of the abusive and threatening language, or that the language is used in the place which is the subject of the dispute, does not oust the jurisdiction.

As pointed out (p. 34, ante), the jurisdiction to bind to the peace or to be of good behaviour is very wide. It is also very salutary; and justices should not easily be diverted from it by the suggestion that the decision of a complaint of abusive and threatening language involves a question of title. In most, if not all, cases such suggestion is not well founded.

FISHERY LAWS.

R. Graham v. Antrim J.J., (1862) 7 Ir. Jur. (N.S.) 237. Plaintiff claimed a several fishery, and produced patents granting same to his predecessors in title, and a record of the Court showing former convictions against various persons (of whom the defendant was not one) for trespass upon the fishery. Whether the several fishery granted was the fishery in question did not appear from the documents. The defendant gave evidence of long user of the fishery, and offered security for costs in case plaintiff would institute a civil action. Held, that the jurisdiction was ousted (cf. R. (Gillen) v. Donegal J.J., (1860) 5 I.J. (N.S.) 185). Examples.
Fishery Laws.

R. v. Stimpson, (1863) 4 B. & S. 301, 32 L.J. (M.C.) 208. In a prosecution for a trespass on a several fishery, defendants showed that the locus in quo was a navigable river, subject to the ebb or flow of the tide, and that he and others had for over forty years exercised, without molestation, the right of fishing there. Held, that the jurisdiction was ousted. (See also Paley v. Birch, (1867) 8 B. & S. 336, 16 L.T. 410; Johnston v. Meldon, (1892) 30 L.R.I. 15.)

Reece v. Miller, (1882) 8 Q.B.D. 626. Where the evidence was that the river was navigable, and that at the place in question the water was not salt, and that in ordinary tides it was unaffected by any tidal influence, but that on the occasion of very high tides, the rising of the salt water in the lower part of the river dammed back the fresh water, and caused it upon these occasions to rise and fall with the flow of the tide. Held, that the river at the place in question could not be considered as tidal within the meaning of the rule of law which gives the public a right to fish in navigable tidal rivers, and that therefore there was no claim of title set up sufficient to oust the justices' jurisdiction. (See also Murphy v. Ryan, (1867) I.R. 2 C.L. 143.)

Johnston v. Meldon, (1891) 30 L.R.I. 15. Evidence of long user by defendant of a fishery claimed by the complainant as a several fishery, and that the river was a tidal navigable river, will oust the jurisdiction. (See also R. (Sheehy) v. Kerry J.J., (1896) 30 I.L.T.R. 167.)

ASSAULT.

R. v. Pearson, (1870) L.R. 5 Q.B. 237. If a bona fide question of title be involved, the justices cannot inquire into and determine by summary conviction any excess of force alleged to have been used in the assertion of the title.<sup>1</sup> Assault.

R. v. French, (1902) 1 K.B. 637. An assault was committed by one commoner upon another commoner in the course of a dispute as to whether the latter was or was not at the time of the assault in the act of using the common land in a manner in excess of the right of common. Held, that there was no question raised as to the title to any lands or interest in lands within s. 46 of the Offences Against the Person Act, 1861, and that the justices' jurisdiction was not ousted. In this case both complainant and defendant had a right of common upon Aspoll Green. The defendant was of opinion that the complainant, as a commoner, had no right to take a horse and cart across the green, except along a road, and he considered that the taking of a cart over the turf caused damage to his right of pasture. On the day in question, while the complainant was carting produce across the turf, the defendant went up to him and told him that what he was doing was illegal, and ordered him to remove the horse and cart off the turf on to the roadway. The complainant did not comply, and an altercation followed, in the course of which the defendant struck the complainant with a whip. "I do not think that the section<sup>2</sup> can be construed as meaning that any question as to any interest in land, whenever raised, and however raised, is sufficient to oust the jurisdiction of the justices. Their jurisdiction is ousted when in the course of the proceedings before them a question arises as to the title to land or to any interest therein; but it does not, in my opinion, make a question of title arise in the proceedings merely because the defendant says that he was in the possession of land, and that the complainant was upon the land when the assault was committed. In the present case no question arose as to the title to land or as to the title to any interest in land. Both parties were admittedly commoners, and had rights in the land. . . . The reason given in

Examples.
Assault.

the judgments in the old authorities for ousting the jurisdiction of the magistrates in such cases is that, unless it were ousted, the justices would indirectly decide a question of right and title between the parties.<sup>1</sup> Now in the present case it is clear that no question of a right in either one or the other party arose, it was merely a question of an assault being committed at a place where both parties had a right to be" (per Lord Alverstone, C.J., pp. 641, 642). "It seems to me that to hold otherwise than my lord has expressed would be to determine that justices could never commit for an assault if the assault were committed in any quarrel concerning land, and this even if the parties were not on the land at the time of the assault" (per Darling, J., p. 642). "I only wish to make it clear that our judgment in this case proceeds on the footing that the proviso to s. 46 must be read so that the word 'title' governs not only the words 'lands, tenements, or hereditaments,' but also the words 'any interest therein or accruing therefrom.' In the case before us no question was raised as to the title to an interest in land or accruing therefrom" (per Channel, J., pp. 642, 643). The phrasing of these judgments is not happy. Obviously the Court cannot have meant to hold that there was no dispute between the parties in which a title to lands or to any interest therein was involved. One of the parties alleged a right to cross the common with a laden cart, and the other denied the right. That dispute involved a question of the title to an interest in land. If A and B dispute as to whether the interest of B in certain lands is interest X or interest Y, this is as much a dispute concerning an interest in land as if A and B had a dispute as to whether B had any or no interest in the lands. And if the decision of the case decided such a question, "the justices would indirectly decide a question of right and title between the parties." The real meaning of the case is, that the complainant and defendant having met, and having angry words, the words led to blows, and so the assault was committed. No question arose in the assault as to title. The fact that the angry words had to do with a dispute as to the land was immaterial. But it would be different had the complainant insisted on taking his horse and cart across the turf by force, and had defendant, in enforcing what he believed to be his legal rights, resisted him by force; such an assault would clearly be one in which a question of title arose; and to determine whether same was justifiable or not would involve the determination of the right, which would be outside the jurisdiction of the justices.

R. (Mahony) v. Cork JJ., (1908) 42 I.L.T.R. 237. The justices have power to determine the fact of the locus of an assault, and when they find that it was committed in a place concerning which no question of jurisdiction arose, the Court will not interfere (cf. R. (Dunne) v. Cavan JJ., (1908) 42 I.L.T.R. 89).

R. (Mahon) v. Antrim JJ., (1907) 41 I.L.T.R. 225. Where a defendant in a summons for assault raised a bona fide question of title, but the justices bound him over to keep the peace, and also fined him, the order binding him to the peace and the conviction were both quashed.

TRESPASS TO LAND.

Trespass to land.

Foulger v. Steadman, (1872) L.R. 8 Q.B. 65. A railway company who were possessed of a thoroughfare which had the appearance of a public street, allowed certain cabs to stand there, upon payment of a weekly sum. The defendant would not pay, and persisted in standing his cab in the thoroughfare. Held, notwithstanding that the defendant bona fide believed he was within his rights, he was a wilful trespasser within 3 & 4 Vict. c. 97, s. 16,<sup>2</sup> and must be convicted.

R. (Kealy) v. Louth JJ., (1900) 35 I.L.T.R. 43. The complainant charged defendant with trespass to a fence, and proved that he had been in possession of the ground on which the fence was for several years, and that the defendant had never made any claim to it till about a year before the proceedings. The defendant gave no evidence. Held, that the justices were right in deciding the case, because they were entitled upon the evidence before them to decide whether the claim of title was bona fide, and because defendant, not having given any evidence as to his having acted under a fair and reasonable supposition of right, had not brought himself within sect. 8 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1851, which contains the following proviso:—"Provided always that nothing herein contained shall extend to any case where the party trespassing acted under a fair and reasonable supposition that he had a right to go into or upon such place." (See also Brooks v. Hamlyn, (1899) 19 Cox, 231.)

R. (White) v. Wicklow JJ., (1900) 1 N.I.J.R. 6. The facts of this case are complicated and would take up a great deal of space. The prosecution was one for trespass. Held, applying the doctrine of White v. Feast, (1872), L.R. 7 Q.B. 353, to cases under the Summary Jurisdiction Act, that, there being evidence from which the justices could infer that the party trespassing did not act under a fair and reasonable supposition that he had a right to do the act complained of, the court would not interfere with the conviction.

Examples.
Trespass to land.

R. (Donnelly) v. Kerry JJ., (1902) 2 N.I.J.R. 175. Where on the hearing of a complaint at petty sessions for trespass, the defendants raised a question of title, and the justices decided that no question of title could be raised, as the title of the complainant was established by a judgment at assizes in an action between other parties, and convicted the defendants. Held, on certiorari, that the conviction must be quashed on the ground that the justices had not considered the bona fides of the claim of right. Semble, that the decision at the assizes was an element which the justices could consider in deciding as to the reasonableness of the claim of title.

R. (Cassidy) v. Galway JJ., (1903), 3 N.I.J.R. 134. A person was summoned before justices on a complaint in respect of the trespass of six cattle on the complainant's lands. The defendant made a claim of title to the right to graze four cattle on the lands. The Court considered that on the facts that claim was bona fide. Held, that as the complainant persisted in his complaint as regards the alleged trespass of all the six cattle, the jurisdiction of the justices was ousted, although the claim of title was only in respect of four cattle.

Barton v. Hudson, (1909) 2 K.B. 564. Under the powers conferred by section 14 of the Harbours Act, 1814 (54 Geo. 3, c. 159), the Board of Trade made an order prohibiting the taking or removing of shingle from the shores or banks of the sea between certain points. The respondents' predecessors in title had previously purchased from the Crown a piece of land, a foreshore lying between high and low water-mark, and the respondent had been in the habit of taking and selling sand and shingle from a part of this foreshore which had been so purchased from the Crown. As soon as the order was published the respondent gave the Board notice that he was the owner of his part of the seashore, that he disputed the validity of the order, and that he would continue to remove the shingle. On a prosecution being taken. Held, that the jurisdiction was ousted.

R. (FitzGerald) v. Cork JJ., (1910) 44 I.L.T.R. 110. A workman occupying a portion of his employer's house used, in going to his work, a right of way enjoyed by his employer for himself and his workmen. At the end of the right of way was a garden, over which it was necessary to pass in order to get from the right of way to a public lane. In a prosecution of the workman at the suit of the owner of this garden, for trespass, it was held that the employer of the workmen having a right of way over a portion of the route to the public lane, there was a bona fide question of title involved as to the right to pass across the garden, and the justices had no jurisdiction to convict (cf. R. (White) v. Wicklow JJ., (1900), 1 N.I.J.R. 6).

OBSTRUCTION TO HIGHWAY.

R. (Christie) v. Londonderry JJ., (1902) 2 I.R. 266, 35 I.L.T.R. 127. There may be a limited dedication of a highway, and if, upon the hearing of a charge of obstruction to a footpath, evidence is given that the dedication was subject to the right of the defendant to commit the acts complained of, this will oust the jurisdiction, but such evidence should be of a cogent character (cf. Leicester Urban Sanitary Authority v. Holland, (1888) 57 J.L.M.C. 75; Ex parte Vaughan, (1866) L.R. 2 Q.B. 114).

Obstruction to highway.

Collen v. Ellis, (1893) 32 L.R.I. 491. All the space between fences abutting on the highway forms part of the highway, and therefore no question of title arises on a prosecution by a county surveyor for obstructing the highway by the erection of a barbed wire or fence, so as to jut out into the space between the fences.

INJURY TO PROPERTY.

Evison v. Marshall, (1868) 32 J.P. 691. Where a defendant, in the assertion of an alleged right of way, broke down more of a fence than was necessary to make a passage, the K.B.D. held that the justices were wrong in convicting him under the Malicious Damage Act, 1861, s. 25. their jurisdiction being ousted by the question of title. (This decision is submitted was erroneous. Cf. Heaven v. Crutchley, infra, and R. v. Clemens, supra.)

R. (Monahan) v. Tyrone JJ., (1901) 1 N.I.J.R. 171. The defendant was charged, under section 52 of the Malicious Damage Act, and the evidence showed that in alleged assertion of a right of way he removed a gate from the right of way to a space some yards distant, and there smashed it. Held, that as the defendant did more damage than he himself could have supposed to be necessary for the assertion of his right, the conviction was good, but the order would be so framed as not to prevent him raising the question of title again, or prejudicing that question when raised.

Heaven v. Crutchley, (1903) 68 J.P. 53. The defendants, who in the exercise of a supposed public right of recreation over unenclosed lands, trampled down and rooted up the entire vegetable produce of a small enclosed garden forming part of such lands, doing more damage than could reasonably be supposed necessary for the protection or assertion of the alleged right, were convicted of unlawfully and maliciously damaging the plants in question under section 23 of the Malicious Damage Act, 1861. Held, that the jurisdiction was not ousted. (See also R. v. Clemens, supra.)

determine title
under statute.

The statute may, however, impliedly give the justices power to decide the question of title involved. Thus, where a statute gives the justices jurisdiction to decide offences as to obstruction, &c., on the public street, this gives them power to decide as to whether the place in question is or is not a street (R. v. Young, (1883) 52 L.J. (M.C.) 55; see also Leicester Urban Sanitary Authority v. Holland, (1888) 57 L.J. (M.C.) 75; Williams v. Adams, (1862) 2 B. & S. 312). And where, as in cases in which jurisdiction in ejectment is given to justices, the question as to who is entitled to possession of lands or houses is precisely the question that the justices have to decide, then their jurisdiction is of course not ousted by the raising of that question (R. v. Llanfillo JJ., (1866) 15 L.T. 277; Ex parte Vaughan, (1866) L.R. 2 Q.B. 114; R. (Ryan) v. Limerick JJ., 2 N.I.J.R. 2).

When point
taken.

The point that a question of title is involved should be taken before the justices, and it is more regular to take it before the case is gone into, but it must be taken at all events before their decision is pronounced (see R. v. Salop JJ., (1859) 2 E. & E. 386; Ex parte Mannering, (1862) 2 B. & S. 431). If the point is taken, the defendant does not waive it by going into the merits (R. v. Tonggood, (1871) 35 J.P. 791). Where there was no objection made to the justices' jurisdiction, but, on a case stated, it was quite clear that the question in controversy was a question of title, the King's Bench Division directed the conviction to be quashed (Mathews v. Carpenter, (1885) 16 L.R.I. 420).

Adjournment
to adduce
evidence.

Where defendant raises a bona fide question of title, and asks for an adjournment to adduce evidence in support of his claim, the justices should not adjudicate, but adjourn (R. v. Cridland, (1857) 7 E. and B. 853).

No power to award costs.

Justices have, it is submitted, no power to award costs in a case in which their jurisdiction is ousted by a question of title being raised, their order being simply "no jurisdiction."<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup>The observations of Gibson, J., in Enniskillen Loan Society v. Green, (1898) 2 I.R. 103, at p. 14, have, it is submitted, reference only to the particular statute under consideration in that case.

JUSTICES may, in a matter which would otherwise be within their jurisdiction, be disqualified from acting, by reason of bias, actual or presumed. The reason for such disqualification is thus stated by Field, J., in R. v. Great Yarmouth JJ., (1882) 8 Q.B.D. 525, at p. 527:—"The administration of justice ought not only to be pure in itself, and capable of being demonstrated to be so, but nothing should be done by those who are administering it to throw on it a substantial doubt. It is not enough that the conclusion arrived at was right, and that it has been arrived at on right principles, for every person having a personal interest in any litigation, or having a direct or indirect motive for desiring a particular decision to be come to, should abstain from putting himself in such a position as that, unconsciously to himself, a bias adverse to the due administration of justice might take possession of his mind."

Any direct pecuniary interest, however small, in the subject-matter of the inquiry disqualifies a justice from acting judicially (per Blackburn, J., in R. v. Rand, (1866) L.R. 1 Q.B. 230, 232; see also R. v. Gaisford, (1892) 1 Q.B. 381; R. (Grant) v. Armagh JJ., (1902) 2 N.I.J.R. 175), even though his interest be merely that of a shareholder trustee (R. v. Gee, (1901) 17 T.L.R. 374).

Apart from pecuniary interest, if a justice is biased in a matter that comes before him for adjudication, he is disqualified from acting. In the administration of justice, whether by a recognized legal court or by persons who, although not a legal public court, are acting in a similar capacity, public policy requires that, in order that there should be no doubt about the purity of the administration, any person who is to take part in it should not be in such a position that he might be suspected of being biased (Lord Esher, M.R., in Allinson v. General Council of Medical Education, (1894) 1 Q.B. 750, 758). The test is, whether there is a reasonable apprehension of bias (per Wills, J., in R. v. Huggins, (1895) 1 Q.B. 363; R. v. Sunderland JJ., (1901) 2 K.B. 357, 364). An objection to an adjudication by a justice on the ground of bias must be supported by evidence to show some reasonable likelihood of bias (R. (Drohan) v. Waterford JJ., (1901) 2 I.R. 548).

(2) Bias.

The interest or bias which disqualifies must be real and substantial, and such as is likely to influence the mind, not a mere interest in humanity or the welfare of society or an interest in the protection of animals from cruelty. Such an interest would no more disqualify a magistrate than an interest in the suppression of vice. The interest or bias which disqualifies must be an interest or bias in the matter to be litigated—that is, in this case, whether the person prosecuted had been guilty of cruelty to animals. A mere general interest in the object to be pursued would not disqualify a magistrate. All magistrates and all judges have general sympathies and feelings of this kind—feelings in favour of the protection of the innocent or the helpless—feelings in favour of the punishment of crime; but these general feelings or sympathies do not disqualify from sitting in a criminal case. The interest or bias which disqualifies is an interest or bias in the particular case—something reasonably likely to bias or influence their minds in the particular case (Lord Field in R. v. Deal Corporation, (1881) 45 L.T. 439, at p. 441). “By ‘bias’ I understand a real likelihood of an operative prejudice, whether conscious or unconscious. There must, in my opinion, be reasonable evidence to satisfy us that there was a real likelihood of bias” (per Lord O’Brien, L.C.J., in R. (De Vesci) v. Queen’s County JJ., (1908) 2 I.R. 285, at p. 294).

Many statutes authorize justices who are members of corporations or public bodies to adjudicate in prosecutions brought forward by or at the instance of the corporation or public body; but, notwithstanding such a provision, the justice will be disqualified if he takes part in the resolution or proceedings leading to the prosecution in the particular case (R. v. Milledge, (1879) 4 Q.B.D. 332, and other cases cited infra).

Manifest express malice to one of the parties may disqualify a justice (R. (Donoghue) v. Cork JJ., (1910) 2 I.R. 271, noted infra: see also Enoch & Zuretsky, Bock, & Co.’s Arbitration, (1910) 1 K.B. 327).

The following are instances of the application of the above rules:—

(1) Examples.
*Justices held
disqualified.*

I.—JUSTICES HELD DISQUALIFIED.

R. (Gollock) v. Cork JJ., (1857) 7 I.C.L.R. 244. Upon an application to quarter sessions for the reduction of tithe rent-charge, a justice, who was himself one of the payers of the tithe rent-charge, was present on the bench for a considerable time during the hearing of the application. Held, that the court was improperly constituted, and the order should be quashed (see also cases cited infra, and cf. R. (Porter) v. Tyrone JJ., (1860) 12 I.C.L.R. 91).

R. v. Hammond, (1863) 9 L.T. 423. A justice who is a shareholder in a railway company cannot adjudicate upon the hearing of a charge for travelling without a ticket on the railway of that company.

R. v. Milledge, (1879) 4 Q.B.D. 332. Two members of a borough council took an active part in a discussion which led to a prosecution under the Public Health Act, which authorizes a member of the council to adjudicate. These two members afterwards adjudicated. Held that they were disqualified. For same principle see R. v. Lee, (1882) 9 Q.B.D. 394; R. v. Meyer, (1875) 1 Q.B.D. 173; R. v. Henley, (1892) 1 Q.B. 504; R. v. Allan, (1864) 4 B. and S. 915; R. v. Gaisford, (1892) 1 Q.B. 381; R. v. Spedding, (1885) 49 J.P. 804; R. (Casey) v. Louth JJ., (1896) 31 I.L.T. and S.J. 241; R. (Poe) v. Cork JJ., (1906) 40 I.L.T.R. 121.

R. v. Great Yarmouth JJ., (1881) 8 Q.B.D. 525. A justice was personally interested in a rating appeal. Held, he was thereby disqualified from adjudicating at the same sessions in cases in which the same point was involved (cf. Ex parte Overseers of Workington, (1894) 1 Q.B. 416).

R. (Townley) v. Louth JJ., (1888) 23 I.L.T.R. 40. T, the tenant of a house licensed for the sale of intoxicating liquor, was convicted of a breach of the licensing laws and fined. B was the landlord of the premises, which were situate close to B's demesne wall, and B, by certain acts of his, had previously evinced a desire to extinguish the licence attached to the house, amongst other things having at one time made an offer of an annuity to the former licensee of the premises if he would allow the licence to drop. It was held by a majority of the court that the conviction was bad. Examples.
Justices held
disqualified.

R. v. London County Council, (1892) 1 Q.B. 190. The London county council delegated to a committee of their body the hearing of applications for music and dancing licences. The committee by a majority recommended that a certain licence should not be granted. The applicant thereupon applied to the county council for the licence. At the hearing before the county council, certain members of that body, who were also members of the committee and had voted in the majority against granting a licence at the hearing before the committee, instructed counsel to represent them before the county council and oppose the application for the licence. The councillors so instructing counsel were present at the hearing, but did not vote. Held, that the proceedings were vitiated (cf. R. (Findlater) v. Dublin JJ., (1904) 2 I.R. 75, noted infra, p. 219).

Guardians of Mitchelstown Union v. Duffy, (1893) 28 I.L.T.R. 20. Justices who are members of a poor law board cannot adjudicate in a prosecution by the board under the Malicious Damage Act, 1861.

R. v. Fraser, (1893) 57 J.P. 500. A justice attended a meeting of a temperance society at which allusion was made to a certain licensing application, but left the meeting before the passing of a resolution to oppose the licence. Held, that the justice was disqualified from adjudicating on the application (cf. R. (Findlater) v. Dublin JJ., (1904) 2 I.R. 75, and Goodall v. Bilsland, (1909) S.C. 1152, noted infra, pp. 219, 220).

R. v. Huggins, (1895) 1 Q.B. 563. A justice who was a licensed pilot was held disqualified from adjudicating upon a summons brought against an unqualified person for acting as a pilot. The ground of the decision was "that the magistrate belonged to a small class of privileged persons for whose protection the proceedings were taken" (per Lawrance, J., in R. v. Burton, (1897) 2 Q.B. 468, at p. 471).

R. v. Hain, (1896) 12 T.L.R. 323. Three justices were directors of a company which had for its object the establishing of a hotel. The manager of the company applied for a licence, which was granted, and confirmed by the committee. The justices were members of the committee, but, before acting on the committee, resigned their seats as directors and sold their shares. The order granting the licence was quashed.

R. (Burke) v. Galway JJ., (1897) 31 I.L.T.R. 160. Where a justice has caused a prosecution to be instituted, and is a witness against the accused, he is disqualified, and should not sit near the justices adjudicating, but should take his place in the body of the court as an ordinary witness.

R. v. Sunderland JJ., (1901) 2 K.B. 357. A bargain was made between a brewery company and a corporation, that the company, who were about to apply for a licence for certain premises would pay the corporation £10,000: in consideration whereof, on the granting of the licence to the company, the corporation would extinguish a licence attached to premises, their property. Certain members of the corporation who had taken an active part in bringing about the agreement, afterwards took part in deciding the brewery company's application for a licence. Held that the order should be quashed, as under the circumstances there was a real likelihood of bias on the part of those members of the corporation (cf. Lord Mayor of Leeds v. Ryder, (1907) A.C. 420, noted infra, p. 219).

R. (Malone) v. Tyrone JJ., (1903) 37 I.L.T.R. 55. Justices were canvassed in reference to the granting of certain licences, and in some cases there was evidence that their car fare to attend the sessions had been paid. Held, that there was such a grave suspicion of bias that the orders should be quashed.

R. (De Vesci) v. Queen's Co. JJ., (1908) 2 I.R. 285. The chairman and another member of a county council, who were justices of the peace, took an active part in promoting and carrying a resolution that the county surveyor

Examples.
Justices held

should be directed to apply for an order authorizing him to enter certain lands for the purpose of obtaining road material. These two members subsequently persisted in adjudicating upon the county surveyor's application. Held, that they were disqualified, and the order was set aside with costs as against them.

R. (Donoghue) v. Cork JJ., (1910) 2 I.R. 271. Summonses were issued on the complaint of a district inspector of the Royal Irish Constabulary, against three persons named D, members of the same family, as defendants, charging them with obstructing the police, and calling on them to show cause why they should not enter into recognizances to be of good behaviour. The summonses were heard before two justices. The defendants objected to one of the justices, B, adjudicating, on the ground that a bad feeling existed between him and them. B insisted on adjudicating; and orders were made requiring the defendants to enter into recognizances to be of good behaviour. A conditional order for a writ of certiorari to quash the orders of the justices was obtained by the defendants, grounded on affidavits made by them alleging that a bad feeling had for years existed between the D family and B, and that on the day after the orders had been made by the justices, B was overheard to say that he would not leave any member of the D family in the district. Cause against making the conditional order absolute was shown on behalf of the Crown, but no cause was shown by B individually, and he did not deny the allegations in the defendant's affidavit. Held that the conditional order for a writ of certiorari should be made absolute. Held, also, that B should pay the costs of the defendants in the certiorari proceedings (see also R. (Kingston) v. Cork JJ., (1910) 2 I.R. 658, 44 I.L.T.R. 216).

II.—JUSTICES HELD NOT DISQUALIFIED.

Justices held not disqualified.

Ex parte Chamberlain, (1870) 34 J.P. 773. Subscription to a fund for paying the costs of an application in bastardy. Held, not to disqualify a magistrate who had merely acted from the desire to see justice done to the woman.

R. v. Huntingdon JJ., (1879) 4 Q.B.D. 522. Three justices who were members of the borough council, and as such had taken part in the making of an order or regulation under the Dogs Act, 1871, sat to hear a complaint of non-observance of the order. Held, not disqualified (see also Ex parte Pettitmanjin, (1864) 33 L.J.M.C. 99 n.).

R. v. Deal Corporation, (1881) 45 L.T. 439. Magistrates who were subscribers to a branch of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals took part in the hearing of a prosecution which had been directed by the secretary of the society. Held, that they were not disqualified.

R. v. Handsley, (1881) 8 Q.B.D. 383. Where a statute authorizes a member of the borough council to act as a justice in matters arising under the Act, in order to disqualify him from so acting, it is not sufficient to show that, as a member of the council, he has a pecuniary interest in the result.

R. v. Tooke, (1884) 32 W.R. 753, 48 J.P. 661. The mere fact of a subpoena having been served upon a justice who is not alleged to be biassed or otherwise disqualified does not necessarily disqualify him from adjudicating upon the case. The justice in this case was subpoenaed to produce an old town charter in his custody, and persisted in adjudicating, whereupon the prosecution offered no evidence, the justices dismissed the case, and an application for a certiorari was refused.

R. v. Farrant, (1887) 20 Q.B.D. 58. A justice who was a surgeon attended a person who was a complainant in an assault case. He endeavoured to induce his patient not to prosecute for the assault, and conveyed to him a message sent by the person who had committed the assault, offering an apology and suggesting a settlement. He was subpoenaed by the prosecution to give evidence, and a writ of prohibition was applied for to prevent him adjudicating. Held, that he was not disqualified, and that the writ of prohibition should be set aside.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> In this case the decision (which was that of Stephen and Charles, JJ.) turned almost altogether upon the question whether the justice "had such a substantial interest, other than pecuniary, as to make it likely that he would have a real bias" (per Stephen, J.). That question the court decided in the negative. Generally speaking, the proper course appears to be that a judge who has become a witness should leave the bench and

R. v. Bollingbroke, (1893) 2 Q.B. 347. A justice held not disqualified from Examples. acting at special sessions in the determination of rating appeals, by reason of Justices held the fact that he was a ratepayer in the parish in which the rate appealed against not dis- was made (see Ex parte Overseers of Workington, (1894) 1 Q.B. 416). qualified.

R. v. Dublin JJ., (1894) 2 I.R. 527. A county surveyor successfully prosecuted a defendant on two occasions for obstructing the highway by erecting a barbed wire on his fence, the prosecution on the first occasion having been directed by the county council finance committee, but in the second having been undertaken by the surveyor of his own motion. X, who was a member of the finance committee, adjudicated on the hearing of the second charge. Held, that X was not disqualified.

R. v. Burton, (1897) 2 Q.B. 468. On the hearing of a summons for falsely pretending to be a solicitor, contrary to the Attorneys and Solicitors Act, 1874, s. 12, a justice who was a practising solicitor and an ordinary member of the Incorporated Law Society, sat and adjudicated. The proceedings were taken by the council of the Incorporated Law Society, who alone had power to direct prosecutions, ordinary members having no control over the proceedings of the society. Held, that the circumstances did not show any probability of bias on the part of the justice, that he was not disqualified by his membership of the Incorporated Law Society, either as having a pecuniary interest in the proceedings, or as being a prosecutor.

R. v. Tempest, (1902) 86 L.T. 585, 66 J.P. 472. On an application to a licensing committee for a removal of a licence to new premises, the applicant suggested that if the application were granted he would cancel another licence and place certain property at the disposal of the borough council for the improvement of the town. The committee, amongst whom were three justices who were members of the borough council, and one who held shares in a brewery that sold beer in the district, granted the application. Held, that there was not such likelihood of bias on the part of the three justices as to render the order invalid, and that the fourth justice, though under a penalty for acting, was not disqualified, having regard to section 60 of the Licensing Act, 1872 (see also R. v. Stockport JJ., (1896) 60 J.P. 552).

Ex parte Wilder, (1902) 66 J.P. 761. An allegation that a justice held, and had frequently expressed from the bench, strong views on the subject-matter of the offence, to wit, the driving of motor cars at excessive speed, held, not sufficient to disqualify.

R. (Findlater) v. Dublin JJ., (1904) 2 I.R. 75. Inasmuch as power is given to a justice by the licensing statute 3 and 4 Wm. 4, c. 68, ss. 2-5, to be an objector to an application at quarter sessions for a publican's licensing certificate, members of the executive committee of a temperance association, which has decided to oppose a licence, are not debarred from adjudicating on the application; nor will the sending out of a circular to attend the sessions disqualify. See, however, remarks of Gibson J. on this case in R. (Perry) v. Tyrone JJ., (1904) 38 I.L.T.R. 26; and see Allinson v. General Council of Medical Education, (1894) 1 Q.B. 750; R. v. London JJ., (1896) 45 W.R. 58; R. v. London County Council, (1892) 1 Q.B. 190; R. v. Frazer, (1893) 57 J.P. 500, noted supra; R. v. Ferguson, (1890) 54 J.P. 101; and Goodall v. Bilsland, (1909) S.C. 1152, noted infra.

Lord Mayor of Leeds v. Ryder, (1907) A.C. 420. A county borough corporation, under statutory powers for the improvement of a district, bought land in the borough, including licensed premises, dismantled the premises, and put caretakers therein, with a view to suppressing unnecessary licensed premises on payment of compensation to the corporation under the English Licensing Act, 1904. At the next annual licensing sessions, the caretakers, in pursuance of an arrangement between the corporation and the justices, applied for renewal licences, which were provisionally granted, subject to a reference to quarter sessions, the compensation authority under the Act of 1904. Some of the justices take no further judicial part in the trial, because he can hardly be deemed capable of impartially deciding on the admissibility of his own testimony, or weighing it against that of another (Taylor, 10th ed. 987, citing Trial of the Regicides, (1660) Kel. 12; R. v. Thanet, (1793) 27 How St. Tr. 845); but this only applies where the evidence is really material (see R. (Donnelly) v. Tyrone JJ., (1910) 44 I.L.T.R., 264).

Examples.
Justices held not dis-
qualified.

who granted the renewals were members of the corporation, and parties to the arrangement. Held, that the justices, under the Act of 1904, act administratively, and that, as in this case they had acted bona fide and honestly, the order would not be set aside on an allegation of bias. This case, it should be noted, was decided upon the particular jurisdiction under the Licensing Act, 1904, and there is no corresponding jurisdiction in Ireland.

R. v. Middlesex JJ., (1908) 72 J.P. 251. A tramway company appealed against a poor rate to Middlesex quarter sessions. Some of the justices who were members of the court of quarter sessions were also members of the Middlesex county council, who were the owners of the tramways, and had leased them to the tramway company on the terms that the council were to receive (inter alia) 45 per cent. of the net income, Held, that the justices who were members of the county council, being mere trustees for the ratepayers, were not disqualified by interest from adjudicating, and that on the facts proved, the allegation that there would be, in the minds of reasonable people, a possibility of bias had not been made out.

R. (Murphy) v. Kilkenny JJ., (1908) 42 I.L.T.R. 135. The mere fact that a justice is a director of a local brewery company is not evidence of bias in a prosecution for unlawfully keeping drink for sale.<sup>1</sup>

R. (Tavener) v. Tyrone JJ., (1909) 2 I.R. 763, 43 I.L.T.R. 262. Two of the justices who adjudicated upon the hearing of a charge of assault, brought against the defendant by a person who claimed to be entitled to a church pew which the defendant had forcibly entered, were members of the select vestry of the church. Held, that there was no real likelihood of bias.

R. v. Sparks, (1909) 73 J.P. 485. On the hearing of a charge under the Motor Car Acts, the defendant's solicitor stated there had been previous convictions against the defendant; the justices appeared to have understood him to say that there were no previous convictions and looked in the book, which showed previous convictions. Held, that the justices were not disqualified by bias.

Goodall v. Bisland, (1909) S.C. 1152, Ct. of Sess. Certain members of a licensing appeal court were subscribers to an association, one of whose principal objects was to affect a reduction in the number of licences by opposing the granting or renewal thereof at the licensing courts. Semble, that subscriptions to the funds of the association did not constitute membership thereof, and did not disqualify the subscribers from acting as members of the licensing appeal court. Whether membership of the association would have operated as a disqualification, quære.

R. (Donnelly) v. Tyrone JJ., 44 I.L.T.R., 264. During the hearing of a charge of assault, the complainant's solicitor called as a witness one of the justices (who had been previously summoned), apparently in the belief that the justice would depose that the defendant had been, in the justice's view, guilty of drunken and rowdy conduct on the occasion in question; but the justice, on being sworn, could not identify the defendant in any way. Held, that the evidence of the justice being immaterial, he was not disqualified from adjudicating.

objection.

A complainant or defendant may so act as to waive any question of disqualification. Thus, where the complainant not alone did not protest against an interested justice adjudicating, but asked him to remain and adjudicate, it was held, on an application for a writ of certiorari, that the objection could not be allowed (R. (Giant's Causeway Tramway Co.) v. Antrim JJ., (1895) 2 I.R. 603). The rule seems to be, that if a party is aware of the alleged disqualification, and yet acquiesces in the justice acting, the King's Bench Division will not interfere; and the applicant for a certiorari should show by affidavit that neither he nor his advocate knew of the objection at the time of the hearing (R. v. Richmond JJ., (1860) 8 Cox 314; R. v. Kent JJ., (1880) 44 J.P. 298; Wakefield Local Board v. West Riding and Grimsby Railway Co., (1865) L.R. 1 Q.B. 84, see also R. (Poe) v. Cork JJ., (1906) 40 I.L.T.R. 121).

A justice who is disqualified should not remain on the bench or hold any conversation with any member of the court; and if he does so, the order will be liable to be quashed (Ex parte Clarke, (1890) 26 L.R.I. 1; R. v. Suffolk JJ., (1852) 18 Q.B. 416; R. v. London County Council, (1892) 1 Q.B. 190; R. v. Lancashire JJ., (1906) 94 L.T. 481, 70 J.P. 337; R. (Hickey) v. Clare JJ., (1857) 7 I.C.L.R. 211; R. (Gollock) v. Cork JJ., (1857) 7 I.C.L.R. 244; but see R. (Porter) v. Tyrone JJ., (1860) 12 I.C.L.R. 91). Where a justice, who had caused the prosecution to be instituted against the defendant, upon being challenged, stated he would not adjudicate, but only moved his chair from his previous position beside the other justices, it was held that a conviction had against the defendant should be quashed (R. (Burke) v. Galway JJ., (1897) 31 I.L.T.R. 160). A disqualified justice, on the case being called, withdrew from the bench and retired to the justices' room, but after a time, and while the case was at hearing, returned to his original seat. The clerk of the petty sessions sent him a note recommending him to withdraw, whereupon he left his seat, whispered something (an invitation to lunch) to the Resident Magistrate, and withdrew from the bench. Held, that the order was not invalidated, but that the magistrate having acted indiscreetly, no costs should be given (R. (Meehan) v. Louth JJ., (1905) 39 I.L.T.R. 23).

If any one of the justices is disqualified, the Court is improperly constituted, and an order made by them will be quashed on certiorari; and it is immaterial as to whether the vote of the disqualified justice affects the result, nor is it any answer that the interested justice withdrew before the decision, if he appear to have joined in discussing the matter with the other magistrates (R. v. Hertfordshire JJ., (1845) 6 Q.B. 753).

In some cases a statute prohibits certain justices from acting under a penalty, e.g., section 60 of the Licensing Act of 1872, which subjects to a penalty of £100 any justice, interested in licensed premises in the district, who adjudicates in licensing matters. But the section expressly enacts that such interest alone will not invalidate the order (see R. v. Tempest, (1902) 86 L.T. 585, 66 J.P. 472; R. (Murphy) v. Kilkenny JJ., (1908) 42 I.L.T.R. 135, noted supra, p. 220.) A justice who acts innocently—e.g., in forgetfulness of the fact that he holds shares in a brewery owning licensed premises in the district—is nevertheless liable to the penalty (A.-G. v. Ball, (1902) 66 J.P. 553). In certain other cases, justices are altogether disqualified by statute. Thus, a person who is a master, or father, son, or brother of a master, in the particular trade, manufacture, or business in or in connection with which an offence is charged under the Trades Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31, s. 22) cannot adjudicate; a person who is the owner, agent, or manager of any mine, or a miner or miner's agent, or the father, son, or brother, or father-in-law, son-in-law, or brother-in-law of such owner, agent, or manager, or of a miner or miner's agent, or who is a director of a mining company, cannot, except with the consent of both parties, act as a court or member of a court of summary jurisdiction in respect of any offences against the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 58, s. 69). A master in a trade concerning which an offence is charged (43 Geo. 3, c. 86 (Ir.) s. 12), commissioners or officers of excise in excise cases, or traders in excise cases as to their trades (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, s. 68), are disqualified. Where a proceeding is taken before a court of summary jurisdiction with respect to an offence against the Factory and Workshops Act, 1901, alleged to have been committed in or with reference to a factory or workshop, the occupier of the factory or workshop, and the father, son, or brother of such occupier, shall not be qualified to act as a member of the court (1 Ed. 7, c. 22, s. 144); a person engaged in or being an officer of any association of persons engaged in the same trade or occupation as a person charged with an offence under the Act shall not act as a justice of the peace in determining the charge (ib.).

A justice is disqualified by section 73 of the County Officers and Courts Act, 1877, from taking any part in the hearing or decision of an appeal from a decision in which he took part (see Ex parte Clarke, (1890) 26 L.R.I. 1).

Enabling statutes.

It is expressly provided by section 256 of the Public Health (Ir.) Act, 1878, that no justice of the peace shall be deemed incapable of acting in cases arising under the Act by reason of his being a member of any sanitary authority, or by reason of his being, as one of several ratepayers, or as one of any other class of persons, liable in common with the others to contribute to or to be benefited by any rate or fund out of which any expenses incurred by such authority are, under the Act, to be defrayed. The Towns Improvement (Ir.) Act, 1854, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 103, s. 91, enables town commissioners to act at petty sessions. The Justices of the Peace Act, 1867, 30 & 31 Vict. c. 115, s. 2, provides that a justice shall not be incapable of acting as a justice at petty or quarter sessions on the trial of an offence arising under an Act to be put in execution by a municipal corporation or a local board of health, or improvement commissioners, or trustees, or any other local authority, by reason only of his being as one of several ratepayers, or as one of any other class of persons, liable in common with the others to contribute to, or to be benefited by, any fund to the account of which the penalty payable in respect of such offence is directed to be carried, or of which it will form part, or to contribute to any rate or expenses in diminution of which such penalty will go. But, notwithstanding such provisions, members of a board who are present when a resolution to prosecute is passed are disqualified from adjudicating on the hearing (R. v. Milledge, (1879) 4 Q.B.D. 332; R. v. Lee, (1882) 9 Q.B.D. 394; R. v. Henley, (1892) 1 Q.B. 504; R. (Poe) v. Cork JJ., (1906) 40 I.L.T.R. 121).

Acts voidable, not void.
Costs of setting aside
order.

The orders of a biased tribunal are merely voidable, not void (R. (Hastings) v. Galway JJ., (1906) 2 I.R. 499).

Costs may be given against a disqualified justice who persists in adjudicating notwithstanding objection (R. v. Harrison, (1875) 1 Q.B.D. 172; R. (De Vesci) v. Queen's Co. JJ., (1908) 2 I.R. 285; R. (Kingston) v. Cork JJ., (1910) 2 I.R. 658), even though such justice has not shown cause against making absolute the conditional order for certiorari (R. (Donoghue) v. Cork JJ., (1910) 2 I.R. 271).

THE writ of certiorari is the process by which the King's Bench Division, in the exercise of its superintending power over inferior jurisdictions, requires the judges or officers of such jurisdictions to certify or send proceedings before them into the King's Bench Division, whether for the purpose of examining into the legality of such proceedings, or for giving fuller or more satisfactory effect to them than could be done by the court below (Short and Mellor, 2nd ed., 14).<sup>1</sup> This chapter is solely concerned with what is probably the most frequent application of the writ—namely, to bring up for the purpose of being quashed the erroneous orders of courts of summary jurisdiction.<sup>2</sup>

The jurisdiction of the King's Bench is limited to bringing up the proceedings of an inferior court for the purpose of being quashed upon the ground that the proceedings are void or voidable as being without, or in excess of, jurisdiction (per Palles, C.B., in In re Heaphy, (1888) 22 L.R.I. 500, at p. 511). Thus, the writ may be applied for on any of the following grounds:—(1) Illegal constitution of, or bias on the part of, the tribunal (as to which see p. 215); (2) that the subject-matter was not within the scope of the jurisdiction of the tribunal, for example, that the justices had wrongfully taken upon themselves to determine a question of title;<sup>3</sup> (3) that the order was not such as the statute authorized;<sup>4</sup> (4) that the order was obtained by fraud; and (5) that the order is bad upon its face for uncertainty, duplicity, failing to contain all necessary averments to constitute the offence, failing to show jurisdiction or otherwise (as to which see

Grounds for certiorari.

<sup>1</sup> It may, however, be observed that a party is not estopped in subsequent proceedings from going behind an order of magistrates, which he had failed to quash on certiorari, at all events where the order is inherently bad on grounds other than those brought before the court on the application for certiorari (O'Grady v. Synan, (1900) 6 I.W.L.R. 85).

certiorari.

pp. 84 to 88). In R. (Martin) v. Mahony, (1910) 2 I.R. 695, Gibson, J., (p. 731) enumerates the following cases in which certiorari will lie:— (1) where there is want or excess of jurisdiction when the inquiry begins,<sup>1</sup> or during its progress;<sup>2</sup> (2) where in the exercise of jurisdiction there is error on the face of the adjudication;<sup>3</sup> (3) where there has been an abuse of jurisdiction, as by misstating the complaint, &c., or disregard of the essentials of justice, or of the conditions regulating the functions and duty of the tribunal;<sup>4</sup> (4) where the court is shown to be disqualified by likelihood of bias or by interest;<sup>5</sup> (5) where there is fraud.

no evidence to support order.

As regards orders of quarter sessions, it was always laid down that an application for certiorari was not sustainable on the ground that there was no evidence to sustain the order (Re Russell, (1888) 22 L.R.I. 487; Overseers of Walsall v. L. & N. W. Ry. Co., (1878, 4 A.C. 30). As to orders made at petty sessions, the matter remained, until lately, in doubt, there having been conflicting decisions of the Exchequer and Queen's Bench Divisions on the point in In re Heaphy, (1888) 22 L.R.I. 500. But the point is now finally settled by the decision in R. (Martin) v. Mahony,<sup>6</sup> (1910) 2 I.R. 695, which, though decided in reference to a conviction in the Dublin metropolitan police district, seems equally applicable to all penal cases of summary jurisdiction. The question was thus propounded by Lord O'Brien, L.C.J., in that case:—"What then is the question we have to determine, and what is the law? The question we have to determine is whether, in a case of a criminal or penal nature<sup>7</sup> within the summary jurisdiction of magistrates, mere insufficiency of evidence to warrant a conviction or order destroys jurisdiction. That is the question before us. What is the law? It is conceded, the argument proceeds on the conventional basis, that the charge is adequate, properly laid, and within jurisdiction; that there is authority to enter upon the case and to commence the inquiry; but it is contended that the fact that the evidence, such as it was, did not authorize a conviction, ousts, destroys, jurisdiction. I emphasise the word 'jurisdiction.'" The question was thus answered by the Lord Chief Justice in the negative:—"To grant certiorari merely on the ground of want of jurisdiction because there was no evidence to warrant a conviction, confounds, as I have said, want of jurisdiction with error in the exercise of it. The contention that mere want of evidence to authorize a conviction creates cesser of jurisdiction, involves, in my opinion, the unsustainable proposition that a magistrate has, in the case I put, jurisdiction only to go right, and that though he had

<sup>7</sup> The reasoning of the judgment seems applicable to all cases of summary jurisdiction, though possibly in civil cases, the absence of what is, on the construction of the statute, a condition precedent, will frequently occur, as in cases of an application to enter a quarry.

jurisdiction to enter upon an inquiry, mere miscarriage in drawing an unwarrantable conclusion from the evidence such as it was, makes the magistrate act without and in excess of jurisdiction" (at pp. 705, 707). The other members of the court concurred.<sup>1</sup>

The cases enumerated by Gibson, J. (supra), as cases in which certiorari lies, include the following cases in which the court will go into the question of evidence—(1) where the essentials of justice have been disregarded; (2) where the defendant has not been duly summoned to appear, and has been convicted in his absence; (3) cases in which there is no proper subject-matter for the jurisdiction of the justices to operate upon, e.g., licensing cases, applications to enter a quarry, or the like; (4) applications for sureties of the peace or of good behaviour.

The writ lies, and evidence upon the point will be considered by the Superior Courts, where the essentials of justice have been disregarded, e.g., if the court refuse to hear witnesses for the complainant or for the defendant (per Gibson, J., in R. (Martin) v. Dublin JJ., at p. 742, supra, citing R. v. Russell, (1869) 10 B. & S. 111, 117; R. v. Morris, (1909) 26 T.L.R. 419; R. v. Marsham, (1892) 1 Q.B. 375, 378).<sup>2</sup>

The case in which a defendant has been convicted without having been summoned to appear is not a real exception to the rule established by R. (Martin) v. Dublin JJ., supra. The summons is a condition precedent to the jurisdiction (see remarks of Gibson, J., in R. (Daly) v. Cork JJ., (1898) 2 I.R., at p. 697), and consequently there is an absence of jurisdiction at the commencement of the inquiry. In such a case the court will receive and act upon evidence other than the evidence before the justices (R. v. Bolton, (1841) 1 Q.B. 66; R. v. Evans, (1850) 19 L.J.M.C. 151; R. v. Anwyl, (1909) 73 J. P. 485; R. (Dickie) v. Donegal JJ., (1910) 44 I.L.T.R., 222).

Licensing cases, applications to enter a quarry, and the like, are also, apparently, not real exceptions to the rule now definitely settled in R. (Martin) v. Dublin JJ., supra. Take a familiar example. An application is made for a hotel licence for premises under the Act of 1902. If the premises do not contain ten apartments set apart as required by section 2 (2) of that Act, there is no subject-matter within the statute with regard to which the court may exercise its discretion to grant a licence, and, therefore, a condition precedent to the exercise of the jurisdiction is absent at the outset of the inquiry. Upon this ground Palles, C.B., in R. (Burke) v. Galway JJ., (1906) 2 I.R. 446, explained the application of the writ to such licensing cases as R. (Marshall) v. Tyrone JJ., (1894) 2 I.R. 246. In R. (Martin) v.

Cases in which question of evidence will be entertained.

(4) Sureties of the peace and of good behaviour.

Effect of statute taking away certiorari.

Dublin JJ., supra, Gibson, J., said that such cases "either represent a case outside R. v. Bolton (which is my opinion), or if in conflict with that decision, and with the unbroken chain of authorities since on the same lines, were decided in oversight, and cannot be taken to overrule them"<sup>1</sup> (p. 730).

The High Court will, upon certiorari, consider the question whether there was any evidence to support an order binding to the peace or not (R. (Orr) v. Londonderry JJ., (1891) 28 L.R.I. 440).<sup>2</sup> In stating the reason for this exceptional jurisdiction, Lord O'Brien, L.C.J., in R. (Martin) v. Dublin JJ., supra, expresses the view that such cases do not conflict with the general principle enunciated by him, as the jurisdiction attaches only "when the facts or circumstances, on being examined, show that there is a probability of a breach of the peace or of misbehaviour" (p. 718). Palles, C.B., said that the ratio decidendi of such cases was "the anomalous nature of the procedure in relation to compelling such sureties to be found—a procedure according to which the person sought to be compelled to provide sureties is not permitted to produce witnesses to contradict the case made against him" (p. 721); and Gibson, J., said that the ground of the exception was that the "jurisdiction is wholly exceptional. The hearing was essentially ex parte, the defendant could not call evidence, there was no appeal, and there could probably be no case stated"<sup>3</sup> (p. 748).

Many statutes provide that convictions and orders made thereunder shall not be removable by certiorari. Unless the Crown is specially mentioned, this provision is not binding on a prosecutor on behalf of the Crown. Such a proviso will not prevent the writ being granted where the tribunal is illegally constituted or biassed, or where there is an absence of jurisdiction appearing on the face of the order (Ex parte Bradlaugh, (1878) 3 Q.B.D. 509); or where the order is bad upon its face, for uncertainty or otherwise (R. (Collins) v. Waterford JJ., (1892) 27 I.L.T.R. 54; R. (Bunting) v. Antrim JJ., (1905) 39 I.L.T.R. 82); or where it has been obtained by fraud (R. v. Gillyard, (1848) 12 Q.B. 527; Colonial Bank v. Willan, (1874) L.R. 5 P.C. 417). The want of jurisdiction which is fatal where certiorari is taken away, must be either a want of jurisdiction to inquire or a want of jurisdiction apparent upon the face of the proceedings (In re Heaphy, (1888) 22 L.R.I., at p. 515, per Palles, C.B.). Where, also, though the order was good upon its face, it appeared by affidavit that the justices entirely departed from the jurisdiction conferred on them by statute, and decided the case upon considerations wholly foreign to that jurisdiction, it was held by the Court of Appeal that certiorari would lie (R. (Cunningham) v. Tyrone JJ., (1902) 36 I.L.T.R. 101), in which case the justice declined to go into the merits of a complaint brought to recover a loan under the Loan Funds Acts,<sup>4</sup> but dismissed the case on the ground that same was settled by a compromise which the Court held was invalid: but see Ex parte Hopwood, (1850) 15 Q.B. 121). Where a statute enacts that a conviction shall not be removed by certiorari, it seems that the

<sup>3</sup> In R. v. Barry, (1889) 26 L.R.I. 40, it was held that a case stated lay from an order binding to the peace and to be of good behaviour. See also Wise v. Dunning, (1902) 1 K.B. 167, decided, however, on the terms of the English section, noted post, p. 235 n.

justices at quarter sessions cannot, on a conviction, take the opinion of the Superior Court on a question of law, by making up a "speaking order" and having same removed by certiorari in manner indicated at p. 237 (R. v. Chantrell, (1875) L.R. 10 Q.B. 587; R. v. Dickenson, (1857, 7 E. & B. 831); but a statute taking away certiorari in case of a conviction has no reference to an acquittal, so that an acquittal of quarter sessions may be brought up on certiorari, where the quarter sessions make a "speaking order" with a view of having same reviewed by the King's Bench Division (R. (King) v. Antrim JJ., (1906) 2 I.R. 298; R. (Hosford) v. Limerick JJ., 1908, 42 I.L.T.R. 105).

Effect of statute taking away certiorari.

The right to certiorari is not taken away by the fact that an alternative remedy by way of appeal exists (R. v. Blathwayt, (1846) 15 L.J.M.C. 48; R. (Collins) v. Waterford JJ., (1892) 27 I.L.T.R. 54, nor by words empowering the justices to hear and determine finally (R. v. Plowright, (1686) 3 Mod. 95; R. v. Moreley, (1760) 2 Burr 1040); but the last two cases apply only where there is an apparent error in law, and if they have any larger meaning they are opposed to all modern authority (Gibson, J., in R. (Martin) v. Mahony, (1910) 2 I.R. 695).

Unaffected by right to appeal.

Mandamus, and not certiorari, is the proper remedy where the justices have declined jurisdiction, or their adjudication is incomplete (R. v. Kent JJ., (1880) 44 J.P. 298). But where justices dismiss a charge on the ground that the proper complainant is not before them, it seems that a case stated, and not mandamus or certiorari, is the proper remedy (R. (Thompson) v. Roscommon JJ., (1900) 34 I.L.T.R. 203).

Where mandamus proper remedy.

An order made by justices sending for trial a person charged with an indictable offence cannot be removed upon certiorari (R. (Blakeney) v. Roscommon JJ., (1894) 2 I.R. 158; R. (Hastings) v. Galway JJ., (1909) 43 I.L.T.R. 185).

Indictable offence.

A writ of certiorari is not a writ of course (Re Mayo Presentments, (1861) 14 I.C.L.R. 392), and may be refused unless where the applicant has a peculiar grievance of his own, in which case the general course is to award the writ as of common right (In re Lord Listowel's Fishery, (1875) I.R. 9 C.L. 46; R. v. Surrey JJ., (1870) L.R. 5 Q.B. 466; R. v. Drury, (1894) 2 I.R. 489; R. v. Nicholson, (1899) 2 Q.B. 455, at p. 470). An applicant who would otherwise be entitled to the writ may have his application refused if, on the application for the conditional order, he does not exhibit uberrima fides to the court (per Palles, C.B., in McDonogh v. Davies, (1875) I.R. 9 C.L. at p. 302; R. (Marshall) v. Tyrone JJ., (1892) 32 L.R.I. 201, 205, 27 I.L.T.R. 50; R. (Shannon) v. Carroll JJ., (1902) 2 I.R. 142, 34 I.L.T.R. 186, 1 N.I.J.R. 20; R. (Cross) v. Tyrone JJ., (1908) 42 I.L.T.R. 112). Where an order directing a defendant to give up possession was bad upon its face, but possession had been taken under it, and the quashing of it would not enable defendant to get back possession, a writ of certiorari was refused in the discretion of the court (R. (McSwiggan) v. Londonderry JJ., (1905) 2 I.R. 318). "Certiorari, in cases like the present, is granted in the exercise of discretion, and not ex debito justitiæ. If a right is involved, or if a wrong is continuing, or if liberty or character is at issue, or if a defective order is operating in any way, it may be otherwise" (ib., per Fitz Gibbon, L.J.; and see also R. v. Newborough, (1869) L.R. 4 Q.B. 585). The Attorney-General is absolutely entitled to the writ in all cases (Paley, 8th ed., 451), save where certiorari is taken away from the Crown.

Certiorari will not lie in respect of an order which is merely ministerial, and is not the order of a tribunal performing a judicial act, such as granting a licence to a waterman (Reg v. Waterman's Co., (1897) 1 Q.B. 659), or the grant by the solicitor of excise of a licence to sell intoxicating liquor (R. v. Overseers of Salford, (1852) 18 Q.B. 687). The making of a poor rate (R. (McEvoy) v. Dublin Corporation, (1878) 2 L.R.I. 371), the determination by the Local Government Board of the increase of salary to which a county surveyor was entitled on the passing of the Local Government Act, 1898 (R. (Wexford County Council) v. Local Government Board, (1902) 2 I.R. 349; see also R. (County Council of Monaghan) v. Local Government Board, (1900) 34 I.L.T.R. 196), or the withdrawal by the same body of an old age pension (R. (Pawley) v. L.G.B., (1910) 2 I.R. 440) have been held to be reviewable on certiorari. An order of a constabulary court of inquiry (R. v. Considine, (1902) 36 I.L.T. & S.J. 78), a resolution of a board of guardians wrongfully charging against a particular electoral division certain legal expenses (R. (O'Ferrall) v. Sheehan, (1898) 2 I.R. 683), a resolution of a county council accepting a tender (R. (Quinnell) v. Kerry Co. Council, (1905) 2 I.R. 299, 5 N.I.J.R. 95) have been held not to be the subject of certiorari. It was held that the granting, in England, of a publican's licence by a licensing meeting was not a judicial act, and therefore could not be brought up on certiorari (R. v. Sharman, (1898) 1 Q.B. 578). This question was, however, thus discussed by Vaughan Williams, L.J., in R. v. Sunderland JJ., (1901) 2 Q.B. 357, at p. 370: "I do not think it necessarily follows from the decision in Boulter v. Kent JJ., (1897) A.C. 556, that a writ of certiorari will not lie in respect of proceedings before the licensing committee on the ground that a certiorari will only lie to bring up an order of a court properly so called . . . . Having regard to the general principles of the common law, I should have been disposed to think that, wherever a body such as justices have under the provisions of a statute to grant or withhold a certificate such as a certificate for a licence, and it appears from the statute that they have to exercise a judicial discretion in so doing, a certiorari would lie to bring up the proceedings before them, in the case of erroneous exercise or excess of jurisdiction, whether they could or could not be said to have acted as a court in the strict sense of the term." The decision in R. v. Sharman, (1898) 1 Q.B. 578, was not followed in R. v. Woodhouse, (1906) 2 K.B. 501,<sup>1</sup> where the Court of Appeal held that certiorari lies to bring up an order made by licensing justices under the Licensing Act, 1906, s. 1 (2); and in R. v. Johnston, (1905) 2 K.B. 59, it was held that the granting of a licensing exemption order was a judicial act, and capable of being reviewed on certiorari. The granting or withholding of a publican's licence is a judicial order in Ireland, and the subject of certiorari (R. (Findlater) v. Dublin JJ., (1904) 2 I.R. 75, 37 I.L.T.R. 202, 3 N.I.J.R. 354).

A writ of certiorari has been granted to quash a subpoena not bona fide obtained for the purpose of procuring the evidence of the witness, but for an improper and indirect purpose (R. v. Baines, (1909) 1 K.B. 258), to quash a warrant to compel the appearance of defendant where such warrant was granted without jurisdiction (R. v. Thompson, (1909) 2 K.B. 614; R. v. Montgomery, (1910) 102 L.T. 325), to quash a warrant of commitment, where it appeared upon the face of the conviction that the jurisdiction to issue it depended upon payment, by the defendant, of the fine and costs before a certain day, and it appeared the fine and costs had been paid in due time (R. v. Doherty, (1910) 74 J.P. 304); and to quash a warrant for possession addressed to the wrong person (R. (Gleeson) v. Tipperary JJ., noted, p. 75, ante).

Does not lie in respect of merely administrative orders.

A conviction may be quashed even though the fine has been paid (R. v. Slade, (1895) 59 J.P. 279).

Payment of fine.

Pending an appeal, a writ of certiorari will not be granted (R. v. Sparrow, (1788) 2 T.R. 196, n.; R. v. Barnes, (1910) 74 J.P. 231); but it is submitted that, if, after notice of appeal has been served, the appellant withdraws the appeal, it is competent for him to apply for certiorari (see R. (Bridges) v. Armagh JJ., (1897) 2 I.R. at p. 240).

Appeal to quarter sessions.

The question arises, what is the effect upon an order of petty sessions of an order of quarter sessions made upon appeal? Does the petty sessions order merge in the quarter sessions order for all purposes, so that certiorari need only be applied for in respect of the order made upon appeal? The opinion is expressed in Short and Mellor's "Crown Practice" (2nd ed., p. 61), that an order quashing an order of quarter sessions which quashes an original order in effect confirms the original order, and an order quashing an order of quarter sessions which confirms an original order in effect quashes such original order.<sup>1</sup>

Does petty sessions order merge in quarter sessions order?

As to the Irish cases, in R. (Walsh) v. Waterford JJ., (1869) 18 W.R. 164, the original order and the affirmance on appeal were both before the court on certiorari, and the orders of the two inferior courts were treated as separate orders. In R. (M'Arde) v. Louth JJ., (1904) 2 I.R. 64, Kenny, J., said:—"The applicant now seeks to have the order of quarter sessions quashed. He does not quarrel in his affidavit with the magistrates' order at petty sessions, which, if we accede to this application, will remain untouched, but will still be subject to appeal after continuances have been entered." In R. (Burke) v. Galway JJ., (1906) 2 I.R. 446, Palles, C.B., referred to a quarter sessions affirmance as "the effective determination"; and in R. (Fleming) v. Londonderry JJ., (1908) 42 I.L.T.R. 205, he said:—"When an appeal is taken and the order at quarter sessions is not identical with the order at petty sessions, the effect is that the latter order ceases to exist. This is so where any alteration is made, and it may be so also where no alteration is made. In other words, the effective order capable of being brought up here is the decision of the appellate tribunal, and not of the magistrates below." The question under discussion is, in most cases, of academic interest, for by far the most frequent defect in orders quashed upon certiorari is that they are bad upon their face, and this defect is usually common to both the order in the court below and the order on appeal. But in the less frequent cases, where the order of quarter sessions is impeachable upon the ground of an infirmity which does not exist in the petty sessions order, the question may arise. It is submitted that clearly no merger takes place where the order of the court of quarter sessions is quashed upon the ground of the improper constitution of that tribunal (Suffolk County Asylum v. Stow, (1897) 76 L.T. 494; R. v. Morrice, (1845) 1 N. Sess. Ca. 585, 2 D. & L. 952, and where the order which is the subject of the appeal (as in the case of R. (M'Ardle) v. Louth JJ., supra) was not properly before the quarter sessions. Further, in other cases, the principle of the matter—namely, that orders are set aside as being without, and in excess of, jurisdiction, and as being absolutely void and not merely voidable (see p. 223)—as well as the English practice and the other English cases cited (p. 229 n., ante), and the fact that the decision below stands in case of an even decision of the appellate tribunal (see p. 137, ante), show that no merger takes place.<sup>1</sup> It is submitted that in order to obviate all difficulty, the conditional order for the writ should be an order to quash the order of quarter sessions, "together with all matters and things thereto belonging," which seems to have the effect of bringing all the orders before the court (see R. v. Cornwall JJ., (1844) 1 N.S. Cas. 414; form in Short and Mellor, 2nd ed. 509).

<sup>1</sup> The cases cited, Suffolk County Asylum v. Stow, (1897) 76 L.T. 494; R. v. Latchford, (1844) 6 Q.B. 567; and R. v. Brickhall, (1864) 12 W.R. 909, do not appear to be authorities for the above proposition, but they seem to establish (1) that where an order of quarter sessions made on appeal confirms an order of petty sessions, and the order of quarter sessions is quashed on grounds relating to the constitution of the quarter sessions, the quashing of the affirmance does not affect the validity of the original order; and (2), that the court will not in terms affirm or quash an order not expressly brought before it. Other English cases tending to show that there is no merger are:—R. v. Jukes, (1800) 8 T.R. 542; R. v. Morrice, (1845) 1 N. Sess. Ca. 585, 2 D. & L. 952; R. v. Blathwayt, (1846) 3 D. & L. 542; R. v. Cornwall JJ., (1844) 1 N. Sess. Ca. 414; R. v. Middlesex JJ., (1839) 9 A. & E. 540; R. v. Surrey JJ., (1870) L.R. 5 Q.B. 466. See also Paley, 8th ed. 455.

Does petty sessions order merge in quarter sessions order?

But, although no merger takes place, yet, having regard to the Petty Sessions Act, 1851, the enforcement of the original order is, perhaps, impossible when an appeal has been taken and prosecuted, and the decision on appeal has been quashed. Section 23 of that Act provides a stay of execution pending the "decision" of the appeal; and section 24 (6) prescribes the procedure, whereby the clerk of the peace or the proper officer of the Recorder's court certifies the result of the appeal to the court below, whereupon (s. 24 (7)) the justices may issue a warrant for the execution of the order. The County Officers and Courts (Ir.) Act, 1877, 40 & 41 Vict. c. 56. s. 72, as an alternative, enables the appellate court, in its discretion, to issue the warrant. But, inasmuch as the decision of the appellate court has itself been quashed, it is clear that such court cannot itself issue the warrant, nor can its officer certify the result of the "decision" to the court below, so that no warrant (as a result of a decision) can be issued by either court. Does the applicant for the certiorari therefore go scot-free? It would seem so, unless his failure to have continuances entered up and his appeal prosecuted to a legal and effective conclusion can be accounted a failure to perform the condition of his recognizance within section 24. If it is so, proceedings may be had to have the recognizance estreated, or, after the lapse of a reasonable time, the clerk of the peace or proper officer of the Recorder's court may give a certificate under section 24 (6) of non-prosecution of the appeal, upon receiving which the justices of the court below may issue a warrant (s. 24 (7)). But whether the appellant would be held, by not proceeding afresh with his appeal, to have committed a breach of his recognizance, is very doubtful.

Does petty sessions order merge in quarter sessions order?

Certiorari will lie after a case has been stated, even while same is pending (R. v. Allan, (1864) 4 B. and S. 915; Short and Mellor, 2nd ed., p. 38; Paley, 8th ed., p. 455; and see R. (McNarry) v. Down J.J., (1908) 42 I.L.T.R. 260, where the point was raised, but not decided).

After case stated.

Certiorari does not lie in case of an acquittal (R. (Giants' Causeway Tramway Co.) v. Antrim J.J., (1895) 2 I.R. 603), even though the tribunal is biassed, for an order made by a biassed tribunal is voidable and not void, and therefore the defendant has been in jeopardy (R. (Hastings) v. Galway J.J., (1906) 2 I.R. 499); but this does not apply to a decision by a tribunal wholly unauthorized, or to a decision which, for any other reason is void ab initio (ib. per Palles, C.B., at p. 508), or to a case where the justices, through a mistake in law, refuse to enter upon the inquiry, and dismiss the charge (R. (McGrath) v. Clare J.J., (1905) 2 I.R. 510). Further, certiorari lies to bring up a "speaking order" of the quarter sessions, even in case of an acquittal, where that tribunal wishes to state a case for the determination of the High Court (R. (King) v. Antrim J.J., (1906) 2 I.R. 298; R. (Hosford) v. Limerick J.J., (1908) 42 I.L.T.R. 105). An order for dismissal was brought up on certiorari and quashed, because upon its face it showed an excess of jurisdiction in awarding costs against the Crown (R. v. Foley, (1896) 2 I.W.L.R. 69).

Does not lie in case of an acquittal.

No writ of certiorari shall be granted, issued, or allowed to review any judgment, order, conviction, or other proceeding had or made by or before a justice or justices of the peace of any county, city, borough, or town corporate, or the respective general or quarter sessions thereof, unless such writ of certiorari be applied for within six calendar months next after such judgment, order, conviction, or other proceeding, shall be so had or made (Order 84, R. 13).<sup>1</sup> The time runs from the date when the justices make the order, not from the date when they sign it (Ex parte Johnson, (1863) 3 B. & S. 947). In the case of a petty sessions order confirmed at quarter sessions, the time runs from the date of the order at quarter sessions (R. v. Morrice, (1845) 2 D. & L. 952; R. v. Middlesex J.J., (1836) 5 A. & E. 626). The court, however, has a general jurisdiction to extend the time prescribed by the rules (Order 84, R. 244, applying Order 64, R. 7).

Time for application.

In special circumstances, the court or judge may order the writ to issue on an ex parte application. But the ordinary procedure is as follows:—Application is made, ex parte, for a conditional order, and the application, when the court is not sitting, which may be made to any judge of the High Court (Order 84, R. 8), must, as a Procedure to obtain writ. Application ex parte.

<sup>1</sup> There is no statutory limit for the application of certiorari in regard to other orders or proceedings.

general rule, be made by counsel, though in a few instances (e.g., R. v. Bradlaugh, (1878) 3 Q.B.D. 509) the court, where the application related to a conviction, has allowed the application to be made by the defendant in person (Short and Mellor, 2nd ed., p. 52); but no person other than the person directly interested can in any case make the application either personally or by counsel (R. v. Riall, (1860) 11 I.C.L.R. 279, at p. 291). The application is grounded on an affidavit entitled "In the High Court of Justice in Ireland, King's Bench Division, Crown side," without more (Order 84, R. 6, referring to the conviction or order, a copy of which must be handed, or its absence accounted for, to the officer of the court before the motion is made Order 84, R. 14), and the title of the proceedings in the inferior court must not appear in the title of the affidavit. The affidavit should state all the material facts, and refer to all the necessary documents. R. v. Riall, supra, is not an authority for the proposition in Molloy, pp. 315-6, that the affidavit must be made by the applicant; and the affidavit is in fact frequently made by the solicitor for the applicant. The conditional order directs the persons to be served, and to whom notice shall be given (Order 84, R. 246), usually the clerk of the petty sessions or the clerk of the peace and the opposite party. No objection on account of any omission or mistake in any judgment or order of any justice of the peace, court of summary jurisdiction, or quarter sessions, brought up upon a return to writ of certiorari, and filed at the Crown office, shall be allowed, unless such omission or mistake shall have been specified in the order for issuing such certiorari (Order 84, R. 17).<sup>1</sup> The practice is that all objections are set forth in the conditional order, and the court will not, as a rule, allow any point to be taken which is not mentioned in the conditional order (R. (Conroy), v. Dublin J.J., (1910) 44 I.L.T.R. 231).<sup>2</sup> The Customs Laws Consolidation Act, 1876, 39 & 40 Vict. c. 36, s. 243, specially provides that the affidavit upon which the motion for certiorari is made shall set forth the grounds of the objection, and that no objection shall be entertained by the court other than as stated in the affidavit.

Affidavit.

Conditional
order.

Service of conditional
order.

Showing cause.

The conditional order must be served within ten days from the day that it is pronounced,<sup>3</sup> unless further time be allowed by the court; in default of such service the order stands discharged. And a party desiring to show cause has ten days, or such further time as may have been allowed by the court, from the date of service upon him to do so (Order 84, Rr. 247, 248). Any person not directed to be served, if he can make it appear that he is affected, may by leave of the court or a judge show cause (Order 84, R. 248). Cause may be shown by filing, where there is no controversy arising on the applicant's affidavit, a notice of motion to show cause, or, where the party showing cause desires to contradict, explain, or supplement the applicant's statements of the facts, by filing an affidavit by way of cause and serving notice thereof, (Order 84, <sup>1</sup> It is submitted that the order here referred to is the absolute order (but see Short and Mellor, 2nd ed., p. 52). It not infrequently arises that the objection to the order will not become apparent until the formal order or conviction is exhibited in the affidavits showing cause. In R. v. Wilkins, (1907) 2 K.B. 380, the objection to a point on the ground that it was not stated in the rule nisi is incidentally mentioned at p. 384.

Rr. 249, 250).<sup>1</sup> As a rule no further affidavits will be allowed, without leave, to be read on the hearing of the motion to make the conditional order absolute (Order 84, R. 7). The applicant for the certiorari must, within six days from the notice of affidavit of cause, serve a notice upon the party showing cause that he intends to apply to the court to make absolute the conditional order notwithstanding cause shown; and if the applicant do not give such notice and make such application in due course, the party showing cause is entitled to take out a side-bar order allowing the cause shown (Order 84, Rr. 249, 250).

Procedure to obtain writ.

The matter then comes on for argument. In Ireland the practice now is that the party moving for the writ begins; the converse is the practice in England. If no affidavit or notice of motion to show cause is filed within the time allowed, the conditional order is made absolute in the office, upon affidavit of due service of the conditional order and upon certificate of no cause shown, unless the Court shall have otherwise directed in the conditional order (Order 84, R. 251, in which case an application must be made ex parte to have the order made absolute. The writ when issued, directs the justices to return the proceedings to the King's Bench Division, and the return is made by the justice endorsing on the back of the writ the following: "The execution of this writ appears by the schedules hereunto annexed. The answer of A.B., one of the justices within mentioned," and signing and sealing same. The schedule comprises the orders and documents in the case. The court, where cause shown has been disallowed (Order 84, R. 15), or where, even though no cause has been shown, application ex parte has, as above mentioned, to be made, has power to make an order bringing up and quashing at the same time. Where, however, no cause has been shown, and the order has been made absolute in the office merely upon affidavit of due service and certificate of no cause, the order of the court below will be brought up on the certiorari; but no order to quash it having been made, application must be made in the office for a side-bar order fixing a day to set down the return to the writ of certiorari for argument as to whether the order brought up on the writ shall be quashed. The day so fixed must be not less than eight clear days after the issue of the side-bar order. The side-bar order is to be served "forthwith," which may be taken to mean "without unreasonable delay"; and an affidavit of due service must be filed before the day fixed in the side-bar order; and the person served with the order may, without filing any affidavit or giving any notice, come in on the argument of the matter.

Making conditional order absolute.

Return to writ.

Quashing conviction.

The rules applicable to the service of writs of summons and notices of motions, so far as applicable, apply to the service of the conditional order for certiorari and of any subsequent notice of motion in the matter.

Service.

It should be noted that under the Crown office rules now in force (for which see Order 84) there must be at least two clear days between the service of a notice of motion in a certiorari matter and the day on which the motion is heard, unless the court or a judge give leave.<sup>2</sup>

The death of one of two applicants for the writ will not cause the proceedings to abate (R. v. Yorkshire JJ., (1827; 9 D. & R. 204). Where the conditional order has been obtained, and the party suing out the writ of certiorari dies, the proceedings will not abate if the order sought to be quashed is one that affects not alone the person against whom the order is made, but his successors (R. (Arnott) v. Cork JJ., (1898) 4 I.W.L.R. 183). Where the defendant died after obtaining the conditional order, and before the argument on the application to make absolute, the court allowed the case to proceed, and affirmed the conviction (R. v. Roberts, (1744) 2 Str. 937).

Death of applicant.

<sup>1</sup> This and any subsequent affidavit or notice of motion must of course be entitled as the conditional order is entitled.

Amendment
of order.

An entry in the order book at petty sessions cannot, it seems, be amended after the justices adjudicating have separated (R. (Burke) v. Cork JJ., (1905) 2 I.R. 309). The law is different with respect to minutes made in cases not within the Petty Sessions Act, for a correct formal order may be drawn up therefrom (see pp. 77, 99); but this cannot be done where a conviction bad in form has once been filed (Ex parte Austin, (1880) 50 L.J. (M.C.) 8; Ex parte Kenyon, (1881) 45 J.P. 303).

Appeal to Court of Appeal.

There is no appeal from an order of the High Court in a criminal cause or matter, save for some error of law apparent upon the record (Judicature (Ir.) Act, 1877, 40 & 41 Vict. c. 57, s. 50). No appeal lies to the Court of Appeal from an order of the King's Bench Division upon an application to quash a conviction on the ground that same is bad upon its face, such an order not being an error on the record (see R. v. Fletcher, (1876) 2 Q.B.D. 43; Blake v. Beech, (1877) 2 Ex. D. 335; Burnett v. Berry, (1876) 12 T.L.R. 464).<sup>1</sup> The same principle was laid down by the Court of Appeal in Ireland in an unreported case.<sup>2</sup>

But in civil matters, e.g., in the case of an application in reference to the grant or refusal of a licence, there is an appeal to the Court of Appeal, but not to the House of Lords (R. v. Barton, (1902) A.C. 268). As to what is a criminal cause or matter, see p. 65.

Costs.

There are decisions in several Irish cases that the court has no jurisdiction to order costs to a successful applicant in a criminal matter for the writ of certiorari (see R. (Burke) v. Galway JJ., (1897) 31 I.L.T.R. 160; R. (Geraghty) v. Dublin JJ., (1901) 1 N.I.J.R. 172; but see R. (Collins) v. Waterford JJ., (1892) 27 I.L.T.R. 54, and R. (Shannon) v. Hollywood U.D.C., (1905) 2 I.R. 154, at p. 166).<sup>3</sup>

It is now settled that costs may be given to either party on an application in a civil matter for the writ (R. (Shannon) v. Hollywood U.D.C., (1905) 2 I.R. 154, at pp. 165, 166; and see R. v. Woodhouse, (1906) 2 K.B. 501). Costs are usually not given against justices unless their conduct has been deserving of censure, e.g., where justices disqualified by bias have persisted in adjudicating notwithstanding objection made (R. (de Vesci) v. Queen's Co. JJ., (1908) 2 I.R. 285; R. (Donoghue) v. Cork JJ., (1910) 2 I.R. 271; R. v. Meyer, (1875) 1 Q.B.D. 173).

<sup>1</sup> The words "error on the record" apply only to matters which could have gone to the Exchequer Chamber by writ of error. Writ of error does not lie upon a summary conviction (Groenvelt v. Burwell, (1699) 1 Ld. Raym. 454, 469; Payne v. Wright, (1892) 61 L.J.M.C. 114).

<sup>3</sup> In R. (Collins) v. Waterford JJ., where the magistrates showed cause against an order which was bad upon its face, costs were awarded against the magistrates; but this order was unusual, and where an order is upset upon a technical point costs will not, it is submitted, be given against justices unless they wilfully persist in making an order which to their knowledge must be bad, or are otherwise guilty of contumacious conduct. In R. (Donoghue) v. Longford JJ., (1864) 15 I.C.L.R., App. vii, the court gave the prosecutor an option of losing his costs in certiorari or accepting them on the terms of not bringing an action for false imprisonment suffered by him under a conviction afterwards set aside.

AFTER the hearing and determination by a justice or justices of the peace of any information or complaint which he or they have power to determine in a summary way, either party to the proceeding may, if dissatisfied with the determination as being erroneous in point of law, apply to the justices to state a case for the opinion of the High Court (20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, s. 2).<sup>1</sup> The word justice includes a Dublin metropolitan police magistrate (s. 12). Where a later statute makes the justices' decision "final," there is no jurisdiction to state a case (Mayor of Westminster v. Gordon Hotels, Ltd., (1908) A.C. 142, cf. It. v. Bridge, (1890) 24 Q.B.D. 609; Kydd v. Watch Committee of Liverpool, (1907) 2 K.B. 591).

The matter must be an information and complaint, so that a case cannot be stated on an application to renew a licence (Re Dillon, (1859) 11 I.C.L.R. 232). "The term 'information' is understood to be the initiatory step in proceedings of a criminal nature which are to be disposed of summarily, while I apprehend the term 'complaint' designates the initiatory step in summary proceedings of a civil nature" (ib., per Hayes, J.). Therefore a case can be stated, for instance, on the determination of a process under the Small Debts Act, or a summary proceeding by a landlord against a tenant to recover possession of a holding (see, for instance, Massereene v. Bellem, (1889) 24 L.R.I. 420), or proceedings under the Married Women's (Maintenance in case of Desertion) Act, 1886 (see R. (McNarry) v. Down JJ., (1908) 42 I.L.T.R. 260). A case can be stated to test the validity of an order binding to the peace and to be of good behaviour (R. v. Barry, (1889) 26 L.R.I. 40; Wise v. Dunning, (1902) 1 K.B. 167).<sup>2</sup> It has been held that there is no jurisdiction to state a case in the following cases:—application for an order authorizing the entry, for the purpose of the Public Health Act (England), 1875, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 55, s. 305, of a local authority upon the lands of a person who had refused to permit such entry (Diss Urban Sanitary Authority v. Aldrich, (1877) 2 Q.B.D. 179); application for the issue of a warrant of distress to enforce a rate, on the ground that the issuing of the warrant is merely ministerial (Sweetman v. Guest, (1868) L.R. 3 Q.B. 262); an application under section 162 of the Grand Jury Act, 1836, to enter lands for the purpose of obtaining road material (Collen v. Lord Howth, (1903) 3 N.I.J.R. 350); the decision of justices under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 101, s. 5, of a dispute which had been referred to them pursuant to the rules of a benefit society (Callaghan v. Dolwin, (1869) L.R. 4 C.P. 288); an order made by justices under section 299 of the English Lunacy Act, 1890, enabling justices to make the property of a lunatic available for his support in the union (In re Bethel, (1899) 19 Cox, 262). Though "no rule" is not a proper order for justices to make, yet if they have heard and determined the case and made an order of "no rule," that amounts to such a determination of the case as entitles the complainant to a case stated, but it will be otherwise if the justices have declined jurisdiction to hear the case and marked it no rule, in which event an application for a mandamus would be the appropriate remedy (Stevenson v. O'Neill, (1877) I.R. 11 C.L. 134). Where justices dismiss a complaint on the ground that they have no jurisdiction to convict (Muir v. Hore, (1877) 37 L.T. 315), or that the proper complainant is not before them (R. (Thomson) v. Roscommon JJ., (1900) 34 I.L.T.R. 203), a case can be stated, and neither certiorari nor mandamus lies. Justices have no jurisdiction to state a case on the point as to whether one of their number is disqualified by interest or not (Wakefield Local Board v. West Riding and Grimsby Railway Company, (1866) 6 B. & S. 794).<sup>1</sup> law only.

A case can be stated only on a question of law. An application for a rule to compel justices to state a case on the ground that they had received illegal evidence was refused, it being held that mere proof of the admission of illegal evidence is not sufficient to justify the court interfering, and that, to enable the court to interfere, it must appear that the determination of the justices was wrong (R. v. Macclesfield JJ., (1860) 2 L.T. 352). The books, however, contain many cases in which a case has been stated upon the question whether evidence was properly admissible or not (e.g., Webb v. Catchlove, (1886) 50 J.P. 798), and it is quite clear the High Court has jurisdiction to compel justices to state a case upon the question of such admissibility. Probably, in R. v. Macclesfield JJ., supra (which is very meagrely reported), the court inferred that the evidence which was alleged to be improperly admitted did not materially affect the result. In Dwyer v. Larkin, (1904) 5 N.I.J.R. 25, the sole evidence against a publican consisted of admissions by his servant, made two days after the date of the alleged offence. The King's Bench Division entertained a case stated upon the question whether the evidence was admissible or not, and quashed the conviction. The question whether ashes were "refuse of trade or business" was held to be a question of law, on the ground that the real question in controversy was the interpretation of those words as used in a particular statute (R. v. Bridge, (1890) 24 Q.B.D. 609; see also Lord Mayor, &c., of Dublin v. Irish Church Missions, (1901) 2 I.R. 387). The fact that the statute gives a right of appeal to quarter sessions does not take away a right to have a case stated (Muir v. Hore, (1877) 37 L.T. 315).

English Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, which by section 33 enacts as follows:—"Any person aggrieved, who desires to question a conviction, order, determination, or other proceeding of a court of summary jurisdiction, on the ground that it is erroneous in point of law, or is in excess of jurisdiction, may apply to the court to state a special case."

Question of law only.

The statute applies to a dismiss as well as to a conviction (Davys v. Douglas, (1859) 4 H. & N. 180). In Ferens v. O'Brien, (1883) 11 Q.B.D. 21, the defendant was charged with an offence triable either by indictment or summarily, and he elected to be tried summarily. The justices declined to convict, but stated a case on a question of law, and the case was remitted to the justices with a direction to convict. No point as to jurisdiction was taken; but it is submitted, notwithstanding the doubts expressed in Foss v. Best, (1906) 2 K.B. 105, that there is clearly jurisdiction to entertain a case stated from a dismiss of any offence tried summarily, whether the offence be triable only summarily, or triable by indictment or summarily. But there is no jurisdiction to state a case from a decision of justices refusing informations in an indictable offence (see Foss v. Best, supra).

Case stated from a dismiss.

Justices at quarter sessions have no power to state a case under the Act.<sup>1</sup> But the justices at quarter sessions can, if they so wish, render their decision on a question of law reviewable in the King's Bench Division, by making up what has been called a "speaking" order, that is, by reciting in the order that the facts were so and so, and then stating the grounds of their decision. "If that which was so stated on the face of the order in the opinion of any party was not such as to warrant that order, then that party might go to the court of Queen's Bench and point to the order as one which told its own story, and ask the court of Queen's Bench to remove it by certiorari, and when so removed, to pass judgment upon it, whether it should or should not be quashed" (Overseers of Walsall v. L. & N.W.R.Co., (1878) 4 A.C. 40; see also R. (King) v. Antrim JJ., (1906) 2 I.R. 298; R. (Burke) v. Galway JJ., (1906) 2 I.R. 448). This procedure cannot be adopted in case of a conviction under a statute which takes away certiorari<sup>2</sup> (R. v. Chantrell, (1875) L.R. 10 Q.B. 587), but is apparently available notwithstanding that the statute under which the order is made makes the order of quarter sessions "final"<sup>3</sup> (Kydd v. Watch Committee of Liverpool, (1907) 2 K.B. 591). The order of quarter sessions sent up to the High Court should state that a case has been stated by them (L. & N.W.R. v. Amptill Union, (1906) 94 L.T. 314). The case must be stated by the quarter sessions, and not merely by the county court judge; and, therefore, where the county court judge, who in fact was the sole justice at quarter sessions, purported to sign and state the case as county court judge, the case was held to be informal, and was sent back for amendment (R. (King) v. Antrim JJ., supra).

Case stated from quarter sessions.

stated.

The procedure to obtain a case stated must be strictly complied with, as otherwise there is no jurisdiction to entertain the case, even though the respondent is willing to waive any objection (Morgan v. Edwards, (1860) 5 H. & N. 415); and even though every effort has been made to comply with the directions of the statute (Foss v. Best, supra; Westmore v. Pain, (1891) 1 Q.B. 482). The following is the procedure:—

(1) Application for case.

(1) The appellant must apply in writing for the case within three days (s. 2), serving the application upon each of the justices by delivering the same personally or at his place of residence. Service on some only of the justices (Westmore v. Pain, (1891) 1 Q.B. 482), or on their clerk (Lockhart v. St. Albans, (1888) 21 Q.B.D. 188), is not sufficient. Sunday counts, even though it is the last day (Wynne v. Ronaldson, (1865) 12 L.T. 711; Peacock v. R., (1858) 27 L.J.C.P. 224).

The following is a form of notice requiring a case to be stated:—

County of .
Petty Sessions District of .

In the matter of an information or complaint wherein A.B. was complainant and C.D. was defendant.

Take Notice that I, A.B., of , the above-named complainant (or defendant), being dissatisfied with your determination of the above information or complaint as being erroneous in point of law, do hereby apply to you to state and sign a case setting forth the facts and grounds of such determination for the opinion thereon of the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice in Ireland.

Dated
Signed

To A., B., C., & D., the justices who determined said information or complaint.

(2) Recognizance.

(2) The appellant must at the time of making the application, and before the case has been stated and signed, enter into a recognizance to prosecute the appeal (s. 3). The recognizance need not be entered into within the three days, but must be entered into before the case is given out by the justices (Stanhope v. Thorsby, (1866) L.R. 1 C.P. 423; see also Chapman v. Robinson, (1858) 1 El. & El. 25; Walker v. Delacampo, (1894) 63 L.J.M.C. 77). The recognizance may be validly entered into where a justice has refused to state a case, but before the hearing of the rule to compel him to do so, and is not invalidated by the death of the surety and the bankruptcy of the principal before the case is delivered out (R. v. Kettle, (1905) 1 K.B. 212). In the case of a limited company, the recognizance may apparently be entered into by a director or member of the company,<sup>1</sup> (Southern Counties Deposit Bank v. Boaler, (1895) 73 L.T. 155). An appeal by way of case stated was dismissed on the ground that the recognizance was late. Held, that, though late, the recognizance could be estreated (R. v. Glamorganshire J.J., 1890 17 Cox, 45). The recognizance is to be in such sum as to the justice or justices may seem meet (s. 3).<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> If the justices, however, fix an excessive amount by way of security, the High Court has jurisdiction to order them to fix a reasonable amount, and this has been done in an unreported case (Ex rel. William McGrath, Barrister-at-Law).

(3) The statement of the case is the duty of the justices, and not of the parties; and there is no rule of law or practice to oblige them to show the case, or to prevent them from showing it, to the parties before it is signed (Whelan v. Fisher, (1890) 26 L.R.I., at p. 356). It is, however, advisable to have the facts agreed to between the parties, and, in case of dispute, settled by the justices (per Barry, L.J., in R. v. Knox, (1888) 22 L.R.I., at p. 603). The court will rely on the justices and accept their findings of fact, and will not allow affidavits to contradict the facts as found (Musther v. Musther, (1894) 58 J.P. 53); but the court may, where it sees fit to do so, disregard the facts as stated where they differ from the facts appearing in a note, taken at the hearing, by the justices or by a person directed by the justices to take such note (R. v. Boyle, (1900) 6 I.W.L.R. 141). For specimen of case stated, see p. 245, post.

Procedure to obtain case stated.
(3) By whom case to be prepared.

(4) It is now definitely settled that all the justices who took part in the decision must sign the case stated, even though some of their number may have dissented from the judgment of the court (Fogarty v. G.S. & W. Ry. Co., K.B.D. (Ir.), 26 April, 1911; Barker v. Hodgson, (1904) 68 J.P. 310; see also Nantyglo U.D.C. v. Ebley, (1905) 69 J.P. 40; Westmore v. Pain, (1891) 1 Q.B. 482). But of course the fact that a minority dissented should be stated in the case.

(4) Signature of justices.

A case stated will not, however, abate if circumstances render the signature by all the justices impossible. Thus, where A, B, and C, the three justices adjudicating, unanimously dismissed a summons, but agreed to state a case, it was held that there was jurisdiction to entertain the case which A and B approved of, and which A signed, but which B, owing to his death, never signed, and which C, owing to his death also, never either approved of or signed (Kean v. Robinson, (1910) 2 I.R. 306).

(5) The appellant must, within three days after receiving the case, transmit the same to the King's Bench Division, first giving the respondent notice in writing, together with a copy of the case (s. 2). The doing of these things is a condition precedent to the jurisdiction of the court, and an objection for omission to do either or both cannot be waived (Morgan v. Edwards, (1860) 5 H. & N. 415). Sunday is counted as one of the three days (Pennell v. Uxbridge Overseers, (1862) 5 L.T. 685). If, after the expiration of three days, the case lies in the hands of the appellant, it becomes absolutely inoperative, and if he then takes it back to the justices for amendment and they amend it, the appellant does not gain a further period of three days from the date of the amendment for transmitting the case to the court (Gloucester Local Board v. Chandler, (1863) 7 L.T. 722). Service of the notice as well as a copy of the case stated is necessary (Little v. Donnelly, (1871) I.R. 5 C.L. 1; Rust v. Churchwardens of St. Botolph, (1906) 94 L.T. 575; and unless there is compliance with the section by serving the notices before the lodgment of the case, there is no jurisdiction to hear the case stated (Guardians of South Dublin Union v. Jones, (1883) 12 L.R.I. 358; Edwards v. Roberts, (1891) 1 Q.B.D. 302), though the court may award costs against the appellant who has not complied with the requisite formalities (Guardians of South Dublin Union v. Jones, supra).

(5) Transmission of case to K. B. D., and notice to respondent.

It has been said to be a compliance with the section where the notice and copy case reach the respondent on the same day as that on which the case is lodged in the Crown office, though at a later hour (per Wightman, J., in Ashdown v. Curtis, (1862) 6 L.T. 331). A notice to the effect that the appellant had applied for a case stated, and that the justices had stated the same, and that a copy was annexed, was held sufficient (Provincial Motor Car Co. v. Dunning, (1909) 2 K.B. 599). The appellants sent to the respondent a copy of the case stated, and copy of the notice served on the justices, asking them to state a case, with a letter in the following terms:—"Enclosed we send you copy notice asking the justices to state case, and copy of the case stated." Held, a sufficient compliance with the section (Dickeson v. Mayes, (1910) 1 K.B. 452).

Procedure to obtain case stated.

(5) Transmission of case to K. B. D., and notice to respondent.

The following notice will be sufficient:—

County of

Petty Sessions District of

In the matter of an information or complaint wherein A. B. was complainant and C. D. was defendant, heard and determined on the                      day of                      , 19                      .

Take Notice, that I, the above-named complainant (or defendant), do hereby give you notice of an appeal by me by way of case stated under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, from the determination of the justices on the hearing of said information or complaint; and I send herewith a copy of the case stated thereon delivered to me in pursuance of my application in that behalf. Dated the                      day of                      19                      .

The case must be lodged by the appellant at the Crown office within the three days (Aspinall v. Sutton, (1894) 2 Q.B. 349). It was held by the King's Bench Division in England that lodging a case in the letter-box of the High Court before midnight on the third day is a sufficient compliance with the statute (Arnold v. Townsend, May 1st, 1906, unreported, noted Stone's Justices' Manual, 43rd ed., 86). Where the appellant received the case from the justices on Good Friday, and transmitted it on Wednesday (being the first day the offices were open), this was held to be in time (Mayer v. Harding, (1867) L.R. 2 Q.B. 410). Service by registered letter upon the solicitor who had acted for the opposite party, and had approved of the draft case on his behalf, but had since ceased to act for him, was held good service (Masscreene v. Bellew, (1889) 24 L.R.I. 420); but it has been held in England that, in ordinary circumstances, service on the respondent's solicitor is not sufficient (Hill v. Wright, (1896) 60 J.P. 312; Edwards v. Roberts, (1891) 1 Q.B. 302—see, however, Syred v. Carruthers, (1858) E. B. & E. 469). Where a respondent, after the hearing by the justices, had disappeared, and the notice had not been served upon him, it was held in England that there was no jurisdiction to hear the case (Foss v. Best, (1906) 2 K.B. 105); and the defect is not cured by the respondent's solicitor accepting service (Rust v. Botolph Churchwardens, (1906) 94 L.T. 575). But the rule that personal service is essential is not inflexible, and each case must be judged on its own merits. Where it was impossible to serve the defendant with the notice and case, he being a master mariner at sea, but the same were served, in due time, on the solicitor who had represented him before the justices, but had ceased to do so, and the defendant was personally served some months later, it was held that the statute was sufficiently complied with (Anderson v. Reid, (1902) 86 L.T. 713; see also Syred v. Carruthers, supra). And in Teddington Urban Council v. Vile, (1906) 70 J.P. 381, the court heard the case, notwithstanding the non-service of the notice, being satisfied that every effort had been made to serve the respondent, and that the respondent knew of the appeal. The law is now settled in Ireland by Clarke v. M'Guire, (1909) 2 I.R. 681, 43 I.L.T.R. 52, in which it was held that where the non-service on the respondent was the result of the defendant's own act in leaving the country, and where everything had been done that could reasonably be done to serve him, an actual service upon the solicitor who appeared for him at petty sessions was sufficient.

Procedure to obtain case stated.

The appellant, before the case is delivered to him, must pay the fees directed by section 3 and schedule A:—for case and copy not exceeding five folios, ten shillings; where case exceeds five folios, one shilling per additional folio; for recognizance, five shillings.

(6) Payment of fees.

Formerly the practice as to setting down a case stated by justices was the same as that in setting down demurrers, and if the case was not set down for argument within ten days after it was lodged, it could not afterwards be set down, or appear in the list for argument (Guardians of South Dublin Union v. Jones, (1883) 12 L.R.I. 359); but now the registrar of the division to which a case shall be transmitted, shall, upon receiving same, set it down for hearing, but it shall not appear in the day list until the expiration of four days after it shall have been so received (Order 59, R. 60).

(7) Setting case down for argument.

The appellant, if in custody, is to be liberated pending the determination of the case stated (s. 3).

Appellant to be liberated.

The justices may, except where the case is applied for by, or by direction of, the Attorney-General, refuse to state a case if they think the application frivolous, and shall deliver a certificate of the refusal to the applicant (s. 4). A justice cannot refuse to state a case on a point which, though not formally raised before him, goes to the root of the whole matter and must have been considered by him in determining the case (Ex parte Markham, (1869) 21 L.T. 748).

Refusal to state case.

Application may be made to the High Court for a rule to compel them to state the case (s. 5). The High Court may, however, even where the justices have come to an erroneous determination, refuse to order a case to be stated. "We are entitled to consider whether the circumstances are such that we ought to direct a case to be stated. It seems to me that where the person accused has been acquitted, but ought to have been convicted in a nominal penalty, it is not worth while to insist on a case being stated. If the party has been convicted, the case is of course different" (per Channell, J., in R. v. Davey, (1899) 2 Q.B. 301). A justice ought not be ordered to state a case when he has decided in accordance with a previous decision of the Queen's Bench Division from which there was no right of appeal (R. v. Sheril, (1900) 19 Cox 507). Costs of a rule may be given against justices who refuse an application to state a case, and yet refuse to give a certificate that it is frivolous (R. v. Bell, (1899) 15 T.L.R. 487).

Rule to justices to state case.

The High Court may reverse, affirm, or amend the justices' determination, or may remit the matter to the justices with the opinion of the court thereon (s. 6) or for amendment (s. 7). In a recent case, in which the question at issue was whether a place was a public highway, the court remitted the case to the justices to consider documentary evidence discovered since the hearing (Vyner v. Wirrall JJ., (1909) 73 J.P. 242). Points of law which arise on the facts stated, but which were not considered before the justices, may be considered by the High Court (Knight v. Halliwell, (1874) L.R. 9 Q.B. 412; Kavanagh v. Glorney, (1876) I.R. 10 C.L. 210; Guardians of Enniskillen Union v. Hilliard, (1884) 14 L.R.I. 214 at p. 220; Matthews v. Carpenter, (1885) 16 L.R.I. 420; London, Edinburgh, and Glasgow Assurance Co., Ltd. v. Partington, (1903) 88 L.T. 732); but this has in a recent English case been held to apply only to cases where the circumstances and nature of the case stated compel the High Court to take cognizance of the fresh point (Smith's Dock Co., Ltd. v. Tynemouth Corporation, (1908) 1 K.B. 315, 948; and see Newport Union v. Stead, (1907) 2 K.B. 460, at p. 465; Marshall v. Smith, (1873) L.R. 8 C.P. 416).

In a recent case, Keenan v. Costelloe, (1910) 44 I.L.T.R. 218, the King's Bench Division, on a case stated from a dismiss, amended the summons by substituting a different charge, and remitted the case to the justices with a direction to convict on the summons as amended (see that case fully noted and discussed p. 97, ante). But in Perry v. Bowen, (1904) 38 I.L.T.R. 37, Gibson, J., expressed the view that the court should not entertain a point which could have been the subject of evidence or amendment in the court below (see also Smith v. Baker, (1891) A.C., at p. 333).

Where the appellant withdrew from a case stated, an application of his surety to be heard on the argument or to be substituted as a prosecutor was refused, even though there was a suggestion that the withdrawal of the case was collusive (White v. Hearne, (1900) 6 I.W.L.R. 101).

There is no jurisdiction to interfere with the finding of justices on matters of fact (R. v. Jones, (1907) 96 L.T. 723). In Tyrrell v. Flanagan, (1901) 2 I.R. 423 where justices stated on the face of the case not only a conclusion of fact, but also the grounds of fact leading them to that conclusion, it was held by Boyd and Madden, J.J., that it was open to the court to consider whether these grounds were sufficient to support the determination. In that case, however, Lord O'Brien, L.C.J., delivered a dissenting judgment, to which it is difficult to see any satisfactory answer; and, at all events, the case, which was decided upon its own peculiar facts, cannot, it is submitted, be relied on as qualifying or detracting from the well-established principle that where there is evidence to support the finding of justices, the High Court will not interfere with such finding.

Remitting case for
amendment.

If a case is not properly stated by the justices, an application can forthwith be made, without waiting for the hearing, to have it sent back for amendment (Unkles v. Attorney-General, (1873) I.R. 7 C.L. 462; Yorkshire Tire Co. v. Rotherham, (1858) 4 C.B.N.S. 362).

Effect of order
of High Court.

The order of the High Court is conclusive (s. 6). A defendant was charged in one summons upon two counts. Upon the first count he was convicted, no order being made on the second count, as the justices were of opinion that, though the facts warranted a conviction on the second count, they could not as a matter of law convict upon both counts. On a case stated at the instance of the defendant, the King's Bench Division held that the conviction on the first count was wrong, but remitted the case to the justices with a direction to convict on the second count. The justices accordingly convicted on the second count. Held, that the defendant was entitled to appeal to quarter sessions, for, though the order of the King's Bench Division was final and conclusive, the conviction was a different thing from the order to convict, and subsequent to it, and was therefore appealable (R. (Drohan) v. Waterford JJ., (1900) 2 I.R. 307). "But where a case is stated in such a shape as to enable the court to make a complete and final adjudication, and where the court makes such adjudication, the party who obtains the case loses his right to appeal, if any" (ib., per Gibson, J., p. 318). The defendant in a fishery prosecution, having been convicted, took a case stated to the Queen's Bench, which affirmed the conviction. He thereupon applied on the Chancery side for a writ of prohibition to the justices, alleging that the matter in dispute (the legality of a certain weir) was not within the jurisdiction of the justices, but was within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Fishery Commissioners. Held, that the writ of prohibition should be refused (Devonshire v. Foot, Exchequer Chamber, 1872, reported (1900) 2 I.R. 211).

of High Court.

The costs of a case stated are in the discretion of the High Court (s. 6) and are sometimes given against a police officer (Walsh v. Somerville, (1888) 22 L.R.I. 314; Conlon v. Muldowney, (1904) 2 I.R. 498, 4 N.I.J.R. 40; Dwyer v. Larkin, (1904) 5 N.I.J.R. 25). Costs may be given against the Crown in any case to which it is a party (Moore v. Smith, (1859) 1 El. & El. 597);<sup>1</sup> but the justices are not liable for costs s. 6). Costs may be given against a respondent who does not appear, where the case stated has been occasioned by an objection made by him (Robinson v. Gregory, (1905) 1 K.B. 534; Usk U.D.C. v. Mortimer, (1903) 20 T.L.R. 96). Costs were given against an appellant where the case was heard and remitted to the justices, but not returned to the High Court within the time required by the English rules (Crowther v. Boulton, (1884) 13 Q.B.D. 680); also where the appellant did not lodge the case within the three days allowed, but nevertheless set it down for hearing (G. N. R. Co. v. Inett, (1877) 2 Q.B.D. 284). The practice in Ireland formerly was not to allow costs antecedent to the lodgment of the case in the High Court (Banbridge U.D.C. v. Gracey, (1905) 39 I.L.T.R. 106). But, immediately after the decision of the last cited case, it was unanimously resolved at a meeting of the judges that the preliminary costs of case stated should be allowed as in England, such costs to include costs properly and necessarily incurred in connection with the settlement of the case by the solicitors, but, unless by special order not to include the costs of the settlement of the case by counsel (39 I.L.T.R. 106).<sup>2</sup>

Costs of case
stated.

The case stated will apparently be allowed to proceed notwithstanding the death of the respondent (Garnsworthy v. Pyne, (1870) 35 J.P. 21). The same rule applies on certiorari (see R. v. Roberts, (1733) 2 Str. 937).

Death of respondent.

Where the conditions in the recognizances or any of them have not been complied with, proceedings may be taken thereon on a certificate of a justice endorsed thereon, stating in what respect the conditions have not been observed (s. 13), see p. 238, ante.

Forfeiting
recognizances.

In R. (M'Narry) v. Down JJ., (1908) 42 I.L.T.R. 260, the point was raised, but not decided, as to whether the hearing of a case stated disentitled a party from subsequent proceedings by certiorari, taken upon the ground that the order of the justices was bad upon its face. It is submitted that the party is not so disentitled. See p. 231.

Effect upon

Hearing.

The appellant begins, and junior counsel opens, the argument. The justices cannot be heard (Smith v. Butler, (1885) 16 Q.B.D. 349; McGann v. Kelly, (1894) 2 I.R. 8); though cases have occurred in England in which counsel for the justices has been heard as amicus curiae (Stanton v. Brown, (1900) 1 Q.B. 674 n.).

Generally, no appeal to Court of Appeal.

No appeal lies from the decision of the King's Bench Division in a case stated by justices, whether in a criminal (Ex parte Brosnan, (1888) 22 L.R.I. 334) or a civil matter (Harvey v. Copeland, (1892) 32 L.R.I. 419), unless in the cases specifically mentioned in the Supreme Court of Judicature (Ireland) Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 17), namely,—orders or decisions under section 11 of the Annual Revision of Rateable Property (Ireland) Amendment Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 4, section 14 of the Salmon Fisheries (Ireland) Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 114), section 7 of the Railway Act (Ireland), 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 71), and section 36 of the Civil Bill Courts Procedure Amendment Act (Ireland), 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 99) (see Kean v. Robinson, (1910) 2 I.R. 306). An order on a case stated is interlocutory (Corporation of Peterborough v. Overseers of Wilsthorpe, (1884) 32 W.R. 548), and the appeal must be taken within twenty-one days Order 58, R. 15) on a four-day notice (Order 58, R. 3).

Return of case to justices.

Where the opinion of the court has been given upon the case, it is the duty of the appellant's solicitor to return the case to the justices (Squire v. Sweeny, (1900) 6 I.W.L.R. 210).

Hearing of case remitted.

If a case be sent back to the justices, it must be reheard, and further evidence may be taken; and a new order may be made on the rehearing (R. v. Bloam, (1836) 1 A. & E. 386<sup>1</sup>), that is, of course, in the absence of a positive direction in the order of the High Court to acquit or convict. In R. (Hastings) v. Galway JJ., (1907) 2 I.R. 18, the court adjudged that the justices were wrong in dismissing the complaint, and remitted the case to the justices with a direction to convict. Thereupon the complainant served the order of the High Court on both the justices and the defendant, and served notice upon the defendant that an application would, on a particular day named therein, be made to the justices to rehear the complaint. Held, that such services were sufficient to bring the defendant again before the justices, and that a conviction following thereon was good.

Issue of warrant.

After the decision of the Superior Court, the justices who stated the case, or any other justices exercising the same jurisdiction, have the same authority to enforce any conviction or order affirmed, amended, or made by the Superior Court, as the justices who originally decided the case would have had to enforce their determination had it not been appealed from; and no action or proceeding can be taken against the justices for enforcing such conviction or order by reason of any defect therein (s. 9).

Where an order was made determining the question at issue, but, pending the hearing of a case stated, a stay was put upon the warrant, and the appellant afterwards abandoned the case stated, it was held that the justices were bound to issue the warrant, this being a merely ministerial act (R. (Byrne) v. Knox, (1888) 22 L.R.I. 599).

Form of case stated.

The conclusions of fact at which the justices have arrived, and not the evidence, should be stated (R. v. St. Cuthbert, Wells, (1834) 3 N. & M. 100; Betts v. Stevens, (1909) 26 T.L.R. 5).

case stated.

County of .
Petty Sessions District of

Between

A.B., Complainant
and
C.D., Defendant.

This is a case stated by us, the justices sitting at petty sessions, pursuant to 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, for the opinion of the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice in Ireland.

At the petty sessions held on the day of , 19 , the complainant, who is a district inspector of constabulary, charged the defendant, who is a licensed hotel proprietor, that the defendant did on the day of , 19 , open his licensed premises at for the sale of intoxicating liquors at a time prohibited by law, namely, Sunday, the day of , 19 .

The facts, as proved or admitted, were as follows:—

The defendant is the proprietor of a seven-day licensed hotel at . The hotel adjoins the public road at , and the hall-door of the hotel, which is the only means of ingress to the hotel, opens upon the said road. The hotel, which is situate in a picturesque position of the country, is much frequented in the summer months by guests who lodge therein, more particularly by guests who lodge therein for the week end. On the Sunday in question there were twenty-five guests staying in the hotel. The hall-door of the hotel was allowed to remain wide open on the date of the alleged offence from 10 a.m. till 7 p.m. There is a bar at a distance of some seven or eight yards from the hall-door. This bar, which was the only place where intoxicating liquors were kept or stored, was kept locked save as hereinafter mentioned. The defendant swore, and we find as a fact, that the hall-door was opened and kept open merely for the accommodation of the guests then staying in the house: that these guests had complained of the want of light and air in the hotel when the hall-door was shut, and also of the inconvenience they were put to by reason of having to knock at the hall-door if kept shut, and that to remedy this state of things he had allowed the hall-door to remain open; that the bar was usually locked, and was only opened when liquors were required for the use of the guests or bona fide travellers; that bona fide travellers were served in a room off the hall, the liquors being brought from the bar, which was unlocked for that purpose; that he did not keep open the premises for the purpose of sale of intoxicating liquors, but merely for the comfort and convenience of his guests. We believed the defendant, and accepted his statement of the facts, and also inferred and believed that any person other than a guest or bona fide traveller demanding to have been served with intoxicating liquor or to have entered the hotel would have been refused admittance. We also find that it was not absolutely necessary for the carrying on of defendant's business that the hall-door should have been kept open during the hours above stated, and that, had he wished, he could have kept said door closed except during the intervals necessary for the ingress or egress of hotel guests or bona fide travellers, but that his doing so would have been inconvenient to his guests and staff, and injurious to his business.

The complainant contended that his keeping open of the hall-door under the circumstances was a breach of the statute, and relied on R. (Williams) v. Doherty, 33 I.L.T.R. 170, and Hyland v. Hamilton, 36 I.L.T.R. 193; Lock v. Ryan, 43 I.L.T.R. 110. We held the contrary view, and dismissed the summons.

And the opinion of the Court is sought as to whether we were right in law in dismissing said complaint.

As witness our hands this day of , 19 .

<sup>1</sup> The specimen case deals with actual facts in the knowledge of the writer, though embodied in an imaginary case. It is a curious circumstance that since the above was printed a case very like the specimen case was stated by the justices of Listowel, who had dismissed a charge of opening and keeping open licensed premises, and came on for hearing before the K.B.D. (Lord O'Brien, L.C.J., and Gibson, J.) on the 29th June, 1910, when the court, after hearing counsel for the Crown, who did not press for a decision, merely struck the case out, there being no appearance for the defendant, and the decision accordingly stood. (See report in Freeman's Journal of 30th June, 1910.)

Mandamus defined.

THE prerogative<sup>1</sup> writ of mandamus may be defined as a high prerogative writ, issuing from the Crown side of the King's Bench Division, whereby the court, in the King's name, commands the person to whom it is addressed to perform some public or quasi-public legal duty which he has refused to perform, and the performance of which cannot be enforced by any other adequate legal remedy (Short and Mellor, 2nd ed., 197).

When it lies.

Amongst other instances, the writ lies where justices decline to act in a matter in which a duty to act is imposed on them by virtue of their office. Thus, if justices, before whom an offender is brought, yield to a preliminary objection which is bad in law, and decline to adjudicate, the writ of mandamus will lie. The writ will not issue where the justices have considered the matter and adjudicated, even though the adjudication is wrong (R. v. Carnarvon JJ., (1820) 4 B. & Ald. 86; R. v. Dayman, (1857) 7 E. & B. 672; R. v. Brown, (1857) 7 E. & B. 757; Ex parte Williams, (1890) 7 T.L.R. 79). Therefore, a case stated and not a mandamus is the proper remedy where the justices dismiss the complaint on the ground that on the opening statement of counsel for the complainant the case was not made out (R. (Lynch) v. Dublin JJ., (1871) I.R. 5 C. L. 548); or, that the complainant is not a competent complainant (R. (Thompson) v. Roscommon JJ., (1900) 34 I.L.T.R. 203). In every case in which the writ is sought, it must be made clear that the tribunal was asked to exercise its jurisdiction and refused (R. v. Leicester JJ., (1825) 4 B. & C. 891; R. v. Wilts and Dorset Canal Co., (1840) 8 D.P.C. 623; R. v. Bristol and Exeter Railway Co., (1843) 12 L.J.Q.B. 106). The demand must be sufficiently specific to call upon the justices to do that which they are bound by law to do (R. (Stafford) v. Fermanagh JJ., (1908) 42 I.L.T.R. 117). Where an application for a summons was made to the clerk to the justices and refused by him, and no application was made to the justices themselves, the court refused a mandamus to the justices (Ex parte Andrews, (1901) 65 J.P. 490). The writ will not issue to compel justices to rehear a case in which they have already adjudicated, on the ground that they have refused to admit proper evidence (R. v. Yorkshire JJ., (1885) 34 W.R. 108, 53 L.T., 728); but in cases in which the refusal to hear the evidence amounts to a declining to enter upon the inquiry, the writ will issue (R. v. Marsham, (1892) 1 Q.B. 371; cf. R. (Hickey) v. Meath JJ., K.B.D., 10th June, 1908, unreported, noted p. 225n, as to certiorari on the same ground). So also, where justices take into consideration and act upon matters altogether foreign to the scope of their jurisdiction, mandamus may issue (R. v. Bowman, (1898) 1 Q.B. 663; R. v. Cotham, (1898) 1 Q.B. 802; R. v. Mayor of Stepney, (1902) 1 K.B. 317; R. (Mulliner) v. Cork JJ., (1905) 39 I.L.T.R. 117; R. (Deeny v. Tyrone JJ., (1909) 2 I.R. 400). Apparently the High Court can issue the writ to compel a justice to withdraw a warrant improperly issued for the arrest of a person (R. v. Crossman, (1908) 98 L.T. 760). Where an application to enter a quarry, after a full investigation, was refused by justices, who afterwards declined to hear a second application of the same character, no fresh circumstances having intervened. Held, that the justices had acted reasonably, and that an application for a writ of mandamus should be refused (R. (Farrell) v. Queen's Co. JJ., (1905) 39 I.L.T.R. 91). The court may grant a writ of mandamus where justices have adjourned the matter for a lengthened period, for reasons not warranting that course (R. (Mulliner) v. Cork JJ., (1905) 39 I.L.T.R., 117; R. (Deeny) v. Tyrone JJ., (1909) 2 I.R. 400, 43 I.L.T.R., 72; R. (Regan) v. Monaghan JJ., (1911) 45 I.L.T.R. 11. When the quarter sessions in England wrongly refused to entertain an application for costs, a writ of mandamus was granted (R. v. Cornwall JJ., (1903) 2 K.B. 178).

The applicant for a mandamus must have a legal specific right to enforce the performance of the duties which he complains are not performed (R. v. Lewisham Union, (1897) 1 Q.B. 498; R. (Creedon) v. Macroom Guardians, (1904) 4 N.I.J.R. 169).

The writ is a discretionary writ, and cannot be demanded ex debito justitiæ (R. v. Garland, (1870) L.R. 5 Q.B. 272); and in exercising their discretion, the court will take all the circumstances into account, including delay and the question whether, though irregularities have been committed, any substantial injustice has really been done (R. (Carty) v. Newry U.D.C., (1909) 43 I.L.T.R. 172). On the principle that the court will not act in vain, the writ will not be granted unless, at the time it is applied for, the duty is legally possible (Re Bristol and North Somerset Railway Co., (1877) 3 Q.B.D. 10); and its performance can be thereby secured (R. v. Griffiths, (1822) 5 B. and Ald. 731; R. (Whitley) v. Cork JJ., (1909) 43 I.L.T.R. 133). In the last-mentioned case the applicant sought the writ to compel the justices to declare him duly elected to the position of petty sessions clerk. After the election, the result of which was in dispute, the Lord Lieutenant signified his pleasure that neither of the candidates should hold the office under the election, and ordered a new election to take place. Held, that as the office was held during the pleasure of the justices and the Lord Lieutenant, the court would not allow the mandamus to issue, as the writ would be ineffectual.

The court will not by mandamus order a judicial tribunal to act in a particular way, unless it is quite plain that what it has to do is purely ministerial and not judicial (R. v. Farquhar, (1874) L.R. 9 Q.B. 258; R. v. Kingston JJ., (1902) 86 L.T. 589).

When it lies.

Writ discretionary.

Does not direct manner of performance.

When other
able.

It is well settled that where there is a remedy equally convenient, beneficial, and effectual, a mandamus will not be granted. This is not a rule of law, but a rule regulating the discretion of the court in granting writs of mandamus; and unless the court can see clearly that there is another remedy equally convenient, beneficial, and effectual, the writ of mandamus will be granted, provided the circumstances are such in other respects as to warrant the granting of the writ per Hill, J., in Re Barlow, (1861) 30 L.J. Q.B. 271; cited with approval in R. v. Leicester Union, (1899) 2 Q.B. 632, at p. 639; and see judgment of Walker, L.J., in R. (McKenney) v. Antrim JJ., (1901) 2 L.R. 133, 176).

Procedure.

The application shall, during the sittings, be made to the Divisional Court by motion for a conditional order to show cause; and in the vacation, or where there is no sitting of the Divisional Court, by a similar motion to a judge, upon its being shown to the satisfaction of such judge that the matter is urgent (Order 84, Rule 33). The affidavit grounding the application must state that the motion is made on behalf of deponent as prosecutor (Order 84, Rule 46); in the case of a corporation the affidavit may be made by an officer, but should state that it is made at the instance of the corporation (R. v. Dublin County Council, (1905) 5 N.I.J. R. 273). The observations (at p. 232) as to title and contents of affidavit in case of certiorari apply in case of mandamus. Every application for a writ of mandamus to justices to enter continuances and hear an appeal shall be made within two calendar months after the first day of the sessions at which the refusal to hear took place, unless further time be allowed by the court or a judge, or unless special circumstances appear by affidavit to account for the delay to the satisfaction of the court (Order 84, Rule 48).

This is the only express rule as to time. But in every case the application must be made promptly after the refusal, and great delay must be accounted for (Short and Mellor, p. 219). It is suggested in Short and Mellor, 219, that the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61), providing that all proceedings for acts done in pursuance, or execution or intended execution, of any Act of Parliament, or of any public duty, authority, or in respect of any alleged neglect or default in the execution of any such act, duty, or authority, must be commenced within six months from the act, neglect, or default complained of, applies to an application for a writ of mandamus. The application must be made by counsel, and cannot be made by the applicant in person, and this applies to a rule in the nature of a mandamus under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, corresponding to the Irish 12 & 13 Vict. c. 16 Ex parte Wallace, (1902) 2 K.B. 488).

The writ of mandamus commands the person to whom it is addressed, by a day therein expressed, called the "return day," either to execute the command of the writ or to signify to the court some reason to the contrary (Tapping on "Mandamus," p. 6). The return must show either compliance with the writ, or an excuse for non-compliance, or that the prosecutor is not entitled to the relief sought (Short and Mellor, 2nd ed., 238).

When a return is made, the applicant may plead to the return within such time and in like manner as if the return were a statement of defence delivered in an action; and, subject to the rules of the order, this pleading and all subsequent proceedings, including pleadings, trial, judgment, and execution, shall proceed and may be had and taken as if in an action (Order 84, Rule 104). Effect of writ.

The court can, however, in its discretion direct that the writ of mandamus shall be peremptory in the first instance (Order 84, Rule 37). When this is done, no further litigation is possible, the only return which can be made being one of obedience to the writ (Pritchard v. Mayor of Bangor, (1888) 13 A.C. 241, 246).

Where a peremptory writ of mandamus issues to compel justices to state a case, they must not only state a case accordingly, but make a formal return to the writ (R. v. Boyle, (1900) 6 I.W.L.R. 141).

A concurrent and alternative remedy lies against justices under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 16, s. 5, under which a rule may be applied for calling upon a justice to perform any act relating to his duties as justice of the peace, and his obedience to such a rule shall not subject him to any action. The principles governing the granting of such a rule are the same as in the case of mandamus. Further, a rule in the nature of a mandamus may issue directed to justices to compel them to state a case (20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, s. 5<sup>1</sup>), and application for such a rule is by motion for a conditional order (Order 84, Rule 49). Rule to justices.

In a criminal cause or matter, no appeal lies from an order of the King's Bench Division refusing or granting a writ of mandamus (Judicature Act (Ireland), s. 50). In other cases—for instance, on an application for a writ of mandamus to hear and determine an application for a licensing certificate—an appeal lies to the Court of Appeal from the grant or refusal of the writ. No appeal lies to the House of Lords from an order of the Court of Appeal refusing a mandamus; but should the Court of Appeal grant the writ (not being a peremptory writ), and a return is made thereto, an appeal may be taken to the House of Lords as in an ordinary action. An order of the K.B.D. granting or refusing an application to make absolute a conditional order for a writ of mandamus is interlocutory, and an appeal to the Court of Appeal should be taken within twenty-one days (O. 58, R. 15) on a four-day notice (O. 58, R. 3.) Appeal.

The costs of an application for a writ of mandamus are in the discretion of the court, and it is the general rule of the court to order the person unsuccessfully resisting an application to make absolute a conditional order for a writ of mandamus to pay the costs (R. (Rogers) v. Antrim JJ., (1900) 2 I.R. 388, 34 I.L.T.R. 8, 57). Every application for the costs of a mandamus shall, unless the court or a judge shall otherwise order, be made before the fifth day of the sitting next after that in which the right to make such application accrued, and shall be on notice of motion (Order 84, Rule 47). Costs.

It seems that where an application for the writ has been made and refused, on the ground that there was no demand and refusal, a second application cannot be made, even though there has meanwhile Second application for writ.

been a demand and refusal (R. v. Bodmin JJ., (1892) 2 Q.B. 21; Ex parte Thompson, (1845) 6 Q.B. 721): but in R. (Credon v. Macroom Guardians, (1904) 4 N.I.J.R. 169, where an application was unsuccessful on the ground that there had been no proper demand and refusal, the court made an order of no rule on the motion, without prejudice to a renewal of the application.

No action for obeying writ.

No action, suit, or other proceeding is maintainable against any person for or by reason of anything done in obedience to a peremptory writ of mandamus (Order 84, Rule 42). No action lies against a justice of the peace for observing a rule in the nature of a mandamus (12 & 13 Vict. c. 16, s. 5).

Enforcing obedience.

Obedience to a writ of mandamus may be enforced by attachment.

CHAPTER XX.

WRIT OF HABEAS CORPUS.

	PAGE		PAGE
Various kinds of writ, . . . . .	251	Procedure, . . . . .	252
Habeas Corpus ad subjiciendum , . . . . .	251	No appeal, . . . . .	253
Lies though conviction not quashed, . . . . .	252

THERE are four principal kinds of writs of habeas corpus :— Various kinds
 (1) habeas corpus ad subjiciendum ; (2) habeas corpus ad testificandum ; of writs of
 (3) habeas corpus ad respondendum ; (4) habeas corpus ad deliberandum habeas and recipias. corpus.

The habeas corpus ad testificandum is a writ which lies at common law for the purpose of bringing up to give evidence a witness who is detained in prison. The habeas corpus ad respondendum was applicable where one person had a cause of action against another who was confined in jail under process of an inferior court, so as to remove the prisoner for the purpose of charging him with a new cause of action in the superior court. The writ is still used for the purpose of bringing up persons in custody before magistrates or courts of record, for trial or examination on any other charge. The habeas corpus ad deliberandum and recipias consisted really of two writs, used to remove prisoners from one custody to another for the purpose of trial, the writ ad deliberandum being served upon the gaoler to deliver the prisoner, and the writ recipias to the other gaoler to receive him.

The writ of habeas corpus, however, which is usually spoken of is the writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum. This writ is used for protecting the liberty of the subject by examining into the legality of commitments for criminal or supposed criminal matters, or of any other forcible detention, including impressments, and also for admitting to bail prisoners legally committed (Short & Mellor, 2nd ed., 305). It is a writ of right, to which a person unlawfully detained is entitled ex debito justitiæ (4 Bac. Abr. "Habeas Corpus," 114, and see also Irish Habeas Corpus Act, 21 and 22 Geo. 3, c. 11). Habeas corpus
dum.

The court may, on the argument of the conditional order or on the application on notice for the writ, direct an order to be drawn up for the prisoner's discharge, instead of waiting for the return of the writ (see Order 84, Rule 200). But, where this is not done, the writ is to be served personally, if possible, upon the party to whom it is directed ; or, if not possible, or if the writ be directed to a gaoler or other public official, by leaving it with the servant or agent of the person confining or restraining at the place where the prisoner is confined or restrained (Rule 195). The writ commands the person to whom it is addressed to produce in the King's Bench Division the body of the person in custody, together tion shall, during the sittings, be made to the divisional court. On the argument of the conditional order, or on the application on notice for the writ, the court or judge may, in their or his discretion, direct an order to be drawn up for the prisoner's discharge, instead of waiting for the return of the writ. The application should be grounded on an affidavit made by the prisoner, or some one on his behalf, setting out the circumstances and referring to the documents (for title, &c., of affidavit on the Crown side, see p. 232). The court may order the person's immediate discharge from custody by telegram (R. (Crilly, v. Londonderry J.J., (1904) 38 I.L.T.R. 136). As a rule, the application must be moved by counsel; but the rule has sometimes been departed from, e.g., a wife has been allowed to move on behalf of her husband (Cobbett v. Hudson, (1850) 15 Q.B. 988). Procedure.

The determination of an application for a writ of habeas corpus in a criminal case or matter by the King's Bench Division is final, and no appeal lies to the Court of Appeal (Judicature Act, s. 50; see Ex parte Woodhall, (1888) 20 Q.B.D. 832). An order made by the bankruptcy judge committing a person to prison for unsatisfactory answering is not made in a criminal cause or matter, and an appeal lies therefrom to the court of appeal (In re Keller, (1887) 22 L.R.I. 158). No appeal.

WRIT OF PROHIBITION.

	PAGE		PAGE
Definition, . . . . .	254	Procedure, . . . . .	254
When granted, . . . . .	254

Definition. A WRIT of prohibition is a judicial writ issuing out of a court of superior jurisdiction and directed to an inferior court for the purpose of preventing the inferior court from usurping a jurisdiction with which it is not legally vested (Short & Mellor, 2nd ed., 252).

When granted. The writ will only be issued for the purpose of restraining an inferior court from acting without jurisdiction or in excess of jurisdiction. It lies, for instance, to petty sessions (R. v. Bromley JJ., (1890) 38 W.R. 253), to quarter sessions (R. v. Middlesex JJ., (1881) 45 J.P. 420), and to a Recorder (Liverpool United Gas Light Company v. Overseers of the Poor of Everton, (1871) L.R. 6 C.P. 414).

The following are instances in which the writ was granted:—To restrain one of two justices having co-ordinate jurisdiction with his colleague from giving a licensing certificate where his colleague had been in favour of refusing it (R. (Bourke) v. Dublin JJ., (1903) 2 I.R. 429); to restrain a county court judge from issuing a decree in a case in which the party had applied for and was entitled to a jury, but, the jury having disagreed, the judge had heard the case himself (Doran v. Doyle, (1896) 30 I.L.T.R. 138); to restrain proceedings in the county court against a friendly society, the Friendly Societies Acts enacting that all such proceedings should be taken in a court of summary jurisdiction (Jones v. Slee, (1886) 32 C.D. 585); to prohibit interested justices from adjudicating (R. v. Farrant, (1888) 20 Q.B.D. 58).

Procedure. The procedure on application for the writ is prescribed by Order 84, Rules 50 and 51. The application shall be made during the sittings to the divisional court by motion for a conditional order to show cause; and in the vacation, or where there is no sitting of the divisional court, by similar motion to the judge, upon its being shown to the satisfaction of the judge that the matter is urgent; and, in civil proceedings on the Crown side, shall be made to a judge for a conditional order to show cause. The order may be made absolute ex parte in the first instance, on special circumstances being shown, in the discretion of the court or judge. When a rule is made absolute for a writ of prohibition, there is power in the court to award costs (R. v. London JJ., (1894) 1 Q.B. 453, which was a civil case).

CHAPTER XXII.

CRIMINAL CAPACITY.

	PAGE		PAGE
Children, . . . . .	255	Drunkenness, . . . . .	257
Insanity, . . . . .	256

A CHILD under the age of seven years cannot commit a crime Children.
 (1 Hale, P. C., 27, 28, Marsh v. Loader, (1863) 14 C.B. (N.S.) 535). Between the ages of seven and fourteen years the law requires strict affirmative proof that the child, at the time of the offence, had a guilty knowledge that he or she was doing wrong (R. v. Smith, (1845) 1 Cox 260; R. v. Owen, (1830) 4 C. & P. 236; and see 47 & 48 Vict. c. 19, s. 4 (5)). The question of guilty knowledge is for the jury (Hale, P.C., 26, 27; R. v. Owen, (1830) 4 C. & P. 236), and the jury should acquit if guilty knowledge is not proved (R. v. Smith; R. v. Owen, supra). A child should not be convicted on its own confession (Hale, P. C., 26, 27). Of course what amounts to guilty knowledge must vary with the circumstances of each case; but as a general rule if the child be proved to have told lies in regard to the act complained of, this may be considered as evidence of guilty knowledge. Thus in R. v. Kershaw, (1902) 18 T.L.R. 357, a boy of thirteen was indicted for the murder of a companion; it was proved that he had lied about his movements on the day of the murder, and he was found guilty of manslaughter (see also R. v. Vamplew, (1862) 3 F. & F. 520, and R. v. Wild, (1835) 1 Mood, C.C. 452).

It is an irrebuttable presumption of law that a boy under the age of fourteen years is incapable of committing rape (R. v. Groombridge, (1836) 7 C. & P. 582), and the presumption has been held to extend to assault with intent to ravish (R. v. Phillips, (1839) 8 C. & P. 736), but, subject to guilty knowledge being proved, he can be guilty as principal in the second degree of rape, i.e., by aiding and abetting (R. v. Eldershaw, (1828) 3 C. & P. 396). This presumption has been applied to the offences created by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69). A boy under fourteen, indicted under sect. 4 of that Act, must be acquitted (R. v. Waite, (1892) 2 Q.B. 600), but he may be convicted under sect. 9 of an indecent assault (R. v. Williams, (1893) 1 Q.B. 320). It has been doubted whether a boy can be convicted of an attempt to commit an offence under s. 4, but it is submitted that it is the better opinion that he can be so convicted (R. v. Brown, (1889) 24 Q.B.D. 357; and see judgment of Hawkins, J., in R. v. Williams, supra). A girl under the age of sixteen cannot be found guilty of aiding and abetting the commission of an offence under sect. 5 with herself (R. v. Tyrrell, (1894) 1 Q.B. 710). An infant cannot be convicted of an offence under section 12 of the Debtors

Children.

Act (Ireland), 1872 or sect. 12 of the Debtors Act, 1869, (the English Act), unless as to debts for necessities, as he cannot be lawfully adjudicated bankrupt except as to such debts (R. v. Wilson, (1879) 5 Q.B.D. 28). But an infant can be convicted of larceny as a bailee, though he cannot enter into a contract of bailment (R. v. McDonald, (1885) 15 Q.B.D. 323). As to the power of justices when dealing with children, see CATALOGUE OF SUMMARY OFFENCES, CHILDREN.

Insanity.

The presumption of law is that every man is sane (R. v. Oxford, (1840) 9 C. & P. 525 at p. 546, per Lord Denman, C.J.) until the contrary is proved. A grand jury should never ignore a bill on account of the prisoner's insanity, otherwise there would be no security to the public by the confinement of the insane person (per Alderson, B., in R. v. Hodges, (1838) 8 C. & P. 195). Lunacy may be classified as being either a nativitate, arising at birth, and being a permanent state, or being of an adventitious character proceeding from divers causes, and may result in a partial insanity of mind, or a total insanity (1 Hale 29, 30). The former state is that of idiots, and the latter is nowadays called insanity. The question of idiocy or insanity as regards an accused is one for a jury by the testimony of witnesses viva voce in the presence of the judge and jury, and by the inspection and direction of the judge (1 Hale 33). The inquiry should be as to the incapacity of the prisoner, and whether it be to such a degree as to excuse from the guilt of the offence (ib.). There has been much conflict of opinion as to the test to be applied in deciding this question of insanity. In M'Naghten's Case, (1843) 10 C. & F. 200, the judges laid down a series of rules in answer to certain questions put by the House of Lords, and these rules have ever since been accepted as setting forth what are the elements constituting insanity,<sup>1</sup> with reference to criminal responsibility. These rules may be epitomized as follows:—

(a) If a man, sane in all other respects, suffers from partial delusions, and under the influence of such delusions thinks he is redressing or revenging some grievance or wrong, or producing a public benefit, and so does the act complained of, knowing that such act was against the law, he is guilty.

(b) If the partial delusions be as to an existing state of facts, and as a consequence the act complained of be done, then the guilt of the accused will depend on whether, if the actual state of facts corresponded with the delusions as to such facts, the act complained of would be justified in law.

(c) The jury should be directed that to prove insanity it should be proved that the prisoner at the time of committing the act was so diseased in mind as not to know the nature and quality of the act, or if he did know it, that he did not know he was doing wrong.<sup>2</sup>

Insanity is a question of fact which it is for the jury to determine. A medical witness cannot give in evidence his opinion as to the prisoner's responsibility; he can only state from his knowledge of the prisoner, and the evidence, his opinion as a skilled witness of the state of the prisoner's mind (R. v. Richards, (1858) 1 F. & F. 87). Insanity.

The questions that may be put to a medical witness are thus succinctly put by Mellor, J.: "You must put specific facts to him to raise a question of science, that is, whether such and such facts are symptoms of insanity. But you cannot put all the facts to the witness, and ask his general opinion on the whole case, which is for the jury" (R. v. Southey, (1865) 4 F. & F. 864, at p. 887). When the defence of insanity is established, the jury must return a special verdict to the effect that the accused was guilty of the act or omission charged against him, but was insane at the time when he did the act or made the omission (Trial of Lunatics Act, 1883, 46 & 47 Vict. c. 38, s. 2 (1)). On such special verdict the court orders the accused to be kept in custody as a criminal lunatic during the pleasure of the Lord Lieutenant (ib., s. 2 (2)).

The time to decide whether a prisoner is fit to be tried is before he is called on to plead. If the question should arise in the course of the trial, the jury should be re-sworn to try this issue; and the two questions should be left to the jury: whether the prisoner was in a fit state to be tried, and whether he was guilty or not guilty (per Mellor, J., R. v. Southey, (1865) 4 F. & F., at p. 878).

Drunkenness affords no excuse for crime, but delirium tremens, arising from excessive drinking, is an excuse if its effect is so to obscure the mental faculties as to render the prisoner unable to distinguish between right and wrong, and while in that state he commits the crime (R. v. Davis, (1881) 14 Cox 563). In crimes where intent is of the essence, drunkenness may be a defence to rebut the intention. The rule is thus laid down by Darling, J.: "A man is taken to intend the natural consequences of his acts . . . This presumption . . . may be rebutted in the case of a man who is drunk, by showing his mind to have been so affected by the drink he had taken that he was incapable of knowing that what he was doing was dangerous, i.e., likely to inflict serious injury" (R. v. Meade, (1909) 1 K.B. 899, delivering the judgment of the Court of Criminal Appeal). Drunkenness.

A person who in a drunken sleep does an act which causes the death of another is not criminally liable (R. v. Byron, (1863) cited Lord Halsbury's "Laws of England," vol. 9, p. 243).

Upon the preliminary investigation of an indictable offence, the justices have no jurisdiction to inquire into the sanity of the accused, their function being to return the accused for trial if a proper case is made out, and otherwise to discharge him (see p. 25, ante). The question of the sanity of an accused person can be determined only by the jury which tries the case (see Trial of Lunatics Act, 1883, 46 & 47 Vict. c. 38, s. 2); and even a grand jury cannot throw out a bill on the ground of insanity (R. v. Hodges, (1838) 8 C. & P. 195). On the hearing of a summary offence, where mens rea is of the essence of the offence, the question of the capacity of the defendant may have to be considered by the justices to enable them to conclude whether an offence has been committed or not;<sup>1</sup> but the occasion for such consideration will rarely arise. Justices and the defence of insanity.

<sup>1</sup> E.g., if a person of unsound mind travelled by train without having paid his fare, the justices would have to consider whether he was capable of an intent to defraud.

Form of oath.

An oath may be administered and taken:

(1.) As prescribed by the Oaths Act, 1909, 9 Edw. 7, c. 39. The witness, if a Christian, holds the New Testament, or, if a Jew, the Old Testament, in his uplifted hand, and says, or repeats after the officer administering the oath, the words: "I swear by Almighty God that my evidence will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth."

(2.) In the method used before the Oaths Act, 1909, the witness Form of oath. holds the book, the New Testament or the Old Testament, in his hands; the officer says, "The evidence you shall give shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so Help You God," and the witness then kisses the Testament. When the oath is taken in this form by a Jew, he does so with head covered.

(3.) In the Scotch form, if the witness so desires, the witness holds up his right hand (no book being used), and says, "I, A. B., swear by God himself, as I shall answer to Him at the great day of Judgment, that the evidence I shall give shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth."

(4.) In the case of any person who objects to take the oath in the usual way, the oath may be taken in any manner which the witness declares to be binding on his conscience (1 & 2 Vict. c. 105, s. 1).

Unless the witness otherwise requests, the oath shall be administered in the manner prescribed by the Oaths Act, 1909 (see s. 3).

There are some exceptions to the rule that all witnesses shall be examined upon oath.

If a witness has no religious belief, or if, having a religious belief, Affirmation in lieu of oath. he objects to be sworn, and states as the ground of such objection that the taking of an oath is contrary to his religious belief, he will be allowed to affirm (Oaths Act, 1884, 51 & 52 Vict. c. 46, s. 1). The form of affirmation is:—"I, A. B., do solemnly, sincerely, and truly declare and affirm that the evidence I shall give to the court shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth." It is the duty of the judge, before permitting a witness to affirm under this section, to inquire into his ground of objection, and to ascertain whether he objects because he has no religious belief, or because the taking of an oath is contrary to his religious belief (R. v. Moore, (1892) 61 L.J.M.C. 80).

A witness called merely for the purpose of producing a document need not be sworn (Perry v. Gibson, (1834) 1 A. and E. 48). As to dying declaration, see p. 270, post. Certain witnesses need not be sworn.

The Children Act, 1908, 8 Edw. 7, c. 67, s. 30, provides that on the hearing of certain charges the unsworn evidence of the child in respect of whom the offence is charged to have been committed, or any other child of tender years, shall be admissible if the court is satisfied that the child does not understand the nature of an oath, but is possessed of sufficient intelligence to justify the reception of the evidence, and to understand the duty of speaking the truth. The cases in which such unsworn testimony is allowable are as follows:—Offences against Part I. of the Children Act, 1908; any offence under ss. 27, 55, or 56 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100); any offence against a child or young person<sup>1</sup> under ss. 5, 42, 43, 52, or 62 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, or under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69); any offence under the Dangerous Performances Acts, 1879 and 1897 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 34, 60 & 61 Vict. c. 52), and any other offence involving bodily injury to a child or young person. To warrant a conviction, the evidence must be corroborated (Children Act, 1908, s. 30). The giving of false evidence is punishable as perjury (ib.). The Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904, 4 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 15, enacts similar provisions in respect of any offence under that Act. As to when children may be sworn, see p. 262, post.

<sup>1</sup> For the purposes of the Act "child" means a person under fourteen; "young person" means a person fourteen or upwards and under sixteen, s. 131.

Certain witnesses need not be sworn.

Deaf and dumb witnesses.

A deaf and dumb person is a competent witness, and may be examined through an interpreter, if he is capable of conversing by signs, and understands the nature and obligation of an oath (Ruston's Case, (1786) Leach 408). If he is able to communicate his ideas perfectly by writing, that method is to be adopted (Morrison v. Leonard, (1827) 3 C. and P. 127).

The form of oath of the interpreter is as follows:—"I swear by Almighty God that I will well and truly interpret and explanation make to the court [and jury] and the witness of all such matters and things as shall be required of me, to the best of my skill and understanding."

An interpreter should also be sworn in case the prisoner or witness does not understand the English language.

Incompetent witnesses.
Defendant:
husband or wife of defendant.

The general rule in criminal cases<sup>1</sup> is, that husband and wife are not competent witnesses either for or against each other,<sup>2</sup> nor can a wife be a witness for or against any person indicted and tried jointly with her husband (R. v. Thompson, (1872) L.R. 1 C.C.R. 377), or vice versa (R. v. Brittleton (1884) 12 Q.B.D. 266). The rule does not apply when the husband or wife of the person tendered as a witness has already been acquitted or convicted, or is not included in the indictment, or is not being tried on it (Russell, 7th ed. 2279; R. v. Williams, (1838) 8 C. & P. 284; R. v. Thompson, (1863) 3 F. & F. 824).

The following are exceptions to the rule. In high treason,<sup>3</sup> cases of personal injury by husband upon wife, or by wife upon husband (1 Hale 301, charges of forcible abduction and subsequent marriage<sup>4</sup>; 2 Hawk, c. 46, s. 78), charges of larceny by one spouse from another under the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 45, s. 12; 47 & 48 Vict. c. 14, s. 1), the spouse of the party charged is a competent and compellable witness for the prosecution, but not for the defence. In charges of bigamy, the second wife or husband of the accused, on the first marriage and the existence of the first wife or husband being proved, can be examined like any other witness either for the defence or the prosecution (1 Hale 693; R. v. Young, (1847) 2 Cox 291).

The following are instances of statutory exceptions making it lawful for the defendant or the husband or wife of the defendant to be examined for the defence, but not, it is submitted, for the prosecution<sup>5</sup>:—Licensing Acts (see Licensing Act, 1872, s. 51);

<sup>5</sup> Some of the above statutes, e.g., the Law of Libel Amendment Act, 1888, expressly enact that the defendant and the husband or wife of the defendant shall be competent, but not compellable, witnesses. The other statutes are not so express, but their language, it is submitted (e.g., "if he think fit," "competent witness," "competent to give evidence") bears out the statement in the text. See also the Criminal Evidence (E.) Act, 1898, s. 1.

Incompetent witnesses.
Defendant: husband or wife of defendant.

A defendant<sup>2</sup> is made a competent but not a compellable witness under the following statutes:—Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 77, s. 34); Explosives Act, 1875, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 17, s. 87 (as to charges specified in that section); Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1881, 50 & 51 Vict. c. 58, s. 62 (ii); Diseases of Animals Act, 1894, 57 & 58 Vict. c. 57, s. 57 (3); Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, 57 & 58 Vict. c. 60, s. 45 (1) (2) (as to indictments for sending or taking an unseaworthy ship to sea).

Under the Law of Evidence Act, 1877, 40 & 41 Vict. c. 14, s. 1, the wife or husband of any defendant is made a competent and compellable witness in the following cases,<sup>3</sup> i.e.:—any indictment or proceeding for the non-repair of any public highway or bridge, or nuisance to any public highway, river, or bridge, or indictment or proceeding instituted for the purpose of trying or enforcing a civil right only.

The exclusion of a husband or wife extends only to lawful marriage (see Batthews v. Galindo, (1828) 4 Bing. 610). Taylor (Evidence, 10th ed., p. 971) suggests that a husband or wife can be examined on the voir dire as to the validity of the marriage. The wife of the prosecutor is not excluded as a witness for the Crown or defendant (Taylor, 10th ed., p. 970).

There is no statutory provision as to whether, in cases in which the defendant is a competent witness, the prosecutor or the judge, in the case of the non-production of the defendant, is entitled to comment upon the fact. The Criminal Evidence Act (England), 1898, which enables the prisoner in all cases to go into the witness-box, expressly forbids (s. 1) the prosecutor to comment upon the fact that the prisoner has not seen fit to tender himself as a witness, but this does not prevent the judge from doing so (R. v. Saunders,

witnesses.

(1898 63 J.P. 24; R. v. Rhodes, (1899) 1 Q.B. 77. Strictly speaking, it seems that in Ireland the judge and counsel for the Crown are at liberty to comment on the non-production of the defendant in a case<sup>1</sup> in which he is a competent witness.

Children.

No age limit, statutable or otherwise, is laid down to determine the competency of children to be sworn and give evidence. The competency depends, in each particular case, on whether, in the opinion of the court, the child understands the nature of an oath. The court must be satisfied that the child feels the binding obligation of an oath from the general course of his religious<sup>2</sup> education; the effect of the oath upon the conscience of the child should arise from religious feelings of a permanent nature, and not merely from instructions, confined to the nature of an oath, recently communicated to him for the purpose of the trial (Russell, 7th ed., 2267; R. v. Williams, (1836) 7 C. & P. 321). As to when the unsworn testimony of children may be admitted, see p. 259, ante.

Persons mentally incapable.

If a question arises as to the competency of a witness by reason of an allegation of mental incapacity, this is for the court to determine. The objection should be taken before the witness is sworn, or during his examination, at either of which times witnesses may be called to prove or rebut the allegation; but the objection cannot be taken after the conclusion of the witness's examination (Russell, 7th ed., 2262; R. v. Whithead, (1866) L.R. 1 C.C.R., 33). Deaf and dumb persons were formerly, in presumption of law, idiots (R. v. Steel, (1787) 1 Leach 451), but this is not so now (Harrod v. Harrod, (1854) 1 K. & J. 4), though care should be taken in the admission of their testimony. As to the admissibility of the deposition of a witness who has become permanently insane before the trial, see p. 288, post. The onus of proving incompetency on the ground of mental incapacity lies on the party objecting to the witness (Harrod v. Harrod, supra).

As has been seen, in an application to bind to the peace, the defendant cannot produce any evidence (Lort v. Hutton, (1876) 33 L.T. 730; Ex parte Tanner, (1889) Judgments of the Superior Courts, 340, noted p. 37, ante); and, strictly speaking, the defendant is not entitled, on the preliminary investigation of an indictable offence, to call evidence (see p. 23, ante).

Relevant evidence only
admissible.

Some observations are necessary as to what is admissible evidence, and the manner of examination. A criminal charge is perhaps more often proved by circumstantial than by direct evidence. A is charged with housebreaking; a constable swears he saw A break into the house; that is direct evidence. But no person having seen A break into the house, proof is given (1 that A had, shortly before the date of the offence, bought a housebreaking implement, (2) that such implement was found in the house broken into, (3) that footprints in the garden corresponded with prints made by boots found in A's possession: this evidence is circumstantial.

<sup>1</sup> The Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, also forbids the cross-examination of the prisoner as to character or previous conviction, unless (inter alia) where he has given evidence of his own good character; but there seems to be nothing to prevent a prosecutor in Ireland from cross-examining a prisoner who is examined as to character and previous convictions. The Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, applies to prosecutions under the Motor Car Act, 1903 (see s. 19 (4) of that Act), but this seems the only instance of its application in Ireland.

Relevant evidence only
admissible.

In the case above given, the connection between the facts proved by the circumstantial evidence and the principal fact, or fact to be proved (the housebreaking), is obvious, and the evidence therefore is clearly relevant. But where evidence is tendered to prove facts which have no apparent connection with the fact to be proved, or where the suggested connection is too remote, the evidence is irrelevant and inadmissible. The general rule is that the evidence should be confined to matters relevant to the issue, and that all evidence of collateral facts, which are incapable of affording any reasonable presumption as to the principal matters in dispute, shall be excluded (Taylor, 10th ed., p. 250). For instance, if the charge be one of selling adulterated milk to A, evidence that the defendant sold adulterated or unadulterated milk to B, would not be evidence either to prove or disprove the charge (see Holcombe v. Hewson, (1810) 2 Camp. 391), unless there was evidence to show that the milk sold to A and the milk sold to B formed portion of the same bulk. On the ground of irrelevancy, evidence that the prisoner has, on previous occasions, been guilty of similar offences is generally inadmissible (R. v. Butler, (1846) 2 C. & K. 221; Makin v. A.-G. of N.S. Wales, (1894) A.C. 57).

On the ground of irrelevancy, and also on the ground that the law requires the best evidence, proof of res inter alios actae, that is, acts and declarations of persons, other than the accused, to which the accused is neither party nor privy (Best, 10th ed. p. 95), is generally inadmissible. Res inter alios actae.

There are some apparent, and some real, exceptions to the rule that proof of res inter alios actae is not admissible:—(1) declarations forming part of the res gestae, which term may be defined as meaning all facts so connected with the fact in issue as to introduce it, explain its nature, or form in connection with it one continuous transaction; (2) in certain cases, statements made by a servant in the course of his master's business, though not forming part of the res gestae, are probably admissible;<sup>1</sup> (3) on a charge of conspiracy, evidence of acts or declarations by one conspirator is admissible;<sup>2</sup> (4) evidence is admissible for the purpose of showing knowledge, intent, or a systematic course of dealing;<sup>3</sup> (5) evidence of acts other than those actually charged are sometimes made admissible by statute;<sup>4</sup> (6) on a charge of offences against women, the character of the prosecutrix, and complaints made by her, are admissible;<sup>5</sup> (7) evidence of character may be given on behalf of a prisoner;<sup>6</sup> and (8) dying declarations.<sup>7</sup>

If a statement explains, and is contemporaneous with, a material fact, it is admissible; and this has been extended to cases where the statement, though not absolutely contemporaneous with the fact, is made so soon after it as to be "an incident of the event under consideration" (Taylor, 10th ed. 412). In such a case, the statement is said to form part of the res gestae. Thus, on the trial of Lord George Gordon for treason,<sup>8</sup> the cry of the mob who accompanied the prisoner, was received in evidence, as forming part of the res gestae, Exceptions:

(1) Res gestae. and showing the character of the principal fact. But what is part of the res gestae has been the subject of considerable divergence of judicial opinion. In R. v. Foster, (1834) 6 C. & P. 325, it was held, on the hearing of a charge of manslaughter, that a statement as to how the accident happened, made by the deceased immediately after he was knocked down, was admissible (see also R. v. Tunny, (1852) 6 Cox 477). In R. v. Bedingfield, (1879) 14 Cox 341, the deceased, with her throat cut, ran out of a house, in which the prisoner was, shouting, "See what Harry Bedingfield has done," and Cockburn, C. J., refused to admit the exclamation in evidence (see also R. v. Goddard, (1882) 15 Cox 7). Statements made by the deceased immediately after an assault on him, and while fleeing from his assailant, while under apprehension of further danger, were considered by the Supreme Court of Canada to form part of the res gestae (Gilbert v. R., (1907) 38 Canada S. C. 284; and see Aveson v. Kinnaird, (1805) 6 East 188, 193). The fact of a statement having been made, though in the absence of the accused, is, of course, always admissible, though the statement itself is not; the form in which the question is put being, "Did X make a statement to you?" "In consequence of that statement did you arrest the prisoner?" (see R. v. Wainwright, (1875) 13 Cox 171).

(2) Statements by servant. A master is, in certain cases, criminally responsible for the acts of his servant, the principle of the liability being that, having regard to the language, scope, and objects of the statute in question, the legislature intended to fix criminal responsibility upon the master for acts done by his servant in the course of his employment, although such acts were not authorized by the master, and might have been expressly forbidden by him (see judgment of Lord Russell of Killowen, C. J., in Coppen v. Moore (No. 2), (1898) 2 Q. B. 306). Instances of the liability are found in the Licensing Acts (Commissioners of Police v. Cartman, (1896) 1 Q. B. 615), and the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (Coppen v. Moore, supra); see further, chapter MASTER AND SERVANT, p. 292. It follows from this that acts and declarations of the servant, forming part of the res gestae of the occurrence, are admissible in evidence against the master. In A.-G. v. Good, (1825) M.C. & Y. 286, customs officers went to the defendant's house to search. The defendant's wife opened the door, and being asked if her husband was at home, answered, contrary to the fact, that he was in the country. The officers then entered and found the defendant and others within. It was held that the wife's statement was admissible as a proof of a denial being falsely made, and part of the res gestae.

Generally speaking, however, the acts and declarations of a servant are not admissible unless they form part of the res gestae, on the principle that "the admission or declaration of an agent binds his principal only when made during the continuance of the agency in regard to a transaction then depending, et dum ferret opus" (Taylor, 10th ed., 424). But it is submitted that, where a master entrusts the carrying on of his business to a servant, and is charged with an offence in respect of the act of such servant, the acts and declarations of the servant, though not forming part of the res gestae of the offence charged, are admissible, if such acts and declarations are done or made under such circumstances as lead to the inference that the servant is impliedly authorized to do or make them. In an action against a pawnbroker and another for detention of the plaintiff's plate, value for £200, the sole evidence against the pawnbroker was that of a witness who stated that, at the house of the plaintiff's attorney, he heard the pawnbroker's shopman say that it was a hard case, for his master had advanced all the money on the plate, at 5 per cent. Tyndal, C.J., in holding that the evidence was not admissible, said—"If the transaction out of which this suit arises had been one in the ordinary trade or business of the defendant as a pawnbroker, in which trade the shopman was agent or servant to the defendant, a declaration of such agent that his master had received the goods, might probably have been evidence against the master, as it might be held to be within the scope of such agent's authority to give an answer to such an inquiry made by any person interested in the goods deposited with the pawnbroker" (Garth v. Howard, (1832) 8 Bing. 451, at p. 453). In revenue and licensing cases, in which the master is very closely identified with the acts of his servant (see A.-G. v. Allen, (1850) Ct. Exch. 29th November; <sup>1</sup> Massey v. Morris, (1894) 2 Q.B. 412, 414; see also p. 293, post), it is probable that an implied authority to do the act or make the declaration would be more freely inferred than in other cases. In A.-G. v. Williams, (1813) cited Manning's Exchequer, at p. 277, in an information for pressing the couch, discovered by suddenly forcing open the malt-house door, Gibbs, C.B., admitted declarations made by the defendant's maltmen to one another, though on a subsequent day, with reference to the means of discovery.

The reasons for the admission of such evidence seem to be particularly strong where the evidence is tendered for the purpose of explaining the nature and quality of the act charged, in cases in which the act is an offence or not, according to the state of mind or belief of the person doing it—that is, in the instances under discussion, the servant. Thus, on a charge against A, a licensed publican, of permitting drunkenness, proof is given that B, the manager in charge of A's shop, and in A's absence, allowed X, who was drunk, to enter and remain in the shop. This will be an offence according as B knew or did not know of the condition of X. A police constable afterwards calls to A's shop to investigate the occurrence, and, in answer to the constable's inquiries, B states that he noticed that X. was drunk when he entered the shop. It is submitted that evidence of such statement is admissible in chief<sup>2</sup> for the purpose of showing guilty knowledge on the part of B, for which guilty knowledge the master is<sup>3</sup> responsible.<sup>4</sup> In Worth v. Brown, (1898) noted 62 J.P. 658, the defendant was charged with permitting drunkenness. The defendant was not himself in charge of the bar, but his barmaid was. It was held that statements made in the presence of the barmaid at the time the drunken person was found were evidence.

<sup>4</sup> The fact that the statute (Licensing (Ir.) Act, 1874, s. 23) gives a constable a right to enter licensed premises for the purpose of preventing or detecting any breach of the law would, perhaps, provide an additional reason why answers to such constable, by the person in charge, should be admitted.

(2) Statements by servant. The admission of this evidence was clearly right upon the ground that it formed part of the res gestae; but the observations of Collins, J., in the course of the argument, are pertinent to the question under discussion. "Substitute the knowledge of the barmaid for the knowledge of the licensed person, then anything said in the presence of the substituted person is the same as if it were said in the presence of the licensed person"; and again, "Evidence of knowledge in the shape of statements made in her presence, not contradicted by her, become admissible. Put the master out of the case for the purposes of this discussion, she is now substituted for the master, and her knowledge is substituted for his. Anything that proves her knowledge is admissible."

The proposition submitted, that, in certain cases, statements made by a servant, in the absence of his master, and not forming part of the res gestae, are admissible as evidence against the master does not conflict in any way with Dwyer v. Larkin, (1904) 39 I.L.T.R. 40, 5 N.I.J.R. 25. In that case a publican was charged with having sold drink to a drunken man on the 24th July. The man having died, an inquest was held on the 25th July, at which the publican's assistants, who were examined as witnesses, admitted they supplied the deceased with drink on the previous day. Held, that evidence of such admissions was not admissible. "We are all of opinion that these assistants had not on the occasion in question any authority in reference to a transaction that was passed and gone to make a statement so as to affect the publican with liability, the statement being made at an inquest" (ib., per Lord O'Brien, L.C.J.).

(3) Conspiracy Where several are proved to have acted in concert in the preparation or commission of a crime, the acts and declarations of one in furtherance of that design may be received in evidence against another, though not present when the acts were done or the declarations made; and it makes no difference as to the admissibility of the act or declaration of one conspirator against another, whether the former is or is not indicted or tried with the latter (Russell, 7th ed. 2097). When the evidence of a criminal conspiracy is proved, evidence of acts committed in pursuance of the criminal purpose prior to the date when the defendant joined may be given in evidence, not for the purpose of fixing him with responsibility for such acts, but to show the nature of the conspiracy (R. (Shaw) v. Dwyer, (1890) 24 I.L.T.R. 111; O'Keeffe v. Walsh, (1903) 2 I.R. 651).

(4) Intent, &c. Evidence of facts not directly relating to the transaction charged is admissible for the purpose of showing knowledge, intent, or a systematic course of dealing, or to rebut evidence of accident or the like. On a charge against a woman of poisoning her husband by arsenic, evidence was held to be rightly received of the deaths at other times of her sons, whose food she had prepared, from arsenical poisoning (R. v. Geering, (1849) 18 L.J.M.C. 215; see also R. v. Cotton, (1873) 12 Cox 400, R. v. Roden, (1874) 12 Cox 630, R. v. Colclough, (1882) 10 L.R.I. 241, Budd v. Lucas, (1891) 1 Q.B. 408). In R. v. Neill, (1892) Sessions Papers CXVI., 1417 (Kenny's Criminal Law Cases, p. 483), on an indictment for the murder of a woman by strychnine, evidence that the prisoner had caused the deaths of three other women by strychnine, and attempted to administer the poison to a fourth, was held admissible. On a charge of knowingly uttering forged bank notes or spurious coin, possession of other forged notes or bad coin is admissible as showing (4) Intent, &c. guilty knowledge (R. v. Forster, (1855) Dears 456). On a charge of obtaining money by the false pretence, contained in an advertisement, that the person would find employment for those who answered the advertisement and sent a fee, letters found upon him, and letters addressed to him, but intercepted by the postal authorities, though not from the parties in respect of whom the specific charge was made, were held admissible (R. v. Cooper, (1875) 1 Q.B.D. 19). Such documents are admissible without proof of their authenticity (ib.); as also are papers found in prisoner's possession without proof that they are in his handwriting (1 East P.C. 119). On a charge of feloniously using instruments with intent to procure miscarriage, evidence was tendered to show that the prisoner some nine months before had used similar instruments upon another woman with the avowed intention of producing miscarriage, and had then used expressions tending to show he was in the habit of performing similar operations for the same illegal purpose. On a case stated, it was held by Kennedy, Darling, Jelf, Bray, and Lawrence, JJ., Alverstone, C.J., and Ridley, J., diss., that the evidence was rightly admitted (R. v. Bond, (1906) 2 K.B. 389). The various cases in which previous similar acts have been allowed to be proved are very fully discussed in the judgments in the last case.<sup>1</sup>

In a prosecution against workmen for wrongfully and without legal authority besetting, as the intention of the defendants is in question, the justices are entitled to receive and act upon evidence of previous acts of the accused, and should consider the character of the meeting and of the circumstances of the acts, and determine whether the parties were acting merely for the purpose of peacefully obtaining or communicating information, or of peacefully persuading any person to work or to abstain from work (Toppin v. Ferron, (1909) 43 I.L.T.R. 190).

On a charge of obtaining credit by fraud, it was proved that the defendant hired furnished apartments from the prosecutrix for three days, when he left without paying for them or the food supplied to him. Evidence was held rightly admitted that a short time previously the defendant had gone to several houses and hired apartments and left without paying, and that he still owed the money when he went to the house of the prosecutrix, on the ground that the evidence tended to establish a systematic course of conduct, and negated any accident or mistake, or the existence of any reasonable or honest motive, on the part of the defendant (R. v. Wyatt, (1904) 1 K.B. 188; see also R. v. Francis, (1874) L.R. 2 C.C.R. 128).

But a prisoner who is charged with swindling in a particular manner cannot be proved guilty by showing that, on other occasions, <sup>1</sup> In a recent licensing prosecution at Bray, Co. Wicklow, for selling liquor on a certain Sunday, evidence was given that the same persons came in, Sunday after Sunday, from outside the three-mile limit, and spent most of their time in Bray in drinking in defendant's premises. It is clear, it is submitted, that such evidence was clearly admissible, both for the purpose of showing that they came merely for the purpose of drink, and of showing that the defendant knew it (see Penn v. Alexander, (1893) 1 Q.B. 532, noted in CATALOGUE OF SUMMARY OFFENCES—"INTOXICATING LIQUOR"). And it is further submitted that in a like prosecution evidence of a general rush of alleged "travellers," Sunday after Sunday, into a tavern, even without proof that they were the same persons every Sunday, is some evidence—though opinions would probably differ widely as to the weight of it—on the question of the knowledge of the defendant that the alleged "travel" by such persons was a mere sham for the purpose of enabling them to get drink.

(4) Intent, &c. he was guilty of swindling in an entirely different manner. A defendant was charged with obtaining a pony and trap by the false pretence that he wanted them for his sick wife who could not come to select them herself. The prosecution gave evidence that he had obtained oats and provender from two other people by the false pretence that he was living at a certain address to which stables were attached. Held that such evidence did not go to prove that he was guilty of the charge laid, and was inadmissible (R. v. Fisher, (1910) 1 K.B. 149; see also R. v. Ellis, (1910) 2 K.B. 746).<sup>1</sup>

The fact that such previous transactions have themselves been the subject of a charge upon which the defendant has been acquitted does not render them inadmissible (R. v. Ollis, (1900) 2 Q.B. 758).

Where the offence charged is one of a continuing character, e.g., using premises for the purposes of betting, evidence of user of the premises on occasions other than that charged is not alone admissible (R. v. Mean, (1904) 21 T.L.R. 172), but necessary (McConnell v Brennan, (1908) 2 I.R. 411) to sustain the charge. On an application to bind to the peace, evidence may be given of the defendant's general course of conduct (R. v. Dunn, (1840) 12 A. & E. 599; Ex parte Hulsc, (1851) 21 L.J.M.C. 21; R. v. Queen's Co. JJ., (1882) 10 L.R.I. 294).

In a prosecution under the Weights and Measures Act, 1878, s. 26, against a grocer for fraud in weighing tea by adding the paper wrapper to the tea in the pan of the scales, it was held that evidence of an alleged custom of grocers to weigh tea in the wrapper should have been admitted as bearing on the question of fraud under the section (R. v. Spencer, (1904) 20 Cox 692).

(5) Statutory provisions as to acts other than those charged.

A person shall not be summarily convicted of an offence against Part II. of the Children Act, 1908, or of an offence mentioned in the First Schedule to the Act, unless the offence was wholly or partly committed within six months before the information was laid: but, subject as aforesaid, evidence may be taken of acts constituting, or contributing to constitute, the offence, and committed at a previous time (Children Act, 1908, 8 Edw. 7, c. 67, s. 32 (3)).

Where proceedings are taken against any person for having received goods, knowing them to be stolen, or for having in his possession stolen property, evidence may be given at any stage of the proceedings that there was found in the possession of such person other property stolen within the preceding period of twelve months: and on the like charge, if evidence has been given that the stolen property has been found in his possession, then if such person has within five years immediately preceding been convicted of any offence involving fraud or dishonesty, evidence of such previous conviction may be given at any stage of the proceedings, provided that not less than seven days' previous notice in writing shall have been given to the accused that proof is intended to be given of such previous conviction (Prevention of Crime Act, 1871, 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112, s. 19). Service of such notice and proof of the previous conviction do not relieve the prosecution from the necessity of proving that the prisoner knew the goods were stolen (R. v. Davis, (1870) L.R. 1 C.C.R. 272). The words "preceding period of twelve months" refer to the twelve months preceding the commencement of the proceedings against the accused, and not to the period preceding the commission of the offence charged (R. v. Harding (No. 2), (1909) 53 S.J. 762).

The law as to statements made by persons upon whom a rape or indecent assault has been attempted or perpetrated is definitely settled by the cases of R. v. Lillyman, (1896) 2 Q.B. 167, and R. v. Osborne, (1905) 1 K.B. 551, which establish the following rules:— (1) where a complaint has been made within a short time after the occurrence, the fact of the complaint having been made and the particulars of such complaint are admissible, though they form no part of the res gestae; (2) they are so admissible whether consent is or is not a material element in the charge; (3) they are so admissible where the statement or complaint is made in answer to such natural questions as “What is the matter?” or “Why are you crying?”; (4) but are not so admissible if made in answer to questions of a suggestive or leading character, such as “Did A. B. assault you?” “Did he do this and that to you?” The principle upon which such statements are admitted has been said to be, not that they are evidence of the acts complained of, but that they are evidence of the consistency of the conduct of the prosecutrix with the story told by her in the witness-box, and are inconsistent with her consent to that of which she complains (per Hawkins, J., in R. v. Lillyman, supra, at p. 170). As to the time within which the complaint must be made, the rule is, that it must be made, not on the earliest possible opportunity, but on the first opportunity which reasonably offers (R. v. Osborne, (1905) 1 K.B. 551, 561; R. v. Kiddle, (1898) 19 Cox 77). A complaint made on Monday, Saturday being the date of the alleged offence, and there having been reasonable opportunities of making the complaint in the meantime, was held too late (R. v. Ingrey, (1900) 64 J.P. 106).

When the prosecutrix is not produced, apparently the evidence is not admissible (R. v. Guttridge, (1840) 9 C. & P. 471; R. v. Cuffe, (1904) 4 N.I.J.R. 144).

In prosecutions for rape, or attempted rape, the character of the prosecutrix is relevant, and may be impeached by general evidence (R. v. Clarke, (1817) 2 Starke N.P. 241), as, for instance, that she had been seen on the town as a reputed prostitute (R. v. Clay, (1851) 5 Cox 146). Where such evidence is given, rebutting evidence is allowable (R. v. Tessington, (1843) 1 Cox 48). If the prosecutrix denies having had previous immoral relations with the prisoner, evidence can be given to contradict her (R. v. Riley, (1887) 18 Q.B.D. 481), but the prisoner is bound by her answer denying immoral relations with other men (R. v. Holmes, (1871) L.R. 1 C.C.R. 334).

The term “character” does not mean “disposition,” but reputation amongst one’s neighbours (R. v. Rowton, (1865) 34 L.J.M.C. 57; Leader v. Yell, (1864) 16 C.B.N.S. 595). The prisoner is entitled to call evidence of his good character, that is, his general reputation, evidence of particular acts or the particular opinion of the witness being inadmissible (J. Anson v. Stuart, (1787) 1 T.R. 754). If the prisoner gives such evidence, the prosecutor may call evidence of the prisoner’s general reputation for bad character (R. v. Rowton, supra). For the purpose of impeaching the credibility of a witness, evidence may be produced of the general reputation of the witness for lying (Taylor, 10th ed., 1065); and it seems unsettled whether, in such a case, evidence as to the witness’s entire moral character can be given

(7) Character.

(ib. 1066). But evidence that the witness has a reputation for veracity will thereupon be allowed (Taylor, 10th ed., p. 1070).

The wording of section 20 of the Petty Sessions Act seems to give the prosecutor, in cases triable summarily, power to call evidence in reply, save where the defendant's evidence has been confined to his general character.

(8) *Dying
declarations.*

The admissibility of dying declarations furnishes an exception, not alone to the rule that statements made behind the back of the prisoner cannot be given in evidence against him, but also to the rule that all evidence must be given on oath. In cases of homicide, the declaration of the deceased, after the mortal blow, as to the fact itself and the party by whom it was committed is admissible, if at the time of making such declaration the declarant had an unqualified and hopeless belief in the nearness of death. It must be shown that at the time the statement was made, the death of the declarant was imminent, and that he had abandoned all hope of living, i.e., believed that the death must follow; but it is not necessary to prove that the declarant believed that death would ensue immediately (R. v. Perry, (1909) 2 K.B. 697; cf. R. v. Curmane, (1903) 4 N.L.J.R. 49). It is not, however, necessary that the declaration should show upon its face that it was made under such circumstances as would render it admissible in evidence as a dying declaration; that is a fact dehors the declaration, and may be proved by parol testimony R. v. Hunt, (1847) 2 Cox (239). The declaration may be oral or in writing, and need not be made to a justice of the peace. The fact that the declaration consists of answers to leading questions does not make it inadmissible (R. v. Smith, (1865) 10 Cox 82; R. v. FitzPatrick, 22 Nov., 1910, C.C.R. (Ir.) unreported;<sup>1</sup> see also R. v. Whitmarsh, (1898) 62 J.P. 711; & cf. R. v. Smith, (1901) 17 T.L.R. 522). But where a written statement was brought to a justice by the father of the dying person, and the justice interrogated the dying person thereon paragraph by paragraph, the declaration was held inadmissible, because the justice should not have trusted to the relation of a third party, but should have taken down the deceased's declaration from her own lips, or at least have taken it down in her presence (R. v. FitzGerald, (1841) Ir. Cir. R. 168).

The fact that the declaration is made upon oath will not render it inadmissible (R. v. Woodcock, (1789) 1 East P.C. 356; R. v. Dingley, (1791) 2 Leach 561; R. v. Callaghan, (1793) McNally Ev. 385).

The dying declaration of a child of ten has been admitted (R. v. Perkins, (1840) 2 Moo. C.C. 135).

The fact that a declaration was made as the result of earnest solicitations does not make it inadmissible (R. v. Whitworth, (1858) 1 F. & F. 382).

Evidence of this description is only admissible where the death of the deceased is the subject of the charge, and the circumstances of the death the subject of the declaration (Mead's Case, (1824) 2 B. & C. 605, 608; R. v. Hutchinson, (1822) 2 B. & C., 608 n; R. v. Hind, (1860) 8 Cox 300). Where a charge of murder was preferred against A, a dying declaration made by B, confessing that he had committed the murder in question, was held not admissible (R. v. Gray, (1841) Ir. Cir. R. 76). Dying declarations which are in the favour of the party charged are admissible (R. v. Seafie, (1836) 1 Moo. & Rob. 551).

Dying declarations are only admissible as to facts as to which the deceased declarant could have testified in the matter, and must be confined to what is relevant to the issue (Taylor, 10th ed., p. 512). Opinions as to the motive of the party charged expressed in the dying declaration would appear admissible (R. v. Scrafe, supra).

Whenever a dying declaration is admitted in evidence, all matters may be proved in order to contradict it, or in order to impeach or confirm the credit of the person who made it, which might have been proved if that person had been called as a witness, and had denied in cross-examination the truth of the matter suggested (Stephen, Evidence, 5th ed., p. 151.)

Where several offences are all parts of one entire transaction, evidence of all is admissible on the trial for any one of them, but where the offences are separate or distinct, it is not competent to prove the prisoner guilty of the crime charged by proving him guilty of another distinct offence, and the court may call on the prosecutor to elect as to which offence they will proceed with (Russell, 7th ed., pp. 2101, 2102).

As regards statements made in the presence of the accused, Hawkins, J., in a case where it was sought to put in evidence a statement of a co-prisoner read over by a police officer to the prisoner, laid down that a statement made in the accused's presence is not admissible unless evidence can be adduced which would justify the jury in finding that the accused, having heard the statement, and having the opportunity of explaining or denying it, and the occasion being one upon which he might reasonably be expected to make some observation, explanation, or denial, by his silence, conduct, or demeanour, or by the character of any observations or explanations he thought fit to make, substantially admitted the truth of the whole or some portion of it (R. v. Smith, (1897) 18 Cox, 470). But this statement of the law has since been disapproved by the Court of Criminal Appeal in England in R. v. Thompson, (1910) 1 K.B. 640, in which a statement made by a co-prisoner, and read over to the prisoner, who said it was a pack of lies, was admitted; but the court approved of the direction of the judge at the trial, who warned the jury that they were not to accept, even provisionally, anything in the statement as true, and must not allow it to prejudice them against the prisoner. The proper direction to a jury in such a case was again discussed by the Court of Criminal Appeal in England in R. v. Norton, (1910) 2 K.B. 496, and the following rules laid down:—The fact that a statement has been made in the presence of a prisoner upon an occasion on which he might reasonably be expected to make some observation, explanation, or denial may be given in evidence as introductory to or explanatory of the answer given by the prisoner. If the answer given, either by words or conduct, is such that an acknowledgment of the truth of a statement may be inferred, its contents may be given in evidence, and the question left to the jury whether or not the prisoner did in fact admit the truth of the statement. If the answer is not evidence from which such an acknowledgment may be inferred, the contents should be excluded. The contents of a statement should not be given unless the judge is satisfied that there is evidence fit to be submitted to the jury that the prisoner by his answer, whether given by words or conduct, acknowledged its truth in whole or in part. Unless the jury find as a fact that there was such an acknowledgment, they should be told to disregard the statement altogether.

Evidence of several offences.

Statements in presence of the accused.

The mere non-denial of an offence by a prisoner when formally charged on his arrest is not necessarily corroborative evidence (R. v. Tate, (1908) 2 K.B. 680, cf. R. v. Cramp, (1880) 14 Cox 390).

Confession or statement by accused.
General
principles.

A confession, to be admissible, must be free and voluntary. If it proceeds from remorse and a desire to make reparation for the crime, it is admissible. If it flows from hope or fear, incited by a person in authority, it is inadmissible. On this point the authorities are unanimous (per Cave, J., in R. v. Thompson, (1893) 2 Q.B. 12, 15). The prosecutor must show affirmatively, to the satisfaction of the judge, that the statement was not made under the influence of an improper inducement; and the judge, in the event of any doubt subsisting on this head, will reject the confession (R. v. Warringham, (1851) 2 Den. C.C. 447 n.; R. v. Thompson, (1893) 2 Q.B. 12, 16). In the last-named case the prisoner was tried for embezzling the money of a company. It was proved at the trial that, on being taxed with the crime by the chairman of the company, he said, "Yes, I took the money," and afterwards made out a list of the sums which he had embezzled, and with the assistance of his brother paid to the company a part of such sums. The chairman stated that at the time of the confession no threat was used, and no promise made, as regards the prosecution of the prisoner, but admitted that, before receiving it, he had said to the prisoner's brother, "It will be the right thing for your brother to make a statement," and the court drew the inference that the prisoner, when he made the confession, knew that the chairman had spoken these words to his brother. It was held that the confession of the prisoner had not been satisfactorily proved to be free and voluntary, and that, therefore, evidence of the confession ought not to have been received. As to the person by whom the inducement is offered, if the promise or threat be made by anyone having authority over the prisoner in connection with the prosecution—as, for instance, by the prosecutor, the master or mistress of the prisoner when the offence concerns such master or mistress, or by the relations and neighbours of the master and prosecutor, the chairman of the company which is prosecuting him, the constable or other officer having him in custody, a searcher of female prisoners who had no other duties or authority in gaol, a magistrate, or the like—the confession will be rejected as not being voluntary. The same rule will prevail, though the inducement was not actually offered by the person in authority, if it were held out by anyone in his presence, and he by his silence sanctioned it (Taylor, 10th ed., p. 614). If a threat or inducement is held out by a person not in authority, the confession is clearly admissible (R. v. Moore, (1852) 2 Den. 522). When promises or threats have been once used of such a nature as to render a confession inadmissible, all subsequent admissions of the same or the like facts will be rejected, unless from the length of time intervening, from proper warning of the consequences, or from other circumstances, there is good reason to presume that the delusive hope or fear which influenced the first confession has been effectually dispelled (Joy on Conf. 69). Where, however, it appears, to the satisfaction of the judge, that the improper influence was totally done away with before the confession was made, the evidence will be received (Taylor, 10th ed., p. 618). In the following case the effect of the original inducement was held to have been removed. A prisoner was told by the constable that it would be better for him to confess. On the hearing before the magistrate he asked if a confession would be beneficial to him; the magistrate replied that he could not say it would. On the way to prison the prisoner confessed to another constable, and when in prison to another magistrate (R. v. Rosier, (1821) 1 Phillips Ev., 10th ed. p. 414, see also R. v. Lingate, (1815, ib.). In the following case the effect of the inducement was held to continue. A prisoner at 10 a.m. was told by a constable that it would be better for him to confess. At 6 p.m. on the same day he confessed to another constable, after the latter had cautioned him (R. v. Doherty, (1874) 8 I.L.T.R. 192).

Confession or
accused

To exclude evidence of a confession, the inducement must relate to the actual charge, and be such as is calculated to influence the prisoner's mind with respect to his escape from the charge. A promise of some merely collateral benefit, e.g., to give the prisoner some spirits, or an inducement by spiritual exhortations, will not exclude the confession (Taylor, 10th ed., p. 619). The inducement, however, need not be made directly to the prisoner (R. v. Thompson, (1893) 2 Q.B. 12).

The admissibility depends upon the special facts in each case (R. v. Knight, (1905) 20 Cox 711). The following are further instances:—

Held admissible:—

Examples.
(1) Admissible.

R. v. Row, (1809) Russ & Ry, 153. Persons who had nothing to do with the arrest or examination of the accused admonished him in the presence of a constable to tell the truth.

R. v. Derrington, (1826) 2 C. & P. 418. Confession contained in a letter written by prisoner to his father, and handed by him to the turnkey who promised to post it, but instead sent it on to the prosecutor.

R. v. Gilham, (1828) 1 Moo. C.C. 186. Confession induced by persuasion of clergyman.

R. v. Simons, (1834) 6 C. & P. 541. What the accused has been overheard muttering to himself, or saying to his wife, or to any other person in confidence.

R. v. Parker, (1861) 8 Cox 465. Inducement held out by fellow-prisoner.

R. v. Jarvis, (1867) L.R. 1 C.C.R. 96. Prosecutor, the master of the prisoner, advised prisoner to answer any question truthfully.

R. v. Reeves, (1867) L.R. 1 C.C.R. 362. Mother telling her son to speak the truth. (See also R. v. Edwards, (1868) 33 J.P. 119.)

Held inadmissible:—

(2) Inadmissible.

R. v. Cass, (1784) 1 Leach, 2931 N. Prosecutor said, "I am in great distress about my irons, and if you will tell me where they are, I will be favourable to you."

R. v. Jones, (1809) R. & R. 152. "I only want my money; and if you give me that, you may go to the devil."

R. v. Partridge, (1836) 7 C. & P. 551. "If you will not tell all you know about it, of course we can do nothing."

R. v. Windsor, (1864) 4 F. & F. 360. Prisoner, who was charged with murder, said to female searcher, who was in room for purpose of searching her, but had no other duties or authority in the gaol: "If I tell the truth, shall I be hung?" and the searcher replied, "No; nonsense; you will not be hung."

Confession or statement by accused.

R. v. Fennell, (1881) 7 Q.B.D. 147. Prisoner's employer said to prisoner, "He" (the police inspector who was present) "tells me you are making housebreaking implements; if that is so, you had better tell the truth, it may be better for you."

R. v. Hatts, (1883) 49 L.T. 780, 48 J.P. 248. Employer said to prisoner, in presence of two police officers, "I know what has been going on. You had better speak the truth."

R. v. Mayorisk, (1898) 32 I.L.T.R. 56. A police constable arrested a woman on a charge of infanticide, and gave her the usual caution; some time after he urged her "to tell the truth" or "she had better tell the truth," and in consequence she made a statement to him. Madden, J., rejected the evidence.

R. v. Dennehy, (1902) 3 N.I.J.R. 154. The answers of a bankrupt to a series of questions put to him by the court messenger who, in the words of Barton, J., cross-examined him in a very searching way, and also the evidence given by the bankrupt before the Bankruptcy Court, which, when reduced to a deposition, the bankrupt had refused to sign, on the ground that he might incriminate himself, were rejected.

If a confession be made under improper inducement, so much thereof as relates clearly to any fact that may be discovered as the result of such confession may be proved. Thus, where a prisoner was improperly induced to make a confession of a burglary, in the course of which he said that he had thrown a lantern into a pond, the fact that he said so and the fact that the lantern was found there, were held admissible (R. v. Gould, (1840) 9 C. & P. 364; cf. R. v. Justices, (1822) R. & R. 492).

Statements made by a prisoner in an information, with a view to his being examined as a Crown witness, are not admissible in evidence for the purpose of implicating him in the offence the subject of the information (R. v. M'Hugh, (1857) 7 Cox 483). In that case the prisoner had made an information charging others with being engaged in an illegal conspiracy. The information was made while the prisoner was in custody. He sent for the magistrate, before whom he made the information voluntarily. Neither threat nor inducement had been used to procure a statement from the prisoner, neither was there any caution given him. The information was given in evidence against the prisoner when on trial for being engaged in the illegal conspiracy, for the purpose of corroborating an approver. Held, that the evidence should have been rejected.<sup>1</sup>

police.

Questions frequently arise as to the admissibility of statements made by an accused person to a police officer. If the statement be a free and voluntary statement, not made in reply to questions, the evidence is admissible, whether the statement was before, at, or after arrest, and whether the accused was cautioned or not (R. v. Gibney, (1822) Jebb, C.C. 15; R. v. Lavin, (1843) Ir. Cr. R. 813; R. v. Martin, (1841) Arm. Mac. and Og. 197; R. v. Long, (1833) 6 C. and P. 179). If the statement be made after caution, in reply to questions put by a police officer, the evidence has been held to be admissible, both after arrest (R. v. Best, 1909 1 K.B. 692, and, a fortiori, before arrest (R. v. Brackenbury, (1893) 17 Cox 628).<sup>2</sup> In R. v. Johnston, (1864)

<sup>2</sup> R. v. Gavin, (1885) 15 Cox 656, is overruled by R. v. Brackenbury, supra. In the circuit case of R. v. Devine, (1904) 38 I.L.T.R. 227, Palles, C.B., refused to admit such a statement, on the ground that it was not affirmatively proved to have been voluntary, and remarked that the English cases afford very little help, the relative positions of an Irish constable and English constable being different. As to what amounts to being in custody, see R. v. Booth, (1910) 74 J.P. 475.

15 I.C.L.R. 60, statements made by the accused, without caution, to a police constable in answer to questions put by him were held admissible, the case being apparently discussed, by the majority of the judges at all events, on the basis that the prisoner was not under arrest at the time (see judgment of Hayes, J., at p. 86; see also R. v. Dougal, (1903) 67 J.P. 325, R. v. Kershaw, (1902) 18 T.L.R. 357). In R. v. Hested, (1899) 19 Cox 16, Hawkins, J., refused to admit evidence of statements made by an accused person in prison, without caution, in answer to questions put by a police officer; but this point cannot be said to be settled.<sup>1</sup>

A confession, admission, or statement, although extra-judicial, if made by a person charged with a crime, is sufficient without independent proof of the commission of the crime to sustain a conviction (R. (Reddy) v. Sullivan, (1887) 16 Cox 347, 20 L.R.I. 550; R. v. Unkles, (1873) I.R. 8 C.L. 50). In cases of murder or manslaughter, a confession should not be acted upon without evidence of the corpus delicti by proof of the act done, or of the body being found dead, and found dead under circumstances which raise a presumption that the deceased came by his death by unlawful means (R. (Reddy) v. Sullivan, 20 L.R.I., at p. 570; R. v. Kersey, (1908) 21 Cox 690).

By the Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 14, when the examination of the witnesses for the prosecution shall have been completed, the justices shall read, or cause to be read, to the accused person the several depositions, and then take down in writing the statement of such person (having first cautioned him that he is not obliged to say anything unless he desires to do so, but that whatever he does say will be taken down in writing, and may be given in evidence against him on his trial); and whatever statement the said person shall then make in answer to the charge, shall, when taken down in writing, be read over to him and signed by the justice, and shall be forwarded with the depositions, and may be given in evidence without any further proof. If the caution be not given, the statement cannot be used against the prisoner (see R. v. Sansome, (1850) 3 C. & K. 332). These provisions apply only to the formal statement which may be made by the accused after the depositions are complete, and do not prevent any statement made by him before the depositions are completed being given in parol evidence against him (Taylor, 10th ed., p. 630, R. v. Stripp, (1850) Dears, 648).

But statements made in answer to questions put by the justices, without caution, are not admissible (R. v. Pettit, (1850) 4 Cox 164; R. v. Berriman, (1854) 6 Cox 388).

<sup>1</sup> In R. v. Male, (1893) 17 Cox 689, Cave, J., thus stated the duties of police officers on the point:—"It is quite right for a police constable or any other police officer when he takes a person into custody to charge him and let him know what it is he is taken up for; but the prisoner should be previously cautioned, because the very fact of charging induces a prisoner to make a statement, and he should have been informed that such statement may be used against him. The law does not allow the judge or a jury to put questions in open court to prisoners, and it would be monstrous if the law permitted a police officer to go, without anyone being present to see how the matter was conducted, and put a prisoner through an examination, and then produce the effects of the examination against him. Under these circumstances, a policeman should keep his mouth shut and his ears open. He is not bound to stop a prisoner in making a statement; his duty is to listen and report, but it is quite another thing that he should put questions to prisoners. A policeman is not to discourage a statement, and certainly not to encourage one. It is no business of a policeman to put questions which may lead a prisoner to give answers on the spur of the moment, thinking perhaps he may get out of a difficulty by telling lies."

What a witness thinks is, generally speaking, not evidence. But opinions by expert or scientific witnesses are admissible, and when the belief of the witness is a relevant fact (e.g., the belief of the prosecutor, on a charge of obtaining money by false pretences) evidence of the witness's state of mind can be given. Evidence of character which may be given on behalf of a prisoner is also an exception.

Opinions are receivable in the evidence of experts, also in the case of non-experts, to prove (1) age (R. v. Cow, (1898) 1 Q.B. 179); (2) meaning of a threatening letter, semble also of a libel (R. v. Hendy, (1850) 4 Cox. 243; 3) handwriting; (4) identity of things or persons (Taylor, 10th ed., p. 1021).

questions.

In the examination by a party of his own witnesses, called the direct examination, or examination in chief, what are called "leading questions" are not usually allowed. A "leading question" is one which suggests to the witness the answer desired, or which, embodying a material fact, admits of a conclusive answer by a simple negative or affirmative (Taylor, 10th ed. p. 1011). But in matters that are really not in controversy, it is usual and proper for the advocate to lead the witness, as otherwise much time would be wasted, and sometimes, moreover, the nature of the subject-matter may require that a question be put in a more or less leading form.

Refreshing memory by memoranda

A witness may be allowed to refresh his memory by reference to an entry or record made either (1) by the witness himself, or (2) by some other person, and read or examined by the witness and found by him to be correct, while the facts are fresh in his memory. While it is not essential that the memorandum or entry should be made or examined at the time of the transaction, it must have been either made or examined by the witness at a time when the facts were fresh in his recollection. The document will not be allowed to be used if it is made merely for the purpose of the case. The document does not itself become evidence, the only purpose for which its use is allowable being to enable the witness to refresh his memory.

Documentary evidence.
principle.*

On the principle that the best evidence is required to prove any document, the original must be produced,<sup>1</sup> unless it has been lost or destroyed, or unless it is in the possession or power of the opposite party, who withholds it at the trial, and a written notice to produce the original has been duly served. After proof of the loss, &c., secondary evidence of its contents may be given.<sup>2</sup> A witness may be subpoenaed to produce documents (Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 13), and a witness who is subpoenaed merely to produce documents need not be sworn (Perry v. Gibson, (1834) 1. A. & E. 48). A magistrate, sitting in petty sessions, or in Dublin, in one of the Dublin metropolitan police courts, has jurisdiction under section 7 of the Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1879, in a criminal proceeding, to make an order for the prosecutor to inspect and take copies of entries in the books of a bank at which the defendant keeps an account (R. v. Kinghorn, (1908) 2 K.B. 949).

evidence of local, private, and personal Acts of Parliament. By the same statute, where any certificate, official or public document or documents, or proceeding of any corporation or joint stock or other company, or any certified copy of any document, bye-law, entry in any register or other book, or of any other proceeding, shall be admissible, they shall be admitted, if they purport to be sealed or impressed with a stamp, or sealed and signed, or signed alone as required, or impressed with a stamp and signed, as directed by the statute, without proof of the seal or stamp or signature, as the case may be, or of the official character of the person appearing to have signed the same. Evidence Act, 1845.

By the Evidence Act, 1851, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 14, whenever any book or other document is of such a public nature as to be admissible in evidence on its mere production from the proper custody, and no statute exists which renders its contents provable by means of a copy, any copy thereof or extract therefrom is admissible in evidence, provided it be proved to be an examined copy or extract, or provided it purport to be signed and certified as a true copy or extract by the officer to whose custody the original is entrusted; every such officer must furnish such certified copy or extract to any person applying at a reasonable time for the same, upon payment of a reasonable sum for the same, not exceeding fourpence per folio of ninety words.<sup>1</sup> Evidence Act, 1851.

By the Documentary Evidence Act, 1868, 31 & 32 Vict. c. 37, prima facie evidence of any proclamation, order, or regulation of the Sovereign, the Privy Council, the Commissioners of the Treasury, the Admiralty, Secretaries of State, Board of Trade, Poor Law Board, may be given by (1) a copy of the Gazette, or (2) a government printer's copy, or (3) in the case of a proclamation, order, or regulation of the Sovereign or Privy Council, by a certified copy certified by the clerk to the Privy Council, or by one of the Lords of the Privy Council, or (4) in the case of a proclamation, order, or regulation of the other departments named, a copy certified by the officials mentioned in the Schedule to the Act (s. 2). No proof is required of the handwriting or official position of the person giving the certificate (ib.). Gazette includes Dublin Gazette (s. 5). Documentary Evidence Act, 1868.

By the Documentary Evidence Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 9, the Act of 1868 is applied to proclamations, orders, or regulations of the Lord Lieutenant, acting either alone or with the advice of the Privy Council in Ireland; and it is enacted that the term "Privy Council" shall include the Privy Council in Ireland, or any committee thereof, and that the term "government printer" shall include any government printer in Ireland and any printer printing in Ireland under the authority of the government stationery office (s. 4). Documentary Evidence Act, 1882.

The Act of 1868 is extended to regulations, &c., of the Postmaster-General or any secretary or assistant secretary of the post office, and to Treasury warrants under the Post Office Acts by 8 Ed. 7, c. 48, s. 36, and, as amended by the Act of 1882, to orders, licences, certificates, and other instruments of the Department of Agriculture in Ireland by section 22 of the Agricultural and Technical Instruction (Ireland) Act, 1899, 62 & 63 Vict. c. 50, s. 21. The Act has been applied to rules, orders, or regulations of the English Local Govern- Further extension of Act of 1868.

ment Board by section 5 of the Local Government Board Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict., c. 70), but has not been extended to the Irish Local Government Board.

Proof of private, or local and personal acts.

Every Act passed since 1851 is to be deemed a public Act and judicially noticed without any proof, unless the contrary is expressly provided (Evidence Act, 1845, s. 3). Local and personal, or private, Acts passed before 1851, and containing no clause declaring them to be public, can be proved by production of a copy purporting to be a King's printer's copy (ib., s. 7; Documentary Evidence Act, 1882, s. 2).

Orders &c., of Local Government Board.

The Local Government Board for Ireland has an official seal (Local Government Board (Ir.) Act, 1872, 35 & 36 Vict. c. 69, s. 4). Any act to be done or instrument to be executed by or on behalf of the Local Government Board may be done or executed in the name of that board by the president, or by the under-secretary to the Lord Lieutenant, or by the vice-president, or by any person appointed by the president or vice-president to act on behalf of the vice-president. A rule, order, or regulation made by the Local Government Board shall be valid if it is made under the seal of the board, and signed by any of the above-mentioned persons.

Every document purporting to be a rule, order, or regulation of the Local Government Board, and to be sealed and signed by the president or the under-secretary to the Lord Lieutenant, or by the vice-president or by any person appointed by the president or vice-president to act on behalf of the vice-president, shall be received in evidence and be deemed to be a rule, order, or regulation duly made by the Board, unless the contrary is shown (Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898, 61 & 62 Vict. c. 37, s. 102). This section, however, only applies to the original document. There is no Irish section enacting that orders, &c., of the Local Government Board may be evidenced by a printer's copy; and therefore such orders, &c., must be proved either by (1) production of the original, (2) a certified copy under the Evidence Act, 1851,<sup>1</sup> or (3) the Gazette under the Public Health Act, 1878 (see next paragraph).

Under the Public Health (Ireland) Act, 1878, 41 & 42 Vict. c. 52, s. 265, the production of the Dublin Gazette containing the publication of any order of the Local Government Board shall be conclusive evidence of the making of the order, and all such facts and circumstances as were or shall be necessary to authorize the making of such order.<sup>2</sup>

generally.*

The statute conferring the power to make bye-laws usually directs the method of proof of (1) the making and (2) the publication; and compliance, therefore, with the particular statute is sufficient. Where a statute enacts that a written copy of the bye-law, if authenticated by the corporate seal of the body making the same, shall be prima facie evidence of the due making and existence of the bye law, such copy is evidence, not merely that the bye-law has been duly made, but also that all conditions precedent to its becoming a valid operative bye-law, such as the fixing of a copy of the bye-law for forty days on the town hall before it can come into force, have been complied with (Robinson v. Gregory, (1905) 1 K.B. 534).

<sup>2</sup> Quære application of this section to orders other than those under Public Health Acts. At any rate, the section will only apply where the orders, &c., are published in the Gazette.

The due making of the bye-laws of a railway company may be proved by an examined or certified copy under the hand of the secretary of the company in whose custody they are, and the due publication by proof that copies were affixed at the station or place where the offence was committed (Motteram v. Eastern Counties Ry. Co., (1859) 29 L.J.M.C. 57).<sup>1</sup>

Documentary evidence.
Bye-laws of railway company.

Proof of publication of the order of confirmation in a local newspaper is the proper evidence of the making, existence, and confirmation of bye-laws under the Towns Improvement Act, 1854, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 103, s. 57.

Bye-laws under Towns Improvement Act.

The Public Health (Ir.) Act, 1878, 41 & 42 Vict. c. 52, s. 223, provides that a copy of any bye-laws made under the Act by a sanitary authority, signed and certified by the clerk of such authority to be a true copy, and to have been duly confirmed, shall be evidence, until the contrary is proved, in all legal proceedings of the due making, confirmation, and existence of such bye-laws without further or other proof.

Bye-laws under Public Health Acts.

A county council have the same power of making bye-laws in relation to their county, or to any specified part or parts thereof, as the council of a borough have of making bye-laws in relation to their borough under sections 125-127 of the Municipal Corporations (Ir.) Act, 1840, 3 & 4 Vict. c. 108; and section 224 of the Public Health (Ir.) Act, 1878, shall apply to such bye-laws (Local Government (Ir.) Act, 1898, s. 16). Neither sections 125-127, nor any other sections of the Municipal Corporations (Ir.) Act, 1840, make any provision for the proof of bye-laws. Section 224 of the Public Health (Ir.) Act, 1878, is as follows:—"Bye-laws made by the council of any borough under the provisions of s. 125 of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 108, for the prevention and suppression of certain nuisances, shall not be required to be sent to the Lord Lieutenant, nor shall they be subject to the disallowance in that section mentioned; but all the provisions of this Act relating to bye-laws shall apply to the bye-laws so made, as if they were made under this Act." The effect of the above sections is that county councils have power to make two classes of bye-laws, that is to say, bye-laws for the good rule and government of the county, and bye-laws for the prevention and suppression of certain nuisances. Now, it will be noted that section 224 of the Public Health Act, 1878, only relates to bye-laws for the prevention and suppression of certain nuisances, and that, therefore, the application by it of "all the provisions of this Act," including section 223 of the Public Health (Ir.) Act, 1878, only extends to bye-laws as to nuisances. Consequently, while bye-laws as to nuisances may be evidenced as prescribed by s. 223 of the Public Health Act, 1878 (see supra), it would seem that, for the purpose of proving other bye-laws, the production of the original bye-law with the seal of the county council is requisite (see Timothy v. Fenn, (1910) 74 J. P. 123).

Bye-laws of county council.

Amongst statutes containing special provision for proof of bye-laws, regulations, orders, and entries are:—Fertilizers Act, 1906, 6 Edw. 7, c. 27, s. 3 (5), as to analyst's certificate, s. 8; Companies

Miscellaneous statutory provisions as to bye-laws, &c.

<sup>1</sup> As to bye-laws made between 9th November, 1846, and 10th November, 1851, a further proof seems to be requisite, namely, that a certified copy was sent to the Commissioners of Railways or Board of Trade, and that the bye-law has not been disallowed (Taylor, 10th ed., p. 1190).

Documentary
evidence.

Consolidation Act, 1908, 8 Edw. 7, c. 69, s. 243 (6), (7); Newspaper Libel and Registration Act, 1881, 44 & 45 Vict. c. 60, s. 15; The Evidence Act, 1845, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 113, s. 1; Law of Evidence Amendment Act, 1851, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, ss. 9, 10, as to public documents: Bankers' Books Evidence Acts, 42 & 43 Vict. c. 11, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 72, s. 11, 56 & 57 Vict. c. 69, s. 6; Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881, 44 & 45 Vict. c. 49, ss. 42, 48 (3); Registration of Births and Deaths (Ir.) Act, 1863, 26 & 27 Vict. c. 11, s. 5; Assurance Companies Act, 1909, 9 Ed. 7, c. 49, s. 21; Children Act, 1908, 8 Ed. 7, c. 67, s. 124, as to entries in wages books; Diseases of Animals Act, 1894, 57 & 58 Vict. c. 57, s. 37, as to orders and regulations of local authority.

Regulations
under Medical Acts.

Regulations under the Medical Acts cannot be proved by printed copies (R. v. Haddock, (1902) 2 N.I.J.R. 257); but printed copies of the register of pharmaceutical chemists, purporting to be printed and published in accordance with section 27 of the Pharmacy (Ireland) Act, 1875, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 57, are admissible without being certified by the registrar or countersigned by the president or members of the Pharmaceutical Society (Barrett v. Henry, (1904) 2 I.R. 693, 5 N.I.J.R. 8).

population.

A certificate purporting to be signed by the Registrar-General of Births, Deaths, and Marriages, is evidence of the population of any county, borough, town, district, or other area to which it refers (Census (Ir.) Act, 1910, 10 Ed. 7, & 1 Geo. 5, c. 8).

Newspapers evidence against proprietors and others.

A return under section 9 of the Newspaper Libel and Registration Act, 1881, 44 & 45 Vict. c. 60, is evidence of proprietorship, on the principle of the presumed continuance of a state of facts once proved (R. (Jennings) v. Lynham, 1902) 2 N.I.J.R. 292). The production of a copy of a newspaper purchased from a firm of news-agents, described in an advertisement in the paper as wholesale agents, and who were proved to have been supplied with the newspapers in pursuance of a wholesale order, and which advertisement stated that the paper had agents for sale throughout Ireland, is sufficient evidence of circulation to prove that incitement to conspiracy contained in the newspaper reached persons intended to be incited (R. (Lanktree) v. McCarthy, (1903) 2 I.R. 146).

In a prosecution against a newspaper proprietor for having unlawfully published a notice of the proceedings of an illegal association, with a view to promoting the objects of the association, passages in the defendant's newspaper were held to be evidence of the meeting of the association (R. (Reddy) v. Sullivan, (1887) 20 L.R.I. 550).

On a charge of using premises for betting purposes, a newspaper found therein is evidence of a public announcement that a certain race mentioned in the newspaper is to be run and that certain horses are to take part in; it and no evidence that the race was run is necessary (Bannon v. Breen, 17th November, 1910, K.B.D., Ireland, unreported<sup>1</sup>).

Certificates,
&c., made
evidence.

In R. v. Smith, (1896) 1 Q.B. 596, at p. 603, Hawkins, J., referring to an analyst's certificate under the Food and Drugs Acts, pointed out that it was the analyst's duty merely to analyze and report the result of the analysis, that the analyst had no right to report extraneous facts unconnected with the analysis, and that a certificate containing such extraneous facts would be inadmissible as evidence of such facts. And so, although, under the Diseases of Animals Act, 1894, 57 & 58 Vict. c. 57, s. 267, a certificate of the veterinary inspector under the Act, that an animal is or was affected with a disease specified in the certificate, is conclusive evidence of the matter certified (see Leonard v. Richards, (1891) 25 I.L.T.R. 58); it is clear that a statement in such certificate of, for instance, words spoken by the defendant at the time of the examination would not be evidence of such words, or of the ownership of the animal.

Secondary evidence of a document which has been destroyed is admissible (Oakey v. Stretton, (1884) 48 J.P. 709). Documentary evidence.
Secondary evidence of documents.

Where a document is in the possession of the accused, the rule that notice to produce should be served before secondary evidence of the contents is admissible applies to criminal as well as to civil cases (Taylor, 10th ed., p. 338), but this does not apply where, as in the case of a charge of larceny of a bill, or other written instrument, the defendant must know that he will be charged with possession (ib. p. 317).<sup>1</sup>

On a prosecution against the driver of a motor car for exceeding the speed limit, it is not necessary to give the defendant notice to produce his licence in order to let in evidence as to its contents by the police constable who stopped the car, and to whom the licence was produced by the driver at the time (Marshall v. Ford, (1908, 90 L.T. 796; Martin v. White, (1910) 1 K.B. 665); the reason being that the evidence is not tendered as evidence of the contents of the document, but as evidence of identity, based upon what took place between the prosecutor and the defendant at the time of the commission of the offence, the production of the licence being tantamount to a statement by the driver of his name, as if he showed the constable his visiting card.

Where an order by the Lord Lieutenant in Council is, under the statute, "to be published in the prescribed manner," publication is a condition precedent to its coming into force, and proof of such publication must be given (Walsh v. Somerville, (1888) 22 L.R.I. 314); but where a statute directs that a regulation shall be laid before Parliament, but does not import that the presentation to Parliament shall be a condition precedent to its operation, no proof of such presentation is necessary (Hepburn v. Wilson, (1902, 4 F. (Just. Cas. 18), Sess. Cas.). Publication of orders a condition precedent.

In all cases of summary jurisdiction a certificate of any order signed by the justice who shall have made the same, or by any other justice of the same petty sessions, shall on proof of the signature of the justice to the same be received as good evidence of the conviction or order in all courts of justice (Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 21). "A previous conviction may be proved in any legal proceeding whatever against any person by producing a record or extract of such conviction, and by giving proof of the identity of the person against whom the conviction is sought to be proved with the person appearing in the record or extract of conviction to have been convicted. A record or extract of a conviction shall in the case of an indictable Proof of previous conviction, &c.

offence consist of a certificate containing the substance and effect only (omitting the formal part of the indictment and conviction), and purporting to be signed by the clerk of the court, or other officer having the custody of the records of the court by which such conviction was made, or purporting to be signed by the deputy of such clerk or officer; and in the case of a summary conviction shall consist of a copy of such conviction purporting to be signed by any justice of the peace having jurisdiction over the offence in respect of which such conviction was made, or to be signed by the proper officer of the court by which such conviction was made, or by the clerk or other officer of any court to which such conviction has been returned. A record or extract of any conviction made in pursuance of this section shall be admissible in evidence without proof of the signature or official character of the person appearing to have signed the same. A previous conviction in any one part of the United Kingdom may be proved against a prisoner in any other part of the United Kingdom; and a conviction before the passing of this Act shall be admissible in the same manner as if it had taken place after the passing thereof. A fee not exceeding five shillings may be charged for a record of a conviction given in pursuance of this section. The mode of proving a previous conviction authorized by this section shall be in addition to, and not in exclusion of, any other authorized mode of proving such conviction" (Prevention of Crime Act, 1871, 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112, s. 18). See also p. 290, post.

It is probable that in a court like the Dublin metropolitan police court, in which minutes are kept, from which a formal order is subsequently drawn up, such minutes are evidence in the same court on the hearing of a subsequent charge (see Commissioners of Police v. Donovan, (1903) 1 K.B. 895).

In criminal proceedings<sup>1</sup> an unstamped document is admissible (Stamp Act, 1891, 54 & 55 Vict. c. 39, s. 14 (4)); but in civil cases an unstamped document shall not be admitted, unless on payment to the officer of the court of the stamp duty, the penalty, and £1 (ib., s. 14 (1)). See also Public Officers' Fees Act, 1879, 42 & 43 Vict. c. 58, s. 3.

Dublin Gazette.

The Criminal Law and Procedure (Ir.) Act, 1887, 50 & 51 Vict. c. 20, s. 12 (3), provides that a printed copy of the Gazette purporting to be printed and published by the Queen's authority, and containing the publication of any proclamation, &c., shall be conclusive evidence of the contents of such proclamation, &c. The Dublin Gazette purporting to contain a copy of a proclamation under the Act was headed "Printed by authority," and at foot were the words: "Printed under the authority of His Majesty's Stationery Office, by Alexander Thom & Company, Limited, of Nos. 87, 88, and 89, Middle Abbey Street, in the Parish of St. Thomas, in the City of Dublin." Held, that the Gazette sufficiently purported to be printed and published by the Queen's authority, and was therefore admissible for the purpose of proving a proclamation under the Act (R. (Lanktree) v. McCarthy, (1903) 2 I.R. 146).

Seizure of documents.

In case of a lawful arrest, whether for treason, felony, or misdemeanour, a constable may take and detain property, including documents, found in the possession of the accused, which will form material evidence in the prosecution (Dillon v. O'Brien, (1887) 20 L.R.I. 300, 316).

Cross-examination differs from direct examination in that a, leading questions are allowable, and (b) questions may be put to the witness to impeach his credibility, so that a witness can be questioned as to his motives, character, previous inconsistent statements, and the like. Cross-examination.
Generally.

Any witness who is sworn, though he is not examined in chief, is liable to be cross-examined by the opposite party, unless his being sworn was the result of a mistake (Taylor, 10th ed., p. 1034). There is no right to cross-examine a witness who has been called under a subpoena duces tecum, merely for the purpose of producing a document (ib.). The witness for a plaintiff may afterwards be called as a witness for the defendant, and in that event may be cross-examined by the plaintiff (Malone v. Spellessy, (1842) I.C.R. 504; Lord v. Colvin, (1855) 24 L.J.Ch. 517).

Cross-examination is not limited to the matters to which the direct examination has been pointed, and it sometimes happens that a witness who has given evidence favourable to the party who has called him on one part of the case, may in cross-examination give evidence equally favourable to the other party on a branch of the case on which he has not been examined in chief.

The law is unsettled upon the question whether, and in what circumstances, if the cross-examination is directed to show bias on the part of the witness, his answers negating bias may be contradicted (Taylor, 10th ed., pp. 1043 et seq.). Stephen, J., however, expresses the view that if a witness is asked any question tending to show that he is not impartial, and answers it by denying the facts suggested, he may be contradicted (Stephen, Evidence, 5th ed., p. 148, citing A.-G. v. Hitchcock, (1847) 1 Ex. 91, pp. 99, 105). As to bias.

The witness may be cross-examined as to his character. But it is doubtful as to whether a witness is bound to answer any question the direct and immediate effect of answering which might be to degrade his character (Taylor, 10th ed., p. 1060). How far cross-examination should be allowed as to character, when not directly relevant, lies in the discretion of the judge; and questions respecting alleged improprieties of conduct, which furnish no real ground for assuming that a witness who could be guilty of them would not be a person of veracity, might very fairly be checked (ib., p. 1061). As a general rule, the witness's answer to a question put merely to his credit is conclusive; but an exception is provided in case the question is one dealing with an alleged previous conviction. As to credit.

A witness may be questioned as to whether he has been convicted of any felony or misdemeanour, and upon being so questioned, if he either denies or does not admit the fact, or refuses to answer, it shall be lawful for the cross-examining party to prove such conviction; and a certificate containing the substance and effect only (omitting the formal part) of the indictment and conviction for such offence purporting to be signed by the clerk of the court, or other officer having the custody of the records of the court where the offender was convicted, or by the deputy of such clerk or officer (for which certificate a fee of five shillings and no more shall be demanded or taken) shall, upon proof of the identity of the person, be sufficient evidence of the said conviction, without proof of the signature or Proof of previous conviction of witness.

Cross-examined.

official character of the person appearing to have signed the same (Criminal Procedure Act, 1865, 28 & 29 Vict. c. 18, s. 6).<sup>1</sup>

Proof of previous inconsistent statement.

If a witness, upon cross-examination as to a former statement made by him relative to the subject-matter of the indictment or proceeding, and inconsistent with his present testimony, does not distinctly admit that he has made such statement, proof may be given that he did in fact make it; but before such proof can be given, the circumstances of the supposed statement, sufficient to designate the particular occasion, must be mentioned to the witness, and he must be asked whether or not he has made such statement (Criminal Procedure Act, 1865, 28 & 29 Vict. c. 18, s. 4).<sup>2</sup>

A witness may be cross-examined as to previous statements made by him in writing, or reduced into writing, relative to the subject-matter of the indictment or proceeding, without such writing being shown to him; but if it is intended to contradict such witness by the writing, his attention must, before such contradictory proof can be given, be called to those parts of the writing which are to be used for the purpose of so contradicting him: provided always, that it shall be competent for the judge, at any time during the trial, to require the production of the writing for his inspection, and he may thereupon make such use of it for the purposes of the trial as he may think fit (ib., s. 5).<sup>2</sup>

For an instance of the admission of evidence of previous inconsistent statements, and of further evidence to rebut the allegation of previous inconsistent statements, see R. v. Whelan, (1881) 8 L.R.I. 314.

Discrediting one's own witness.

A party producing a witness shall not be allowed to impeach his credit by general evidence of bad character, but he may, in case the witness shall, in the opinion of the judge, prove adverse, contradict him by other evidence, or, by leave of the judge, prove that he has made at other times a statement inconsistent with his present testimony: but before such last-mentioned proof can be given, the circumstances of the supposed statement, sufficient to designate the particular occasion, must be mentioned to the witness, and he must be asked whether or not he has made such statement (Criminal Procedure Act, 1865, 28 & 29 Vict. c. 18, s. 3).<sup>2</sup>

Cross-examination of one's own witness.

Irrespective of the above provision, the cross-examination of a party's own witness may be allowed by the judge, if the witness appears hostile (see Taylor, 10th ed., p. 1011). The mere fact that the witness is the opposite party, or has adverse interest to the party calling him, does not entitle the party calling him to cross-examine (Price v. Manning, (1889) 42 C.D. 372).

In a case where a defendant is examined in pursuance of the statute in that behalf (see p. 260, ante), he may be cross-examined as to his character or previous convictions, though this cannot be done in England, having regard to the Criminal Evidence Act, 1908<sup>3</sup> (see Charnock v. Marchant, (1900) 1 K.B. 474).

Witness not bound to incriminate himself.

A witness is not compellable to answer any question where the answer would have a tendency to expose the witness or, apparently, the wife or husband of a witness, to any kind of criminal charge, or to a penalty or forfeiture of any nature whatsoever (Taylor, 10th ed., p. 1052). The objection to answer must be made by the witness himself, who must pledge his oath to a belief that to answer will tend to expose him to a criminal charge; but if there appears to the court that it is clear that there is no danger to the witness, or that his objection is not made bona fide, the witness may be compelled to answer (R. v. Boyes, (1861) 1 B. & S. 314; Ex parte Reynolds, (1882) 20 C.D. 298; R. (Atkinson) v. Armagh JJ., (1883) 18 I.L.T.R. 2). A witness cannot be compelled to produce any document, the production of which may tend to incriminate him (Taylor, 10th ed., p. 1058; Whitaker v. Lord, (1809) 2 Taunt 115; Spokes v. Grosvenor Hotel Co., (1897) 2 Q.B. 124). But a witness cannot refuse to answer a question relevant to the matter in issue (the answering of which has no tendency to accuse himself or to expose him to penalty or forfeiture of any nature whatsoever) by reason only or on the sole ground that the answering of such question may establish or tend to establish that he owes a debt or is otherwise subject to a civil suit either at the instance of His Majesty or of any other person or persons (Witness Act, 1806, 46 Geo. 3, c. 37).

Witness not bound to incriminate himself.

There are several statutory enactments to compel a witness to answer questions which may have the effect of showing his complicity in the charge, and providing an indemnity, e.g., Gaming Houses Act, 1845, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 9; Gaming Houses Act, 1854, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 38, ss. 5, 6; Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, 50 & 51 Vict. c. 28, s. 19; Criminal Law and Procedure (Ireland) Act, 1887, 50 & 51 Vict. c. 20, s. 1 (5); Corrupt and Illegal Practices Prevention Act, 1883, 46 & 47 Vict. c. 51, s. 59; Explosive Substances Act, 1883, 46 Vict. c. 3, s. 6. As to punishment of witness refusing to answer, see p. 54, and 14 & 15 Vict. c. 93, s. 13 (5).

A witness is entitled to claim privilege for what passed between him and his legal advisers; but this rule does not extend to any such communication made in furtherance of any criminal or illegal purpose (Follet v. Jeffereys, (1850) 1 Sim. N.S. 17; Charlton v. Combes, (1863) 32 L.J.Ch. 284; Bullivant v. A.-G. for Victoria, (1901) A.C. 196), or which shows that since the commencement of the employment of such legal adviser any crime has been committed (Brown v. Foster, (1857) 1 H. & N. 736). No presumption of fact ought to be made against a party enforcing the rule against the disclosure by his solicitor of knowledge professionally acquired (Wentworth v. Lloyd, (1864) 10 H.L. Cas. 589).

Claim of privilege.

The re-examination must be confined to an explanation of the matters that have been referred to in the cross-examination, and must not introduce new matters. If a witness admit, or it be proved, that he formerly made statements inconsistent with his present testimony, the re-examiner may ask the circumstances or the motives of such prior statements. But if a witness has been cross-examined as to a conversation with the prisoner on a particular occasion, the re-examination cannot be directed to other conversations at other times, or even to letting in the entire of the conversation not bearing on the assertions brought out in cross-examination (Taylor, 10th ed., p. 1069; Prince v. Samo, (1838) 7 A. & E. 627). If in cross-examination an adverse witness obtrudes irrelevant matter in no way relating to the question, the cross-examining counsel should apply to have the evidence rejected, and thereupon no right of re-examination upon it will arise (Taylor, 10th ed., p. 1070).

Witness not subpœnaed

In a criminal case a person who is present in court, when called as a witness by either party, is bound to be sworn and to give his evidence, although he has not been subpœnaed (R. v. Sadler, (1830) 4 C. & P. 218). In a civil case the general rule is that a person can always refuse to be examined, unless he has been properly served with a subpœna accompanied by the payment of proper conduct money; but the objection must be made before the witness is sworn (Taylor, 10th ed., p. 891). The Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 13 (5), provides that in civil as well as criminal cases the justices may require any person present to be sworn and to give evidence.<sup>1</sup> With regard to witnesses called by the justices, it seems to be in the discretion of the court whether or not cross-examination of the witness shall be allowed; but the general rule is that when material evidence is given by such a witness, the party adversely affected will be allowed to cross-examine, but only as to such of the answers as are material (Coulson v. Desborough, (1894) 2 Q.B. 316; R. v. Cliburn, (1898) 62 J.P. 232).

Accomplices.

There is no positive rule of law that the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice is not sufficient; but it is the duty of a judge to advise a jury not to convict a prisoner upon the testimony of an accomplice alone (R. v. Tate, (1908) 2 K.B. 680; see also R. v. Beauchamp, (1909) 25 T.L.R. 330; R. v. Everest, (1909) 73 J.P. 269; R. v. Mason, (1909) 73 J.P. 250). But, on such caution being given, the jury may act on the sole testimony of the accomplice, and their verdict in that case cannot be disturbed (In re Meunier, (1894) 2 K.B. 418). An informer or police spy who has been concerned for the purpose of obtaining evidence is not an accomplice within the rule (R. v. Bickley, (1909) 73 J.P. 239; see also R. v. Kirkham, (1909) W.N. 141). A non-denial of the charge upon arrest is not necessarily corroboration (R. v. Tate, (1908) 2 K.B. 680, cf. R. v. Cramp, (1880) 14 Cox 390).

Public policy.

On the grounds of public policy, witnesses will not as a rule be required to disclose information detrimental to the public service. The rule clearly established and acted on is this, that in a public prosecution a witness cannot be asked such questions as will disclose the informer if he be a third person; and the principle of the rule applies to a case where a witness is asked if he himself is the informer (per Pollock, C.B., in A.-G. v. Briant, (1846) 15 M. and W. 185). But this rule may be departed from, if upon the trial of a prisoner the judge should be of opinion that the disclosure of the name of the informant is necessary or right in order to show the prisoner's innocence; but, except in that case, this rule of public policy is not a matter of discretion, it is a rule of law, and as such should be applied by the judge at the trial, who should not treat it as a matter of discretion whether he should tell the witness to answer or not (per Lord Esher, M.R., in Marks v. Beyfus, (1890) 25 Q.B.D. 498; and for an instance where the witness was held bound to answer, see R. v. Richardson, (1863) 3 F. & F. 693). The rule also applies in a subsequent civil action between the parties, on the ground that the criminal prosecution was maliciously instituted or brought about (Marks v. Beyfus, supra.) The questions in the cases mentioned were merely to the credit of a witness; and where a relevant fact is in question, a police officer cannot shelter himself behind a plea of public policy. Thus, in Webb v. Cutchlove, (1886) 3 T.L.R. 159, on the hearing of a charge against a licensed person for allowing his premises to be the resort of prostitutes, a police constable gave evidence of certain acts relied on which he had seen from a hiding place, but he refused to state where the place was. Held, that the question was relevant, and that the officer should have been required to answer.

On grounds of public policy also, a witness cannot be compelled to give information as to official communications between public officers upon public affairs, unless the officer at the head of the department concerned permits him to do so (Beatson v. Skene, (1860) 5 H. & N. 838; Hughes v. Vargas, (1893) 9 T.L.R. 471).

If any person who has given information on examination upon oath against any person shall before the trial be murdered, or so maimed or forcibly carried away and secreted as not to be able to give evidence on the trial of the person against whom the information or examination was given, such information or examination shall be admitted in all courts of justice in Ireland as evidence on the trial: provided it shall be found on a collateral issue to be tried by the jury that the person so secreted was secreted by the accused, or some person acting for him or in his favour (50 Geo. 3, c. 102, s. 5); and such an information or examination is admissible before the grand jury (56 Geo. 3, c. 87, s. 3).

Where a deposition<sup>1</sup> has been duly taken under the Petty Sessions Act, 1851, it is admissible upon the trial, upon proof that the witness is dead, and that such deposition was taken in the presence or hearing of the accused, and that he or his counsel or attorney had an opportunity of cross-examining the deponent (Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 14).

Where, on the trial of any person on indictment for an offence of cruelty, or any of the offences mentioned in the first schedule to the Children Act, 1908,<sup>2</sup> the court is satisfied by the evidence of a duly qualified medical practitioner that the attendance before the court of any child<sup>3</sup> or young person<sup>4</sup> in respect of whom the offence is alleged to have been committed would involve serious danger to the life or health of the child or young person, any deposition of the child or young person taken under the Petty Sessions Act, 1851,<sup>5</sup> or Part I of the Children Act, 1908,<sup>2</sup> shall be admissible in evidence either for or against the accused person without proof thereof, (a) if it purports to be signed by the justice by or before whom it purports to be taken, and (b) if it is proved that reasonable notice of the intention to take the deposition has been served upon the person against whom it is proposed to use it as evidence, and that that person or his counsel or solicitor had, or might have had if he had chosen to be present, an opportunity of cross-examining the child or young person making the deposition (Children Act, 1908, s. 29).

Common Law rule.

The common law rule in criminal cases was that the deposition of a witness<sup>1</sup> who (1) had died; or (2) had become afflicted with insanity of a permanent character, or (3) so sick as to be unable to travel, and to afford no reasonable hope that the witness would be able to appear on any future occasion, was admissible as evidence on the trial, the admissibility, however, in the last case being very doubtful (Taylor, 10th ed., pp. 358, et seq.). The English statute (Indictable Offences Act, 1848, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 17) provides for the admissibility of the deposition where the witness is dead, or so ill as to be unable to travel; but the Petty Sessions (Ireland) Act makes provision for the case of death only. It is said that the statutory provisions do not abrogate the common law rule in the cases to which the statute has no reference, e.g., in England, in the case of insanity (see Taylor, 10th ed., p. 362), or, it would follow, in Ireland in the case of insanity or (quære) permanent inability to travel.

Deposition on one charge, trial on another.

A question may arise when the deposition was taken on the hearing of one charge, and the trial is upon another charge. Where the deposition is taken upon one charge, and the trial is upon another charge, the deposition will be admissible if the facts deposed to are common to the two charges. Thus, where the charge at the preliminary hearing was one of attempted murder, and the trial was on a charge of murder (R. v. Beeston, (1854) Dears. 405); where the original charge was of robbery with violence, and the trial was for murder caused by the violence charged at the preliminary hearing (R. v. Lee, (1864) 4 F. & F. 63); where the original charge was for wounding with intent to murder, and the trial was for murder (R. v. Edmunds, (1909) 25 T.L.R. 658), the deposition was held admissible; but where the charge is "substantially different," the admissibility of the deposition is exceedingly doubtful (per Jervis, J., in R. v. Beeston, supra, at p. 413).

In R. v. Lydane, (1858) 8 Cox 38, where a man was charged in January, 1856, with rape, and committed for trial, but married the woman before the spring assizes in order to get the prosecution abandoned, and the woman was found murdered in the following August, her deposition on the charge of rape was admitted on the man's trial for murder, but only as evidence of the fact that the woman had charged him with rape.

Statutory provisions must be complied with.

The deposition, however, to be admissible at the trial must be taken in accordance with the statute. The whole of the deposition must be taken in the presence of the accused,<sup>2</sup> so that he may hear, and have an opportunity of cross-examining on all that is sworn against him (Phipson Ev., 4th ed., p. 442). The prisoner having been arrested on a charge of poisoning S. P., a magistrate (the prisoner being kept in custody outside), first took down in writing the deposition of S. P., and then swore him to the truth of it; the prisoner being then brought into the room, the magistrate slowly read over the deposition to S. P., and asked him if it was true, and, having been answered in the affirmative, he then reswore S. P. to his deposition in the presence of the prisoner, and read over the information of S. P. to him, and, while he was reading it, the prisoner asked him to stop at some statement contained in it; but he told the prisoner that he had better read it over to the end, and that he would then read the deposition paragraph by paragraph distinctly to him, and that he could then put any question he wished to S. P. upon each paragraph. The magistrate accordingly so read over the deposition to the prisoner, who put several questions to the deponent, which, with the answers of the latter thereto, were at the time reduced to writing and annexed to the deposition. The deponent having died, it was held (Monahan, C.J., Perrin and Ball, JJ.; Torrens, J., diss.; and Pennefather, B., dub.), that the deposition should not have been received in evidence, inasmuch as it did not sufficiently appear that the answers to the prisoner's questions had been given by the deceased under the sanction of an oath, and also (by Monahan, C.J., and Perrin, J.) because the information was originally taken down without an oath having been previously administered to the informant, and also because the prisoner was not present from the commencement (R. v. Walsh, (1850) 5 Cox 115).<sup>1</sup> A police-sergeant took a statement from a dying man, which he subsequently dictated out of a notebook to the clerk of petty sessions, who wrote it down, and then went to the residence of the dying man, and read it out for him, in the presence of the accused, the local magistrate, and the police, when the deceased said, "every word is true." When the charge was read, the accused had an opportunity of cross-examining, and did cross-examine, the witness who signed the document, the entire of which, including the cross-examination, was read over to him again by the clerk of petty sessions. Held, that the document was not admissible (R. v. Healy, (1902) 2 N.I.J.R. 73). A deposition, though inadmissible as such in consequence of the prisoner not having been present when it was taken or otherwise, will be admissible as a dying declaration, if taken under such circumstances as would render such a declaration admissible (R. v. Woodcock, (1789) 1 East P.C. 356, R. v. Dingley, (1791) 2 Leach 561, R. v. Callaghan, (1793) M'Nally Ev., 385).

The deposition will not be admissible unless it is preceded by a statement of the charge to which it has reference (R. v. Galvin, (1865) 16 I.C.L.R. 452). But where three depositions were taken, and the first, which was numbered 1, contained a statement of the charge, and the others, numbered 2 and 3, were headed "Caption as in No. 1," Held, that, in effect, the caption of No. 1, was incorporated in Nos. 2 and 3, and that, the deponents in Nos. 2 and 3 having died, the depositions were held admissible (R. v. Scanlan, (1910) 44 I.L.T.R. 228, Boyd, J.).

Where a deposition has been regularly taken, it is probable no evidence can be given to show that it is erroneous (R. v. Weller, (1846)

Can deposition be contradicted?

The deposition of a witness before a coroner is admissible, as regards so much of it as is not hearsay or otherwise inadmissible according to the ordinary rules of evidence, on proof of the death of the witness, if taken in the presence of the accused (R. v. Cowle, (1907) 71 J.P. 152; R. v. Black, (1910) 74 J.P. 71), but if not taken in the presence of the accused, it seems it cannot be admitted (*R. v. Admissibility of evidence given at previous trial.

If a witness who has given evidence at a trial dies, or becomes mad, or so ill that he will probably never be able to travel, or is kept out of the way by the adverse party, evidence can be given at a second trial of such witness's testimony; provided that the person against whom the evidence is given had the right and opportunity to cross-examine the witness; that the questions in issue were substantially the same in the first as in the second proceeding, and that the same person is accused on the same facts (Stephen Ev., 5th ed., p. 47; Taylor, 10th ed., pp. 354 et seq.).

identification.

In R. v. Dickman, (1910) 26 T.L.R. 640, Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., said that if they (the Court of Criminal Appeal) thought in any case that justice depended on the independent identification of the person charged, and that the identification appeared to have been induced by any suggestion or other means, they should not hesitate to quash any conviction which followed. The police ought not, either directly or indirectly, to do anything which might prevent the identification from being absolutely independent, and they should be most scrupulous in seeing that it was so.

The appellant, Lionel Walker Birch Martin, of Ryder Street Chambers, St. James's Street, London, who held a licence to drive a motor car issued by the London county council, and numbered 5080, was in 1909 convicted by a court of summary jurisdiction of driving a motor car on a public highway at a speed exceeding twenty miles an hour, contrary to s. 9 of the Motor Car Act, 1903. It was then proved that the driver of a motor car, of the name of Lionel Martin, and of the same address as the appellant, had been convicted of a similar offence in 1907; and that a person having the same four names and of the same address as the appellant had held a licence from the London county council from a date before 1907 continuously down to the present time; that the licence was numbered 5080; and that no one having a London address could have that number except the person having these four names and that address. A police constable gave evidence that he stopped the motor car upon the occasion in 1907, and the driver, upon demand, produced to him a licence which was issued by the London county council and numbered 5080. No notice to produce the licence was given. It was next proved by production of a certified copy of the conviction that a person with the same four names, and of the same address as the appellant, was convicted of a similar offence in 1908. The appellant, who was represented by counsel at the hearing, absented himself from the court and was not called as a witness. The justices found upon the above evidence that the appellant was the person who had been convicted on both the former occasions, and they imposed a fine of £20 and ordered his licence to be endorsed. Held, that, with regard to the conviction in 1907, the evidence of the police constable as to the contents of the licence produced to him on the occasion when the offence was committed was admissible as evidence of the identity of the appellant with the person who was then convicted, and that no notice to produce the licence was necessary; that, with regard to the conviction in 1908, the identity of the name and of the address was some evidence of the identity of the appellant with the person who was then convicted; and that the justices were entitled to have regard to the appellant's wilful absence, and conclude that he was the person who was convicted on both those occasions and to order his licence to be endorsed. "Proof of identity" of the person against whom it is sought to prove the conviction with the person named in the record of the conviction, required by s. 18 of the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871 (ante, p. 282), does not mean conclusive proof, but means such evidence as will entitle a jury to find that the identity is proved (Martin v. White, (1910) I.K.B. 665).

Evidence of identification.

Evidence of acting in a public office is prima facie evidence against a wrongdoer of due appointment to the office (Dexter v. Hayes, (1860) 11 I.C.L.R. 106, 13 I.C.L.R. 23).

Presumption in case of public official.

The court has power to order witnesses out of court; but if a witness remains in court after such an order, his evidence cannot be rejected (Chandler v. Horne, (1842) 2 Moo & Robb 423); but see Thomas v. David, (1836) 7 C. & P. 350; Cobbett v. Hudson, (1854) 1 E. & B. 77. See also p. 60, ante.

Exclusion of witness.

As to compelling witness, in cases of summary jurisdiction, to attend, see p. 53, ante, and to answer, &c., p. 54, ante. The attendance at quarter sessions and assizes of a witness who has not been bound over is enforced by a subpoena issued by the clerk of the Crown or clerk of the peace.<sup>1</sup> If the witness wilfully refuse to obey the subpoena, an attachment may be granted against him (R. v. Doye, (1908) 2 K.B. 333), if he was personally served a reasonable time before the trial (Smalt v. Whitemill, (1736) 2 Str. 1054; Hammond v. Stewart, (1733) Str. 510). But it seems doubtful whether a court of quarter sessions can issue an attachment; and it would appear that the only remedy is by way of indictment<sup>2</sup> (Archbold, 24th ed., p. 482). A refusal to answer either at assizes or quarter sessions is a contempt of court, for which the witness can be forthwith committed (Ex parte Fernandez, (1861) 6 H. & N. 717).

Compelling witnesses to attend and answer.

Where, at the close of the case for the Crown, there was no evidence to go to the jury, but there was no application to stop the case, and the accused went into evidence, which afforded evidence of guilt, the conviction was upheld (R. v. George, (1908) 73 J.P. 11; R. v. Jackson, (1910) 74 J.P. 352).

No evidence at close of case for prosecution.

criminally liable for act of servant.

GENERALLY speaking, a master is not criminally responsible for the acts of his servant which he has not instigated or connived at (Chisholm v. Doulton, (1889) 22 Q.B.D. 736; Hardcastle v. Bielby, (1892) 1 Q.B. 712). "The criminal law makes no one punishable for an offence but the person who either committed it or incited and procured the other to commit it, or who aided in its commission" (Lush, J., in R. v. Holbrook, (1878) 4 Q. B. D. 42, at p. 47).

Principle of exceptions.

There are, however, many exceptions to this rule. Many businesses nowadays are not carried on by the masters or owners in person, but by servants clothed with full authority to see that the law, in so far as it forbids a thing, is not broken, and in so far as it enjoins a thing, is fulfilled. The law would in such case be nugatory if personal remissness, or mens rea, were necessary to fix the master with criminal liability. Thus, if the master through his servant carries on a business which is likely to cause a nuisance unless proper precautions are taken, he is responsible at common law if a nuisance, without his knowledge, and preventable had his instructions been carried out, is caused (R. v. Stephens, (1866) L.R. 1 Q.B. 702).

Apart from the instances in which the master is expressly made liable for the acts of his servant,<sup>1</sup> the cases divide themselves into two classes. First, there are the cases in which the statute says that a certain class of persons shall do something under a penalty, or in which, to use the words of Gibson, J. (Fitzgerald v. Hosford, (1900) 2 I.R., 391), "the statute imposes a direct and unqualified duty." In such cases a master, upon whom the duty is cast, cannot absolve himself by the plea that he delegated the duty to a servant who neglected it (Fitzgerald v. Hosford, supra). Secondly, there are the cases in which the statute says that no person shall do a certain act, or an act under certain circumstances, under a penalty. In such cases no very precise principle has been, or apparently can be, laid down; but, to determine whether the doing of the act by the servant in the course of the master's business renders the master liable, the scope and intention of the statute (see judgments of Lord Russell of Killowen, L.C.J., in Commissioners of Police v. Cartman, (1896) 1 Q.B. 655, 657, and in Coppen v. Moore, No. 2 (1898) 2 Q.B. 306, at p. 313), and the probability or improbability of the statute being ineffectual, should the master be allowed to escape (Farley v. Higginbotham, (1898) 42 S.J. 309; Morris v. Corbet, (1892) 56 J.P. 649), seem to be the considerations applicable, the overriding principle, however, being that if it is a question of the master being liable or the statute being rendered nugatory, the statute will prevail (Farley v. Higginbotham and Morris v. Corbet, supra).

The following is the statement of the law by Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., in Commissioners of Police v. Cartman, (1896) 1 Q.B., 655, at p. 657:—"In considering this question, we must see what is the object of the Act, and how far that object would be effected or defeated if the construction contended for by the respondent were given to this section. There can be no question as to the object of this section: it was intended in the interest of public order to prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors to drunken persons. It must be remembered that the persons from whom alone intoxicating liquors can be obtained are licensed persons: how do they carry on their business? From the nature of the case it must be largely carried on by others on their behalf; it is true that sometimes the licensee keeps in his own hands the direct control over his own business, but in the great majority of cases it is not so, the actual direct control being deputed to other persons: are the licensees in these latter cases to be liable under this section for the acts of others? In my opinion they are, subject to this qualification, that the acts of the servant must be within the scope of his employment. The scope of the manager's authority in my view receives its limitation from the scope of his employment; authority is given him to do all acts within the scope of his employment. . . . I think it was intended that the responsibility should be upon the licensee for acts done by an employee within the scope of his authority."

Where the statute imposes a direct and unqualified duty, the person obliged to perform the duty cannot escape under the doctrine of mens rea (per Gibson, J., in Fitzgerald v. Hosford, (1900) 2 I.R. 391).

It has been apparently suggested that the law rendering the master liable for the acts of his servant, will be more stringently applied in the case of revenue, excise, and the like offences, than in other businesses. In A.-G. v. Allen, (1850) Ct. Exch. 29th November (cited Highmore's Excise Laws, p. 7), Pollock, C.B., observed: "I think it quite right that it should go forth to the world that a party who carries on a business of this description is responsible in penalties for the conduct of his servants in violating the law; and, if it were not so, the revenue laws would be wholly useless. You would have persons carrying on business by their servants in their absence, and violating the law without any liability." And in Massey v. Morriss, (1894) 2 Q.B. 412, at p. 414, Cave, J., said: "Reference was made to the alehouse cases. But the explanation of those cases is this: licences to keep alehouses are only granted to persons of good personal character; and it is obvious that the object of so restricting the grant of licences would be defeated if the licensed person could, by delegating the control and management of the house to another person who was altogether unfit to keep it, free himself from responsibility for the manner in which the house was conducted."

In R. v. Stephens, (1866) L.R. 1 Q.B. 702, at p. 708, Mellor, J., laid down, as a reason for the master's liability on a charge of creating a nuisance in the carrying on of his business, that such proceedings are in substance civil. At common law, also, the proprietor of a publication was held responsible for criminal libels inserted by his servant having control of the publication (R. v. Gutch, (1829) M. & M. 433).<sup>1</sup>

Examples.

The following are examples:—

LICENSING ACTS.

Master liable.

Mullins v. Collins, (1874) L.R. 9 Q.B. 292. Servant knowingly supplied liquor to constable on duty, contrary to the Licensing Act, 1872, s. 16, without the knowledge of the master.

Redgate v. Haynes, (1876) 1 Q.B.D. 89. Hall porter in charge of licensed premises connived at gaming on the licensed premises, contrary to the Licensing Act, 1872, s. 17, though owner was not aware of it.

Crabtree v. Hole, (1879) 43 J.P. 799. Gaming on licensed premises contrary to the Licensing Act, 1872, s. 17, while the boots was in charge. The boots was found to have either been aware of the gaming or to have wilfully abstained from becoming aware of it; the licensee was not aware of the gaming going on.

R. v. J.J. of Parts of Holland (Lincolnshire), (1882) 46 J.P. 312. Licensee absent. Wife in charge of licensed premises permitted prostitution on the licensed premises, contrary to the Licensing Act, 1872, s. 14.

Cundy v. Le Cocq, (1884) 13 Q.B.D. 207. Drink sold to drunken person contrary to Licensing Act, 1872, s. 13. Licensee or servants did not know person served was drunk. Held liable, as knowledge not necessary to constitute the offence.

Bond v. Erans, (1888) 21 Q.B.D. 249. Gaming on licensed premises contrary to the Licensing Act, 1872, s. 17, to knowledge of servant in charge, but without knowledge or connivance of owner (cf. Somerset v. Hart, noted p. 295).

Commissioners of Police v. Cartman, (1896) 1 Q.B. 655. Servant of licensee sold intoxicating liquors to a drunken person, contrary to Licensing Act, 1872, s. 13, against the orders of his master, who was absent when the offence was committed.

Worth v. Brown, (1896) 40 S.J. 515. Barmaid permitted drunken man to remain on licensed premises, contrary to the Licensing Act, 1872, s. 13; licensee at time was away.

R. (Waters) v. Kerry J.J., (1900) 35 I.L.T.R. 10. Wife and daughter of owner of unlicensed premises sold whiskey contrary to the Excise Licences Act, 1825, s. 26, during owner's absence; owner convicted of selling without a licence.<sup>2</sup>

Williamson v. Norris, (1899) 1 Q.B. 7. A barman in the employment of the committee of the House of Commons was charged with selling without a licence, contrary to s. 3 of the Licensing Act, 1872. Held, that the barman was not <sup>1</sup> The common law rule has been modified by 6 & 7 Vict. c. 96, s. 7, which allows a defence on the ground that a publication was without the authority, consent, or knowledge of the proprietor, and that the publication did not arise from the want of due care or caution on his part. Where an editor, who had entire control, published a libel without the proprietor's knowledge or consent, it was held that it was for the jury to say whether there was want of due care and caution (R. v. Holbrook, (1877) 3 Q.B.D. 60). The fact that an editor is given general control is not evidence of authority to publish a criminal libel (R. v. Holbrook, (1878) 4 Q.B.D. 42).

<sup>2</sup> This case was decided upon its own peculiar facts; from which the court inferred that the acts were done in the course of a "shebeening" business carried on by the owner of the premises, and authorized by him. Cf. Allen v. Lumb, noted p. 295.

liable, and that if, under the circumstances (sale in the House of Commons), an offence was committed, the committee alone were liable. Examples.

— v. Crowley (Birmingham Qr. Sess., 7th July, 1908, reported in Law Times, August, 1908). The wife of a publican sold intoxicating liquor by retail without using a measure, in contravention of s. 8 of the Licensing Act, 1872. Held, that the wife of the publican was wrongfully convicted, the publican himself being the only person who could be convicted. Sed quaere.

R. v. Gilroy, (1866) 4 Sc. Sess. Cas., 3rd series, 656. Brewer's servant, employed to deliver beer to customers, sold beer on the highway contrary to the Licensing Act, 1825, s. 26, without his master's knowledge or sanction. LICENSING ACTS.
Master not liable.

Boyle v. Smith, (1906) 1 K.B. 432. Drayman employed by brewer to deliver beer to customers; express orders to drayman not to sell or deliver beer to others than customers; the drayman sold beer, contrary to the Licensing Act, 1872, s. 3, to persons in a street who had not previously ordered it.

Bosley v. Davies, (1875) 1 Q.B.D. 84. Gaming in a hotel, contrary to the Licensing Act, 1872, s. 17; manageress unaware of the gaming, and no evidence of knowledge or connivance on part of servants. Held, that to support a conviction there must be evidence of knowledge or connivance on part of owner or servant.

Somerset v. Hart, (1884) 12 Q.B.D. 360. Gaming on licensed premises, contrary to Licensing Act, 1872, s. 17, to knowledge of a servant who was not in charge, the licensee was not aware of the gaming, and no evidence of connivance on his part.

Newman v. Jones, (1886) 17 Q.B.D. 132. The trustees and managing committee of a club held wrongly convicted under the Licensing Act, 1872, for selling liquor without a licence to non-members, contrary to the Licensing Act, 1872, s. 3. The liquor was actually sold by the steward contrary to express orders, and without the knowledge and consent of the trustees and committee.

Allen v. Lumb, (1893) 57 J.P. 377. Owner of house held wrongly convicted for selling intoxicating liquor without a licence, contrary to the Licensing Act, 1872, s. 3. The evidence only implicated his wife. See also Brownrigg v. Mulligan, (1910) 8th December, 1910, K.B.D. (Ir.), noted CATALOGUE OF SUMMARY OFFENCES, "INTOXICATING LIQUORS."

Emary v. Nolloth, (1903) 2 K.B. 264. Barman, contrary to his express orders, supplied child under fourteen with intoxicating liquor in a vessel neither corked nor sealed, contrary to Sale to Children Act, 1901. At the time licensee was in charge, but was not aware of barman's action. Held, licensee not liable.<sup>1</sup>

Conlon v. Muldowney, (1904) 2 I.R. 498, 4 N.I.J.R. 40. Intoxicating liquor knowingly sold to child under fourteen, in bottle not sealed, by servant of licensed person, contrary to the orders of and without the knowledge of the manager of licensed person or of the licensed person himself, contrary to s. 2 of Intoxicating Liquors (Sale to Children) Act, 1901. Held, licensed person not liable.

Brown v. Foot, (1892) 61 L.J. (M.C.) 110. P., seller of milk; his servant against his orders and without his knowledge watered the milk and so sold it, contrary to the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, s. 6. FOOD AND DRUGS ACTS.
Master liable.

Morris v. Corbet, (1892) 56 J.P. 649. Servant of C., a dairyman, being short in his supply, bought two gallons of milk from which the cream had been abstracted, and mixed it with his own, and sold the mixed milk. Held, though neither C. nor his servant knew or had reason to suspect that cream had been abstracted from the milk, that this was no defence under section 9 of the same Act. See also Strutt v. Clift, (1910) 27 T.L.R. 14.

Farley v. Higginbotham, (1898) 42 S.J. 309. Manager of a shop, without owner's knowledge, refused to supply coffee for analysis to police officer, contrary to ss. 13 and 17 of the same Act. "These Food Adulteration Acts could not be worked if persons who keep shops were not to be held liable for acts done by their servants in carrying on the ordinary course of business" (per Wright, J.).

<sup>1</sup> This case and the Irish case of Conlon v. Muldowney turned on the use of the words "knowingly allow," and it was held that no offence was committed unless either the defendant or his servant in charge had knowledge of the transaction.

Examples.
FOOD AND DRUGS ACTS.
*Master held

Parker v. Alder, (1899) 1 Q.B. 20. A farmer delivered milk in a pure and unadulterated condition to the servants of a railway company for delivery in London to the person who had bought it from him. The milk was adulterated without his knowledge or consent during the transit from the local station to the terminus. Held liable under s. 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875.

Houghton v. Mundy, (1910) 103 L.T. 103. A grocer's assistant, through mistake and without any intention to defraud, sold butter and margarine, mixed, as pure butter, and his mistake was rendered possible only by his contravening, without the knowledge of his master, the express instructions that he had received from his master. Held, that in respect of such sale the master must be convicted under s. 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875.

Kearley v. Tylor, (1891) 65 L.T. 261.<sup>1</sup> Sale by servant of lard adulterated with foreign matter, without a proper label indicating its character, contrary to section 6 of the same Act. Evidence that the servant acted contrary to master's express instructions was rejected by the justices. Held, evidence admissible as there is nothing in the Act to make master responsible for acts of servant when not authorized and sanctioned by the master.

Taylor v. Nixon, (1910) 2 I.R. 94, 44 I.L.T.R. 81. During absence of owner of public-house, and while her husband was left in charge, an inspector of food and drugs demanded a sample of whiskey from a particular bottle. It was found by the justices that the husband in pretending to get the sample wilfully let the bottle fall, so that it was smashed and no sample could be taken; the owner was convicted for "wilfully obstructing" the inspector under section 16 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875. Conviction quashed, as the offence created by s. 16 involved personal mens rea.

PUBLIC
liable.*

Barnes v. Akroyd, (1872) L.R. 7 Q.B. 474. Mill chimney emitted black smoke so as to create a nuisance within the meaning of the words in a (repealed) English statute, 29 & 30 Vict. c. 90, s. 19, as to black smoke, identical with those in the Public Health (Ir.) Act, 1878, s. 107 (7), due to negligence of owner's servants, owner not being aware of the commission of the nuisance.

Niven v. Greaves, (1890) 54 J.P. 548. G.'s mill sent forth black smoke contrary to words (identical with those referred to in Barnes v. Akroyd), in s. 91 of Public Health Act, 1875, owing to negligence of stoker. G. was not aware of the offence. G. held liable.

Blaker v. Tillstone, (1894) 1 Q.B. 345. Owner had in his possession, with intent to sell, food unfit for human consumption, contrary to the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 117, which is identical with the Public Health (Ir.) Act, 1878, s. 133. Owner did not know of condition of the food, but his servants did. Held liable.

liable.*

Searle v. Reynolds, (1866) 7 B. & S. 704. Inspector under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 107, s. 4 of which enacted that "every owner or occupier shall obey the order of such inspector," ordered foreman of owner of cattleyard, who was in charge, to disinfect it; the foreman disobeyed the order, of which the owner was not informed. Held by Cockburn, C.J., and Shee, J., owner not liable, Mellor, J., diss.

MERCHANDISE MARKS ACT.
*Master held
liable.*

Coppen v. Moore, (No. 2) (1898) 2 Q.B. 306. An assistant, contrary to his master's orders, sold and invoiced an American ham as a Scotch ham, contrary to s. 2, sub-s. 2, of Merchandise Marks Act, 1887. Master held liable.

Christie, Manson, & Woods v. Cooper, (1900) 2 Q.B. 522. Held, person charged under s. 2, sub-s. 2 (c) of Merchandise Marks Act, might exonerate himself by proving he had acted innocently in selling the goods. "It is open to the defendant to set up under sub-section (c) any absence of mens rea" (Channell, J., 528).

Mitchell v. Torup, (1766) Parker 227. Sailors without the privity of the master, mate, or owners of a ship imported tea contrary to 12 Car. 2, c. 18, s. 4. Owners held liable.

<sup>1</sup> This case, it is submitted, was erroneously decided. It is in direct opposition to the decision in Brown v. Foot, and in Parker v. Alder (in which, however, it was not cited), as well as to the ratio decidendi of Farley v. Higginbotham, as given in the dictum, above cited, of Wright, J.

A.-G. v. Siddon, (1830) 1 Cr. & J. 220. Trader concealed smuggled goods. Examples. During his absence his servant produced a wrong permit to an Excise officer in respect of the smuggled goods. Held, trader liable for such act of servant; but this case is explained by Gibson, J., in Taylor v. Nixon, (1910) 2 I.R. 94, at p. 102, as having been decided on an inference of actual authority.

Howells v. Wynne, (1863) 15 C.B.N.S. 3. A "bankman" at a coal mine allowed more than eight persons to go down the shaft at one time in the "cage," contrary to a rule made pursuant to the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 151. The manager of the pit, who under the same rules was the person responsible for the working of the mine, was present when the cage went down, but did not interfere. Held, that the manager was rightly convicted of aiding and abetting the bankman within the meaning of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 5. MINES AND COLLIERIES. Master liable.

R. v. Handley, (1864) 9 L.T. 827. Two women were in charge of the machinery working the cage of a mine, contrary to 5 & 6 Vict. c. 99, s. 8. Section 13 of the same Act, provided that in such case, if the offence were committed under the authority of the "contractor," the "contractor" should be liable to a penalty. Held, that inasmuch as knowledge of, or acquiescence in, the women being so employed, had not been brought home to the "contractor," he was wrongly convicted. Master not liable.

Dickinson v. Fletcher, (1873) L.R. 9 C.P. 1. Section 10 of the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 151, provided that whenever safety lamps were required to be used in a coal mine they should be first examined and securely locked by a person or persons duly authorized for that purpose. Section 22 of the same Act imposed a penalty on the owner if through his default the provisions of s. 10 were neglected or wilfully violated. The owner of a coal mine in which safety lamps were required to be used appointed a competent lamp man to examine and lock the lamps daily, but this man on one occasion gave out some lamps that had not been locked. Held, that the owner, in the absence of personal neglect by him, was not liable.

Roberts v. Woodward, (1890) 25 Q.B.D. 412. A servant of a coal dealer was in charge in the public street of a vehicle containing sacks of coal, sent out as containing 1 cwt. each by the dealer for delivery to customers. The servant being stopped pursuant to s. 29 (1) of the Weights and Measures Act, 1879, by an inspector under that Act, informed the inspector that each bag contained 1 cwt. This statement was untrue. Held, that the dealer was not liable under s. 29 (2) of the Act in respect of the statement. WEIGHTS AND MEASURES. Master not liable.

Anglo-American Oil Company v. Manning, (1908) 1 K.B. 536. A servant, acting within the scope of his authority in selling his master's oil, for his own benefit, substituted, in order to carry out an ingenious system of fraud upon purchasers, an unjust measure for the measure supplied to him by his master, who had taken every reasonable precaution to ensure that his servant used a correct measure. Held, that the possession by the servant of the false measure was not possession by the master so as to make the latter liable to be convicted under section 25 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1875. The Court, however, said that this was a special case, and that their decision was not to govern any future cases that might arise.

Davies v. Harvey, (1874) L.R. 9 Q.B. 433. Guardian of poor, through his partner, supplied goods for outdoor relief, contrary to the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76. He was not aware of his partner so supplying the goods. Held liable. MISCELLANEOUS. Master liable.

St. Helen's District Tramways Co. v. Wood, (1891) 60 L.J. (M.C.) 141. Company held responsible for personal neglect of their engine-driver in not placing and lighting a lamp in his engine according to Board of Trade regulation, providing that their engines between certain hours should carry lighted lamps. This regulation was made pursuant to a private Act, which provided that for every breach of such regulation the company should be liable to a penalty.

Collman v. Mills, (1897) 1 Q.B. 396. Bye-laws made under s. 4 of the repealed Slaughterhouses (Metropolis) Act, 1874 (which is practically the same as s. 105 of the Public Health Act (Ir.), 1878), provided that no occupier of a slaughterhouse should slaughter, or permit to be slaughtered, any animal in any pound or within the view of any other animal. The foreman of such an occupier, during the absence, and without the knowledge of, and in contravention of express orders from, the occupier violated the bye-law. Held, that the occupier was liable for the penalty attaching to such violation of the bye-law. See also Heaton v. McSweeney, (1905) 2 I.R. 47.

Fitzgerald v. Hosford, (1900) 2 I. R. 391. The occupier of a salmon weir is under a statutory duty (5 & 6 Vict. c. 106, s. 40; 26 & 27 Vict. c. 114, s. 20) to keep his weir open continuously for the free passage of fish during the weekly close time. Where such occupier delegated the performance of this duty to a servant who failed to fulfil it, it was held that the occupier was liable to the penalty attaching to non-performance of the duty (cf. Hosford v. Mackey, infra.)

Harrison v. Leaper, (1862) 5 L.T. 640. H. let his steam thrashing-machine to a farmer to whom he sent it under charge of a servant. This servant, by direction of the farmer, set up the machine within 12 yards of the public road, in contravention of 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50, s. 70, which enacts that no person "shall erect, or cause to be erected," any steam engine within twenty-five yards of a public road. H. was absent and unaware of the erection. Held, H. not liable.

Massey v. Morris, (1894) 2 Q.B. 412. Under s. 28 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1876, corresponding to s. 442 of the Act of 1894, the owner or master of a British ship who "allows" her to be loaded below the "Plimsoll mark" is liable to a penalty. Where the master of such ship so loaded her in Greece, it was held that the owner in England, who knew nothing of the offence being committed, was wrongly convicted, and that the principle upon which Bond v. Evans (noted at p. 294) was decided did not apply, that principle being that where a man obtained a licence to keep an alehouse he could not divest himself of responsibility by entrusting the management of it to a servant.

Hosford v. Mackey, (1897) 2 I.R. 292. The use of fixed nets by an unlicensed person is prohibited under a penalty by the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 92, s. 22. Where the servants of the owner of an eel-weir fished with such a net, in contravention of the express orders of their master, during a period in respect of which their master was not licensed. Held, that the master was not liable.

Director of Public Prosecutions v. Witkowski, (1911) 27 T.L.R. 211. The respondent, who was a money-lender, was summoned for having sent a circular to an infant inviting him to borrow money contrary to the Betting and Loans (Infants) Act, 1892. The respondent had given instructions to his clerk to send out circulars to captains and lieutenants in the Army; but, knowing that many second lieutenants were minors, he directed the clerk to send no circulars to second lieutenants. Without his knowledge the clerk sent a circular to a second lieutenant who was in fact under twenty-one. The magistrate held that as the respondent had distinctly told his clerk not to send the circular to second lieutenants, he did not send or cause to be sent the circular in question, and that even if he were bound by the act of his clerk he had reasonable ground for believing that all persons to whom the circulars were sent were of full age. He accordingly dismissed the summons. Held, that there was evidence upon which the magistrate could so find.

servant.

A servant can be made criminally liable though the master be liable also (Hotchin v. Hindmarsh, (1891) 2 Q.B. 181). But a servant or agent acting innocently in obedience to orders is not liable (Hearne v. Garton, (1859) 2 E. & E. 66, at p. 76; Williamson v. Norris, (1899) 1 Q.B. 7; R. v. Bannen, (1844) 2 Mood C.C. 309; and see Agency, p. 300, infra).

Husband and wife.

A wife who, not in the presence of her husband and without his coercion, commits a crime is responsible as if she were a feme sole. But if a wife commits a crime when her husband is present, the law presumes in most cases that the wife acts under the coercion of her husband, and so she is held not responsible (1 Hale 45, R. v. Smith, (1858) 1 Dea & B. C.C. 553). The presumption does not arise in the case of heinous crimes such as treason, or murder, or manslaughter (Hale, 45, 46; Sir Thomas Overbury's case, (1616) 2 St. Tr. 957). The presumption is rebuttable (R. v. Cohen, (1868) 11 Cox 99; R. v. Husband and Cruse, (1838) 8 C. & P. 541; R. v. Torpey, (1871) 12 Cox 45). If wife. the husband be physically incapable of coercion, then the presumption does not arise (R. v. Cruse, supra, per Tindall, C.J.).

The extent of the presumption has never been definitely settled, and it has been doubted whether it applies to misdemeanours. This uncertainty is due to the fact that the doctrine is not rooted in any principle of the common law; it is an anomaly, and is a relic of the severe days when death was the penalty for most felonies. A man, in cases within clergy, could have the benefit of his clergy and go free; a woman had no benefit of clergy, and so the doctrine sprang up, in favorem vite, of presuming that a wife acted under the coercion of her husband (1 Hale 45). If husband and wife jointly commit burglary or larceny, the wife should be acquitted (1 Hale, 45). But if the jury find she acted independently of her husband and not under his control, she can be convicted jointly with her husband of stealing (R. v. Cohen, (1868) 11 Cox 99). The presumption probably does not apply to robbery. In R. v. Buncombe, (1845) 1 Cox 183, a case of robbery, Coleridge, J., would have reserved the point, but the prisoner was acquitted; in R. v. Torpey, (1871) 12 Cox 45, and in R. v. Dykes, (1885) 15 Cox 771, both cases of robbery with violence, the question whether the wife acted under her husband's coercion was left to the jury, and the wife was acquitted. The doctrine has been held to apply to misdemeanours (R. v. Price, (1837) 8 C. & P. 19). In R. v. Cruse, (1838) 8 C. & P. 541, where a wife was convicted of felonious assault along with her husband, the full court of judges held the presumption did not arise. In R. v. Ingram, (1712) 1 Salk. 384, husband and wife were jointly convicted of common assault. A married woman can be jointly convicted with her husband for keeping a bawdy-house (R. v. Williams, (1712) 10 Mod. 63) or gaming-house (R. v. Dixon, (1712) 10 Mod. 335), as she is supposed to have the government of her house. A married woman cannot be convicted of receiving stolen goods unless the jury find she received the goods in the absence of her husband (R. v. Archer, (1826) 1 Moody C.C. 143). In R. v. Morris, (1814) R. & R. 270, where a wife uttered a forged note by her husband's order, but in his absence, the conviction was held good.

At common law, a wife cannot be guilty of stealing her husband's goods, for husband and wife, in the eyes of the law, are one person: and, as a consequence, an adulterer could not be guilty of receiving goods taken by the erring wife from the husband (R. v. Kenny, (1877) 2 Q.B.D. 307.) But if the adulterer assisted in carrying off the husband's goods, he was guilty of stealing, as the assent of the husband to the taking would not then be presumed (R. v. Berry, (1859) 8 Cox 121). If a stranger assisted the wife in taking the husband's goods, the wife not having committed or intending to commit adultery, he could not be convicted of stealing the husband's goods (R. v. Avery, (1859) 8 Cox 184). The law has been changed by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, ss. 12 and 16, which provide that criminal proceedings may be taken by a husband against his wife for wrongfully taking the husband's property when leaving or deserting, or about to leave or desert, the husband; with similar remedies for the wife against the husband wrongfully taking her property in like circumstances. But no criminal proceedings can be taken for any such taking by husband or wife while living together. The indictment against a wife under the Act need not aver that the prisoner is the wife of the prosecutor, or that she took the goods when leaving or deserting, or about to leave or desert, her husband (R. v. James, (1902) 1 K.B. 540).

Agency.

An employer who, with the intent to carry out a criminal offence, gets the act that is necessary for the commission of the offence performed by an innocent agent, is responsible as principal for that act as if the act has been done by such employer (R. v. Clifford, (1845) 2 C. & K. 202; R. v. Bleasdale, (1848) 2 C. & K. 765).

If two persons agree to carry out a criminal act, and the act is done by an innocent agent who has been employed by one only, both persons who have so agreed are guilty as principals (R. v. Bull, (1845) 1 Cox, 281). If the act be not done by the agent selected, but by another unknown to the employer, the latter is still responsible as principal (R. v. Michael, (1840) 9 C. & P. 356, a case of murder by poison, the poison supplied by the prisoner having been administered by a child who found it). If the agent be aware of the consequences of the act, then the employer is an accessory and not a principal (R. v. Manley, (1844) 1 Cox 104).

Section 19 (3) of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28), frees from liability to any prosecution or punishment any servant who has bona fide acted in obedience to the instructions of his master, and on demand made by or on behalf of the prosecutor has given full information as to his master.

Coercion.

There cannot be a criminal act without the free concurrence and acquiescence of the will. Overmastering physical compulsion excuses a man who under its influence has done an act which otherwise would be a criminal act (1 Hale, 434). The question as to how far, if at all, (1) threats of instant death, (2) risk of death, (3) risk of personal injury, (4) risk of injury to property, or (5) the necessity of choosing between two evils excuse the commission of a criminal act depends entirely upon the facts of each particular case, and no general rules can safely be laid down. Such questions rarely arise, and are of little practical importance.

FUGITIVE OFFENDERS.

Arrest of fugitive criminal, . . . . .	301	Hearing of charges, . . . . .	303
Hearing of extradition charges, . . . . .	302	Miscellaneous provisions of Act, . . . . .	303

THE statutes by which the extradition of criminals between the King's dominions and foreign states is regulated, are the Extradition Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 52), the Extradition Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 60), the Extradition Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 33), and the Extradition Act, 1906 (6 Ed. 7, c. 15), which collectively are entitled (Act of 1906, s. 2) the Extradition Acts, 1870 to 1906, and are to be construed as one Act.

The Extradition Acts apply to fugitive criminals from foreign jurisdictions, but only where there is an extradition treaty with the particular foreign State from which the criminal is fugitive, and where the Acts have been applied, in the case of that state, by Order in Council (Act of 1870, s. 2). Such fugitive criminal cannot be extradited except he is accused or convicted of a crime specified in the treaty, which also is an "extradition crime," that is to say (Act of 1870, s. 26), a crime which if committed in England would be one of the crimes specified in the schedules to the Acts of 1870-1873, and s. 1 of the Act of 1906,<sup>1</sup> and he cannot be surrendered to a foreign State for a political crime, or in certain other cases provided by s. 3 of the Act of 1870.

A fugitive criminal of a foreign state is any person, found in or suspected of being in the United Kingdom, who is accused or has been convicted of an "extradition crime," within a foreign jurisdiction (Act of 1870, s. 26). Such fugitive, if in Ireland, may be arrested either under a warrant issued by a magistrate at Bow Street on order of a Secretary of State, or under a warrant issued by any justice of the peace having jurisdiction in the place where such fugitive is or is suspected to be (s. 8). The latter warrant is to be issued on information and complaint, and on such evidence as would in the opinion of the justice justify the issue in the case of a crime committed within his jurisdiction (ib.). A Bow Street warrant seems to be the usual course except in really urgent cases (Biron and Chalmers Extradition, p. 35), and such warrant runs throughout the United Kingdom without backing (s. 13). The quantum of evidence justifying the issue of a warrant by a justice is entirely in the discretion of the justice: very little evidence will suffice (R. v. Weil (1882), 9 Q.B.D. 701). A constable may arrest a fugitive without warrant on suspicion of the commission of what would be felony in English law (per Brett, L.J., in R. v. Weil, supra). It is suggested that if a fugitive be arrested without warrant, a warrant for his detention should be at once obtained from a justice, and such warrant will be effective (R. v. Weil, supra). Dublin police magistrates are not specifically mentioned in the Act, but, it is submitted, they come within the words, "any justice of the peace" in s. 8. The justice issuing the warrant must send a report of its issue, together with the information or complaint, and evidence, or certified copies thereof, to a Secretary of State, who may cancel the warrant and discharge the prisoner (s. 8). The prisoner, if not so discharged, is brought before a magistrate having power to issue such warrant, who then issues a warrant to convey the prisoner to Bow Street (ib.).

charges.

Extradition charges in ordinary cases are heard at Bow Street (s. 10). In the case of crimes committed on ships at sea, where the ship comes to an Irish port, jurisdiction to hear extradition charges is given to a "stipendiary magistrate"<sup>1</sup> of such port, or of the place nearest to such port (s. 16). This jurisdiction, however, appears to be confined to cases where the fugitive has been arrested on warrant issued without order of a Secretary of State (s. 16 (3); Extradition Act, 1873, 36 & 37 Vict. c. 60, s. 6). Where a Secretary of State is satisfied that a fugitive arrested in Ireland cannot be removed to London on account of his health, such Secretary may direct the case to be heard by any "stipendiary magistrate"<sup>1</sup> named in the order of such Secretary (Act of 1895, s. 1). Those cases in which Irish magistrates are empowered to hear extradition charges so rarely arise, that no useful purpose would be served in here dealing with the procedure, &c., on such hearing, as to which see the Act of 1870, s. 10.

Fugitive
Offenders Act,
1881.

The Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 69), relates to offences committed, and offenders, within some part of the King's dominions.

A fugitive offender, as regards the United Kingdom, is a person accused or convicted in a British possession of an offence to which the Act applies, and found in any part of the United Kingdom (s. 2). The Act applies to all offences punishable in the place of commission, on indictment or information, with imprisonment with hard labour, rigorous imprisonment, or any confinement in prison with labour of any kind for twelve months, or with any greater punishment (s. 9).

Fugitive
Offenders Act,

A fugitive offender under the Act may be arrested under either an endorsed warrant or a provisional warrant (s. 2). An endorsed warrant is a warrant issued in the place where the crime was committed, and endorsed with the signature of a Secretary of State, the Lord Lieutenant, or Chief Secretary, and authorizes every constable in Ireland to arrest the person therein named, and to bring him before a magistrate (ss. 3, 11, and 26). A provisional warrant can be issued by any justice of the peace in whose jurisdiction the offender is or is suspected to be, and such warrant may be backed and executed as are ordinary warrants to arrest (ss. 4, 39). The warrant is to be issued upon such evidence as would, in the opinion of the justice, justify the issue of a warrant if the offence had been committed within his jurisdiction, and such justice is to report forthwith its issue, and to send the information, or a certified copy thereof, to a Secretary of State, the Lord Lieutenant, or the Chief Secretary, any of whom may discharge the person arrested (ss. 4 and 11).

The fugitive when arrested, if not released under s. 11, must be brought before a magistrate, who when hearing such case has all his usual powers, and may remand or admit to bail.<sup>1</sup> If no endorsed warrant has been issued, the prisoner may be remanded from time to time (for not more than seven days at any one time) till such endorsed warrant is issued. When the endorsed warrant has been authenticated, as required by the Act, the magistrate may commit the prisoner, if satisfied on the evidence that there is a strong or probable presumption of his guilt of the offence charged in the endorsed warrant (s. 5). It is only when the case is clear in favour of the accused that the magistrate should refuse to commit (Re Coutts, (1902) 22 N.Z.L.R. 203). In order that a magistrate may have jurisdiction to commit, it is necessary that there should be evidence before him that the offender has committed an offence to which the Act applies in the Possession to which his return is sought (Ex parte Percival, (1907) 1 K.B. 696). No proof is required that the offence charged is an offence, or an offence to which the Act applies under English law (s. 9).<sup>2</sup> On committing the prisoner, the magistrate must inform him that he will not be surrendered for fifteen days, and may apply for a writ of habeas corpus (s. 5). The Superior Courts may discharge a prisoner in frivolous cases, or where his return would be unjust (s. 10).

charges.*

Sections 7 and 8 deal with discharge of prisoners committed, but not claimed in due time by the authority seeking their return, and with the sending back to the United Kingdom of prisoners not tried in due time after their return to another part of the King's dominions. Section 24 gives power to the magistrate to issue search warrants; section 22 provides for the trial of the offences

provisions of
Act.*

<sup>2</sup> Colonial Acts, ordinances, statutes, orders, and regulations may be proved by the production of a copy purporting to be printed by the Government printer of the colony (Evidence (Colonial Statutes) Act, 1907, 7 Ed. 7, c. 16, s. 1 (1)). Printing a copy or pretended copy falsely purporting to be printed by a Government printer, or tendering such false copy knowingly in evidence, are offences punishable on indictment by imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding twelve months (s. 1 (2)).

of false swearing and perjury in proceedings under the Act: section 27 provides for the conveyance of returned persons, and provides a penalty, not exceeding £50, recoverable in like manner as penalties under the Merchant Shipping Acts, for refusal by a master of a British ship to convey or deliver into custody a fugitive when required as provided by the section; section 28 deals with escape of prisoners; section 33 with offences committed at sea; section 34 with the application of the Act to convicts at large.

THE Dublin metropolitan police district at one time consisted of six districts or divisions (48 Geo. 3, c. 140) to which eighteen divisional justices were attached, each of such divisions having its separate public office or court. By the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 52, s. 8, power was given to the Lord Lieutenant to abolish these divisions, and to constitute such number of public offices or police courts as he should deem proper, and to reduce the number of justices for the district. By order in council of 4th February, 1860, these divisions were abolished; and by further order of 29th September, 1868, two courts were instituted for the entire district, one at Inns Quay, the present central court, and the other at Kingstown. By successive reductions the number of justices has been brought down from the original number, eighteen, to the present number, four; and on the extension of the district by order in council of 23rd October, 1901, so as to embrace the added area of the city of Dublin annexed by the Dublin Corporation Act, 1900, a third court with fortnightly sittings was instituted at Clontarf.

The salaries of the divisional justices are fixed as follows: chief magistrate, £1200; three other divisional magistrates, £1000 each (22 & 23 Vict. c. 52; 38 & 39 Vict. c. 20, s. 3). A justice may appoint a practising barrister of at least seven years' standing as his deputy, for any time not exceeding six weeks inside twelve calendar months; in case of sickness or unavoidable absence, he may, with the concurrence of the Chief Secretary, appoint a deputy for three calendar months at a time (34 & 35 Vict. c. 76, s. 11); such deputy, where he acts in case of the sickness or unavoidable absence of the justice, to be paid out of moneys to be provided by Parliament at such daily rate as the treasury may prescribe (46 & 47 Vict. c. 14, s. 17); in case of absence arising from any other cause, the deputy to be paid at the justice's own charge (34 & 35 Vict. c. 76, s. 11).

district, &c.

The present boundaries of the Dublin metropolitan police district are as follows<sup>1</sup> :—

From the Lighthouse on the North Wall of the River Liffey by a direct line to the Lighthouse at the end of the South Wall ; thence by low water-mark and the sea-shore to a point 2 furlongs beyond the Southern Wall of Mount Malpas, Killiney, and from said point by a line running 2 furlongs distance from said wall to the entrance gate of said Mount ; thence by a line at the like distance to the left or outside of the Glenageary and Rochestown roads, leading to Kill-o'-the-Grange ; thence at like distance by the cross road of Dean's Grange and Stillorgan Road to a point on the left bank of the River Dodder, 2 furlongs southward of Donnybrook Bridge ; thence by the left bank of that river to the junction of the baronies of Newcastle and Uppercross near Cypress Grove, and by the boundary of those baronies to the third lock on the Grand Canal, near Golden Bridge, thence by a direct line drawn through the fields from the said lock to Chapelizod Bridge on the River Liffey, to a point 50 perches from said lock where said line intersects the boundary between the parishes of St. Jude and Ballyfermott, and by said boundary to where it intersects the G. S. & W. Railway at the carriage sheds ; thence by a continuation of aforesaid direct line until it again intersects the boundary between said parishes, near Stone House ; thence by said parish boundary until it abuts on St. Laurence Road, near Lynch's Lane ; thence by aforesaid direct line to Chapelizod Bridge on the River Liffey, and by the left bank of the Liffey to the ferry at foot of Knockmaroon Hill ; thence by the road over that hill to the Knockmaroon gate of the Phoenix Park ; thence by the Park wall to Ashtown Lodge, at the rear of the Under Secretary's house, and by the most direct road thence to Longford Bridge on the Royal Canal ; thence by the most direct road to Tolka River, and by that river to Convent wall, opposite Glasnevin Cemetery, and by West side of said wall to Finglas Road, North, at Harburn Lodge, and by the left of said road, Naul Road (and Claremount to rear of Glasnevin House) to Glenavon House, thence along North side of fence across the fields to the boundary line between the townlands of Hampstead and Drishogue, and by said boundary line and wire fence between Hampstead and Albert Model Farm to a point about 200 yards from the gate-lodge entrance to Albert Model Farm on Drumcondra Road ; thence in a direct line to ash tree marking city boundary on right of avenue leading to Hampstead, and across said avenue to and by the left of hedge to Whitehall ; thence by the left to Drumcondra Road to a point opposite entrance to Broom Hill ; thence by the right of Drumcondra Road to northern end of Charlotte Place ; thence across field by said hedge to the cross fence ; thence in a northerly direction by said fence to opposite Puckstown Road ; thence across the fields to Puckstown Road, along said road for about 50 yards to stone pillars on said road ; thence across fields by hedge on right to cross fence and said fence in an easterly direction to opposite Artane Lodge ; thence by fence to the left to Puckstown Road, across said road and field to stream there ; thence by the right of and along said stream to Donnycarney Bridge, Malahide Road across said road, and along fields on right bank of said stream to within about 100 yards of Killester Lane ; thence by right-hand side of fence to the left to the stone pillars on Killester Lane, near gate lodge of Killester Abbey ; thence along Killester land to Howth Road, along Howth Road to the three-mile stone ; thence by Castle Avenue and Merville Avenue to "Woodville," Vernon Avenue ; thence across fields and by hedge to back gate at St. Anne's, along hedge to right to gate lodge ; thence across fields in St. Anne's to the Nannikin River, and by said river to Sea Wall, Dollymount Strand, along said sea wall to Annesley Bridge, and thence by sea line to the Lighthouse at North Wall.

For police purposes, the Dublin metropolitan police district is divided into six divisions, viz., A, B, C, D, E, F, each under the charge of a superintendent. The number of inspectors, sergeants, and constables in the force varies according to the extent of the divisions and other circumstances. Divisions are divided into sub-divisions, each containing a station-house. Sub-divisions are divided into sections, each under the charge of a sergeant, and sections are divided into beats which are patrolled by the constables.

Boundaries of district, &c.

The A and B Divisions occupy the portion of the city and urban district of Kilmainham south of the Liffey from the Estuary of the Dodder at Ringsend to the Chapelized Bridge on the Liffey; thence in a direct line to Blackhorse Bridge on Grand Canal, and thence by the Grand Canal to the Grand Canal Basin at the Estuary of the Dodder, Ringsend. The A and B Divisions are separated by a line from Portobello Bridge, through Richmond Street, Camden Street, Wexford Street, Redmond's Hill, Peter's Row, Whitefriar Street, Great Ship Street, Castle Steps, Castle Street, and Fishamble Street to the Liffey. The C and D Divisions occupy the portion of the district lying north of the Liffey between the Nannikin River, Dollymount, and the Ferryboat Station on the Liffey at foot of Knockmaroon Hill. They are separated by a line from Grattan Bridge, through Capel Street, Bolton Street, Dorset Street, and Drumcondra Road to Whitehall, Upper Drumcondra Road. The E Division occupies the portion of the district south of the Grand Canal and the Liffey, between the Blackhorse Bridge on the Grand Canal and the Railway Gates at Merrion Strand. It embraces the Urban Districts of Rathmines and Pembroke. The F Division occupies the portion of the district between the Railway Gates at Merrion by the sea-coast to a point 2 furlongs south of the southern wall, Killiney. It embraces the Urban Districts of Blackrock, Kingstown, Dalkey, and part of Killiney and Ballybrack. Divisional boundaries in all cases run along the middle of the streets, &c., mentioned.

A divisional justice, who must be a barrister of not less than six years' standing (5 & 6 Vict. c. 24, s. 46), is appointed by the Lord Lieutenant (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 29, s. 32); and cannot practise as a barrister or be a member of Parliament, or vote or take part in parliamentary elections (48 Geo. 3, c. 140, ss. 14 and 15).

Appointment of divisional justices.

A divisional justice is a "stipendiary magistrate" within the Married Women (Maintenance in case of Desertion) Act, 1886, 49 & 50 Vict. c. 52 (R. (Redding) v. Swifte, (1909) 2 I.R. 302; see also p. 8, ante). Any one divisional justice may do alone all things authorized to be done by two justices<sup>1</sup> (18 & 19 Vict. c. 126, s. 16; 22 & 23 Vict. c. 52, s. 11; 25 & 26 Vict. c. 50, s. 2).

The ordinary justice of the peace can exercise jurisdiction for the trial of summary offences, either (a) when the offence has been committed within the limits of his jurisdiction (that is to say, in the case of the ordinary county justice, his county), or (b) when it has been committed outside of such limits anywhere within the United Kingdom or in the Isle of Man or the Channel Islands, provided that the offender reside or be within his territorial limits (Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 10).<sup>2</sup> But as a general rule (ib. s. 11), a condition precedent to the exercise of these jurisdictions is the service of a summons on the offender, and this service can only be effectively made in the justice's own county or in the adjoining county (G. S. W. Ry. Co. and Leyden, (1907) 2 I.R. 160). On the other hand, the jurisdiction of the Dublin divisional justices in summary cases of a criminal nature is confined to offences committed within the metropolitan police district,<sup>3</sup> but, for such offences, his summons may be effectively served anywhere in Ireland; and this wide power of service attaching to the divisional justice's summons is not confined

Jurisdiction.

Jurisdiction.

to offences, since section 49 of the Dublin Police Act of 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 24), from which this power is derived, deals with "any matter which such justice is authorized to hear and determine summarily," and so includes civil and quasi-civil matters, such, for instance, as a proceeding to compel a husband to contribute to the support of his wife under the Married Women (Maintenance in Case of Desertion) Act, 1886 (R. (Redding) v. Swift, (1909) 2 I.R. 302).

Hearing complaints ex parte.

Power to hear ex parte, on due proof of service of the summons, summary matters, whether criminal or otherwise, arising within the metropolitan district is conferred on the divisional justices by section 49 already referred to, and by section 7 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Ireland) Amendment Act, 1871, 34 & 35 Vict. c. 76. The justice has the option of so proceeding ex parte, or of adjourning the hearing, or in offence cases, of issuing a warrant of apprehension. It is not obligatory on the divisional justice to proceed by summons in cases of summary offences, as section 51 of the Act of 1842 authorizes him to issue a warrant of apprehension, without any previous summons "whenever good grounds for so doing shall be stated on oath before him."

Witnesses.

It would appear that the power given by section 52 of the Dublin Police Act, 1842,<sup>1</sup> of compelling the appearance of witnesses in summary offence cases<sup>2</sup> arising within the district is equally extensive with the powers given to compel the appearance of the offender under sections 49 and 50. There is nothing in the language of section 52 inconsistent with the right to serve a witness summons in such cases anywhere in Ireland (see judgment of Dodd, J., in R. (Redding) v. Swift, (1909) 2 I.R. 327). It is to be noted, however, that in indictable cases the power of compelling the appearance of witnesses is confined to witnesses within the jurisdiction (12 & 13 Vict. c. 69, s. 16). In the case of a summary offence, if the summons is disobeyed by the witness, a warrant may issue (5 & 6 Vict. c. 24, s. 52); in the case of an indictable offence, the justice may either issue a summons for the witness, followed on disobedience by a warrant, or may issue a warrant in the first instance, when it appears by sworn evidence to be probable that the witness will not obey a summons (12 & 13 Vict. c. 69, s. 16). Service of a summons on a witness is sufficient if left at his place of abode twenty-four hours before the hearing (5 Geo. 4, c. 102, s. 25); a witness refusing to attend may be fined 40s. (s. 26). The attendance of witnesses who reside outside of the jurisdiction is in practice secured by a Crown Office subpoena.

Service of summons.

The summons in all summary matters, whether of a civil or criminal nature, may be served by delivering a copy to the party, or by delivering at his usual place of abode a copy to his wife or servant or some inmate of his family, such servant or inmate being of the age of sixteen years or upwards, and explaining the purport of the summons to such wife, servant, or inmate (5 & 6 Vict. c. 24, s. 50). The statute does not specify any particular time for service of the summons, nor does it expressly require (as does the Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 12) that the summons shall be served a reasonable time before the hearing, but that will be implied (see dictum of Cockburn, C.J., in R. v. Smith, (1875) L. R. 10 Q.B. 604, at p. 608). For cases as to what is a reasonable time, see p. 49. A summons against a limited company must be served in the manner prescribed by section 62 of the Companies Act, 1862 (now replaced by section 116 of the Companies Consolidation Act, 1908), by being left at or sent by post to the registered office of the company (Pearks v. Richardson, (1902) 1 K.B. 91).

summons.

By section 48 of the Dublin Police Act of 1842, every distress or levy warrant, or service warrant, or warrant to compel the appearance of any person, or for the apprehension of any person charged with an offence, issued by a divisional justice in respect of any matters arising within the Dublin police district, may be executed by any constable of Dublin police without backing in any part of Ireland (see also 48 Geo. 3, c. 140, s. 31). This section would appear, however, to be rendered obsolete, if not impliedly repealed by section 28 of the Petty Sessions (Ireland) Act of 1851, which, with other sections of that Act dealing with the backing and execution of warrants, is made applicable to the Dublin police district. This section empowers the execution of Irish warrants addressed to persons other than the constabulary, not only throughout Ireland, but in England and Scotland, the Isle of Man, and the Channel Islands. Under s. 28 of the Petty Sessions Act, the warrant must be backed for execution, proof on oath being given of the handwriting of the justices signing the warrant.

Warrants.

The summons in cases of offences triable summarily may issue without any previous information in writing, and is to be "heard and determined . . . . . within six calendar months at the furthest next after the commission of such offence" (Dublin Police Act, 1842 s. 70). And there is no jurisdiction to hear the complaint after the six months have expired, even though the lapse of time has been due to adjournments, with the consent of the parties (R. v. Tolley, (1803) 3 East 467; R. v. Bellamy, (1823) 1 B. & C. 500). The Petty Sessions Act is different, prescribing (s. 10) that the complaint shall be made within six months from the time when the cause of complaint shall have arisen; and it is immaterial what period is suffered to elapse between the making of the complaint and its determination under that Act.

Time limit for summary conviction.

Although no written information or complaint is necessary in the metropolitan district, the divisional justice may, if he thinks fit, require such information to be laid (5 & 6 Vict. c. 24, s. 70). Power is given to remand prisoners or enlarge them on recognizances (s. 64). Forms of information, summons, and conviction are provided (s. 72), and it shall be sufficient that the charge shall be stated in the words of the statute creating the same (ib., but as to effect of this provision see p. 49). The Act does not affect the proceedings in informations under the Revenue or Stamp Acts (s. 78).

Miscellaneous
provisions.

The conviction at petty sessions consists of the entry in the order book (14 & 15 Vict. c. 93, ss. 21, 36). But it is otherwise in the Dublin metropolitan police district, where there is no order book, and where merely a memorandum or minute is made by the magistrate in a court book, from which memorandum or minute a formal order or conviction may subsequently be drawn up, in the form referred to in 5 & 6 Vict. c. 24, s. 72. It is not, however, necessary that the conviction should be drawn up before it is acted upon, whether by commitment or levy of the penalty (see Ratt v. Parkinson, (1851) 20 L.J.M.C. 208). It may be drawn up before return to certiorari or after action brought against the justice; but the filing of a conviction with the clerk of the peace is final (Ex parte Austin, (1880) 34 L.T. 102). Certiorari is taken away (5 Geo. 4, c. 102, s. 30, 6 & 7 Wm. 4. c. 29, s. 41, 1 Vict. c. 25, s. 27, which statutes are to be read as one with 5 & 6 Vict. c. 24; see s. 1 of the last-named Act). The provision taking away certiorari has no application when the conviction is bad upon its face or has been obtained by fraud, or is made by a court illegally constituted (see p. 226). The fact that the magistrate's book contains merely a minute of the decision is important in considering the advisability of moving for a writ of certiorari on the ground that the conviction is bad upon its face. Justices in a petty sessions district are bound by the entry in the order book (R. (Burke) v. Cork JJ., (1905) 2 I.R. 309), whereas the divisional justice is bound only by the formal conviction drawn up from the minute or memorandum in the court-book, any technical defect in which may be rectified in drawing up the conviction (R. (Cahill) v. Dublin JJ., (1904) 2 I.R., 698).

Penalties.
Offences for which no penalty is appointed.

Section 36 of the Dublin Police Act, 1842, provides that for every misdemeanour or other offence against the Act, for which no specific penalty is appointed, the offender shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding £5, or to imprisonment not exceeding one calendar month.

Imprisonment
in default.

Section 71 of the Dublin Police Act deals with imprisonment in lieu of payment of a penalty, and provides that, where the penalty or forfeiture exceeds £5, imprisonment in default, not exceeding three months, may be awarded.<sup>1</sup>

award costs.

While in petty sessions courts the power to award costs, either against complainant or defendant, is limited in any case of summary jurisdiction to the sum of 20s. (Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 22 (9)), in the Dublin metropolitan district there is no limit to the amount of costs which may be awarded, as section 59 of the Dublin Police Act of 1842 empowers the divisional justice who has heard or determined any charge or complaint to award to either party "such costs as to him shall seem meet to be paid."<sup>2</sup> Under this section large sums of costs are from time to time awarded in summary cases determined in the Dublin police courts, and payment of such costs may be enforced by distress, and by imprisonment in default of goods. In a recent case, Creean v. Derlin and Johnson, heard by one of the divisional justices, on the 15th April, 1909, three summonses for breaches of the Public Meeting Act, 1908, were dismissed with £50 costs against the complainant in each case. Application to quash the orders by certiorari having been made, it was held (Palles, C.B., and Johnson, J.) that the orders in these cases, in so far as the amount of costs and direction to levy were concerned, were perfectly valid; but that the further direction for imprisonment in default was improperly included in the original order, and should not be made except on further application to the magistrate after a return of nulla bona (unreported K.B.D. 18th June, 1909).

<sup>1</sup> It is submitted that section 39, which limits the imprisonment to one month, when the penalty does not exceed £5, and that portion of s. 71 dealing with penalties under £5, are superseded by the Small Penalties Act, 1873 (noted p. 64, ante, and verbatim, APPENDIX OF STATUTES).

Power is given to mitigate penalties, save in revenue prosecutions (s. 53). Where a statute directs a share of the penalty to be paid to a common informer, the justice may order that no part or a lesser part of such penalty shall be so paid (s. 52). The power to deprive the informer of any share in the penalty will apply to a later statute, e.g., the Betting Act, 1853, which contains an express proviso that a certain portion of the penalty shall be paid to the informer (Hawke v. Mackenzie, (1902) 2 K.B. 234).

*Mitigation.
Payment to informer.*

The appeal provisions of the Petty Sessions Act of 1851 do not apply to the Dublin metropolitan police district, except where made specially applicable by subsequent statutes to certain classes of offences. The only general appeal provisions in force in the district are:—(a) section 27 of the Dublin Police Act, 1 Vict. c. 25, which gives an appeal against any penalty exceeding £5, or imprisonment exceeding one month, the person appealing being required at the time of his conviction to enter into a recognizance with two sufficient sureties to prosecute the appeal;<sup>1</sup> (b) section 9 of the Fines Act (Ireland), 1851, which gives an appeal for “reduction or remission” in the case of any penal sum exceeding 40s. The appeal so made under the Fines Act is to be “subject in all respects to the provisions of the Petty Sessions Act,” and, since the Petty Sessions Act appeal section (s. 24) empowers the appeal court “to confirm, vary, or reverse the order made by the justices,” a point of some nicety arises as to whether the appeal court in deciding appeals under the Fines Act against penalties exceeding 40s. imposed by the Dublin divisional justices is authorized to reverse the conviction or has power merely to reduce or remit the penalty. It is submitted that the procedure of the Petty Sessions Act as to appeals applies to appeals under the Fines Act only so far as is necessary to effect the avowed purpose of section nine of the latter Act, that is to say, the reduction or remission of the penalty where the appeal court may think it advisable so to do (see also pp. 138, et seq.)

Appeals.

Many modern statutes provide a right of appeal and a procedure in reference to the offences created by them; and such rights and procedure will prevail over the general provisions of the 1 Vict. c. 25, as they do, in petty sessions districts, over the Petty Sessions Act (see p. 131, ante). But where the statute does not expressly confer a right of appeal, and does not expressly apply the appeal section of <sup>1</sup> The defendant was sentenced to a term of imprisonment at 4.30 p.m. on the 10th May. The police-offices closed about that time, and the prisoner's solicitor could not have served formal notice of appeal that day. Next day (the prisoner having meanwhile been committed to prison under the magistrate's warrant) her solicitor brought a notice of appeal to the magistrate's clerk, and had a discussion with him in reference to it, but the notice was not formally served until the day following. Held, that the notice was not served “at the time of the” conviction (R. (Hegarty) v. Dublin JJ., (1899) 2 I.R. 310). But it was also held that the right of appeal in the particular case was governed, not by section 27 of the Dublin Police Act, but by section 19 of the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1894, under which the prosecution was brought (identical with section 19 of the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904, as the latter section stood before its partial repeal by the Children Act, 1908), and that therefore the appeal, having been prosecuted as soon as conveniently possible, was in time, but that there was no power to release the prisoner pending the appeal (ib.).

Appeals.

the 1 Vict. c. 25,<sup>1</sup> the question whether an appeal lies or not seems doubtful for the reasons stated at p. 131. At all events, where a statute expressly gives a right of appeal, and indicates no procedure, the general procedure under 1 Vict. c. 24 has been held not to be applicable (R. (Hegarty) v. Dublin JJ., (1899) 2 I.R. 310).

Matters specially within jurisdiction of divisional justices.

By various statutes certain offences are created and made punishable summarily by the divisional justices, and other matters brought within their jurisdiction. The matters hereinafter referred to seem the most worthy of mention.

Award of compensation, costs, &amp;c. (5 &amp; 6 Vict. c. 24.)

A divisional justice may award compensation not exceeding £10 for hurt or damage to person or property caused by the commission of any offence against the Act (5 & 6 Vict. c. 24, s. 25);<sup>2</sup> in any case heard and determined by him may award such costs to either party as he shall deem meet (s. 59); or amends not exceeding £5 to any person against whom frivolous informations are brought (s. 60); may hear and determine claims of watermen, coal porters, sailors, and other quay labourers to wages, and order sum not exceeding £5 (s. 65); award compensation for wilful damage by tenants not exceeding £15 (s. 66), or for damages caused by negligence, misbehaviour, or misconduct of the driver of any vehicle<sup>3</sup> (16 & 17 Vict. c. 112, s. 32); deal summarily with complaints as to oppressive distress by weekly or monthly tenants, or tenants whose rent does not exceed £15 a year (5 & 6 Vict. c. 24, s. 67); order delivery of goods unlawfully detained<sup>3</sup> to owner, or, on failure, their value, not exceeding £15, such order not to be a bar to an action brought within six months by any person against the person to whose possession such goods shall come by virtue of such order (s. 68); determine disputes as to pawnbrokers (see CATALOGUE OF SUMMARY OFFENCES; "PAWNBROKERS"); licence general dealers (3 Ed. 7 c. 44, ss. 1, 12); exercise the jurisdiction exercisable elsewhere at petty sessions as regards renewal and temporary transfer of licences (see Ch. IX.); as regards recovery of poor rate (11 & 12 Vict. c. 26, s. 6), and as regards the possession of small tenements (34 & 35 Vict. c. 76, s. 10); in cases of attempted suicide may convict summarily and sentence to three months' imprisonment (34 & 35 Vict. c. 76, s. 9); in case of contempt of court may impose a fine of 40s., or order imprisonment not exceeding seven days (ib., s. 6).

Offences against 5 &amp; 6 Vict. c. 24.

Licensed persons. Cock fighting, &amp;c.

The following are the chief offences mentioned in 5 & 6 Vict. c. 24 and other statutes, with the maximum penalties therefor:—

Licensed person supplying liquor to person under 16, penalty, first offence, 20s.; second offence, 40s.; third offence, £5 (s. 6); keeper of refreshment house permitting drunkenness, gaming, assembling of prostitutes, or other disorderly conduct, penalty £5 (s. 7); keeping places for bear baiting, cock fighting, penalty £5 or one month's imprisonment; person found thereon, 5s.

<sup>2</sup> Such award will be a bar to proceedings to recover damages, even in the case of personal injuries which subsequently turn out more serious than anticipated (Wright v. London General Omnibus Co., (1877) 2 Q.B.D. 271; see also McGarry v. Fairbairn, (1869) I.R. 3 C.L. 552, McNulty v. Hope, (1870) I.R. 4 C.L. 377); but an award under the section cannot be made against the will of the party aggrieved.

(s. 8) ; person owning, keeping, or conducting gaming house, penalty £100 or six months' imprisonment ; and commissioner of police, on report from superintendent, and complaint, in writing and on oath, of two householders, may authorize police to enter same, persons found therein, penalty £5 (s. 9) ; proof of gaming for money, wager, or stake not necessary (s. 10) ; drunkenness in public thoroughfares, drunkenness and riotous or indecent behaviour, violent or indecent behaviour in police station, penalty 40s. or seven days imprisonment (s. 15) ; riding behind carriages, penalty 5s, or if under 12 to be detained till handed over to parent, but not after closing of police office (s. 16) ; cutting ropes or cables, &c., of ships, a misdemeanour (s. 18) ; letting fall articles into river or harbour to prevent discovery, misdemeanour (s. 19) ; police to have power of constables on Liffey and harbours of Dublin and Kingstown (ib.) ; possessing instruments for unlawfully procuring liquor, misdemeanour (s. 20) ; piercing casks, &c., for unlawfully procuring liquor, misdemeanour (s. 21) ; breaking casks, &c., with intent to spill contents, misdemeanour (s. 22) ; informer compounding information, penalty £10 (s. 61) ; framing or producing false bill of parcels to prevent evidence as to goods stolen or unlawfully obtained, misdemeanour (s. 5) ; having or conveying goods reasonably suspected of being stolen or unlawfully obtained, without satisfactorily accounting for same, penalty £5, or two months' imprisonment<sup>1</sup> (s. 53) ; on information on oath, search warrant may be granted (s. 54) ;<sup>2</sup> where any person is charged with such an offence and shall declare that he received the property from some other person, or that he was employed to convey the same for some other person, the justice shall cause such person, and also, if necessary, every former or pretended purchaser, to be brought before him and examined ;<sup>3</sup> and if it shall appear to such justice that any person had possession of the property, and had reasonable cause to believe that same was stolen or unlawfully obtained, such person shall be guilty of misdemeanour, penalty £5, or three months' imprisonment (s. 55) ; justice may order pawnbroker or other person having lawful possession of property unlawfully obtained to appear and produce the goods, and to deliver up same to owner without payment, or on payment of such sum as justice shall think fit ; penalty on refusal, payment of full value of goods on justice's order (s. 56) ; justice may order property unlawfully obtained and in custody of police constables to be delivered up to owner (s. 57) ; no order under ss. 56 or 57 to be a bar to any action by person against whom justice's order has been made to recover such goods, provided action be brought within six months from date of justice's order (ss. 56, 57) ; where owner cannot be ascertained and goods are ordered to be delivered to receiver of district, they may be ordered to be sold after twelve months (s. 58) ; divisional justice or constable may enter licensed house ; labourers, &c., or women tippling or gaming therein during prohibited hours, penalty 5s. to 20s. (5 Geo. 4. c. 102, s. 16) ; publican opposing entry, penalty £10 (s. 17) ; refusing to admit, £5 (s. 18) ; publicans in whose premises labourers, &c., are tippling, penalty, first offence £2, second offence £20, third offence £50 and forfeiture of licence (s. 19) ; publicans harbouring policemen on duty, penalty £5 (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 29, s. 6) ; assaulting or resisting constable, penalty £5 (s. 9) : offence against public decency, £5 or two months' imprisonment (34 & 35 Vict. c. 76, s. 5) ;

<sup>1</sup> Section 24 of 2 & 3 Vict. c. 71 (corresponding to s. 53 of the Dublin Police Act), which enacts that every person who shall be brought before a metropolitan magistrate charged with having in his possession or conveying in any manner anything which may be reasonably suspected of being stolen or unlawfully obtained, and who shall not give an account to the satisfaction of the magistrate of how he came by the same, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, was held to be supplemental only to section 66 of 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47 (corresponding to s. 29 of the Dublin Police Act), which empowers a constable to stop, search, and detain any person who may be reasonably suspected of having or conveying in any manner anything stolen or unlawfully obtained ; and the sections apply only to possession in the streets, and not to possession in a house. See, that in a case in which a constable would have been authorized to arrest, the magistrate would have jurisdiction, although the offender had not been arrested, but was "brought before" him by summons (*Hadley v. Section 49 of 48 Geo. 3. c. 140, enacts a forfeiture of £100, to be recovered in the Recorder's Court by civil bill from any person concealing stolen goods, or receiver thereof.

Bailiffs guilty of extortion, or acting without authority, fine not exceeding £10, or imprisonment not exceeding six months, with or without hard labour (51 & 52 Vict. c. 47, ss. 12, 13).

*Nuisances in
thoroughfare.*

The following nuisances in public thoroughfares are forbidden under a 40s. maximum penalty (5 & 6 Vict. c. 24, ss. 14, 17):—

Exposing animals for show or sale; showing caravans; shoeing, &c., horses; exercising horses, or cleaning, making, or repairing a vehicle, except in case of accident: turning loose horse or cattle; suffering to be at large any unmuzzled ferocious dog; urging dog to attack person or animal; causing mischief by negligence or ill-usage in driving cattle; misbehaviour in the driving, &c., of cattle; riding on the shafts of a vehicle, or riding on a horse without having and holding the reins, or being at such distance from vehicle as not to have the complete control over the animal drawing same; riding or driving furiously or to the common danger; causing vehicle to stand longer than necessary for loading and unloading, or wilfully interrupting public crossing or causing obstruction; driving or leaving horse or vehicle on footway; rolling tubs, &c., on footway, save for loading or unloading; disregarding directions regulating driving during divine service, or for preventing obstruction during public processions; posting bills without consent of owner or occupier; marking buildings, breaking fences, &c.; loitering or soliciting; exhibiting, &c., indecent books or pictures, or using profane or indecent language; threatening, abusive, or insulting language; showmen or hawkers blowing horns; discharging fire-arms, stones, or missiles to damage or danger of any person; making bonfires, discharging fireworks, pulling bells, extinguishing lamps; flying kites or playing games; making or using slides (persons guilty of any of above in view of constables may be apprehended, s. 14); burning or cleansing hoops, cutting timber or stone, or slacking lime; depositing materials (except building materials, which are to be enclosed); beating or shaking carpets, &c. (except door-mats before 8 a.m.); throwing rubbish on highway or into river, drain, &c. (but not to extend to the laying of materials to prevent accidents by frost, or to prevent noise in case of sickness); emptying privies or removing offensive matter between 6 a.m. and 12 p.m.; keeping pig-styes in front of house and not shut off by sufficient wall or fence; keeping swine so as to be a common nuisance; occupier of house or tenement neglecting to sweep footways and watercourses adjoining his premises (where tenement unoccupied, owner to be deemed the occupier); exposing anything for sale in park or public garden without consent or so as to overhang carriageway or footway; setting up blinds, awnings, so as to cause annoyance or obstruction; leaving open and unfenced any vault or cellar, &c., to the danger of passengers.

Pawnbrokers.

The jurisdiction as to pawnbrokers will be found in CATALOGUE OF SUMMARY OFFENCES, "PAWNBROKERS."

carriages.*

The law as to the hiring, &c., of hackney cars and cabs is contained in 16 & 17 Vict. c. 112; 17 & 18 Vict. c. 45; 18 & 19 Vict. c. 65. By the last-mentioned statute, all enactments relating to hackney carriages, save those regulating the duty, are applied to cabriolets, commonly known as cabs.

Licence for carriage.

The commissioners of police may grant licences to keep, use, or hire a stage carriage, job carriage, hackney carriage, cabriolet, cart,<sup>1</sup> or job horse, on payment of annual duty.<sup>2</sup> They may refuse, revoke, or suspend such licence upon the ground that the vehicle or horse or harness is unserviceable or unsafe, or unfit for public accommodation or use, or that the applicant or licensee is an unfit person to hold the licence by reason of having been convicted of theft, felony, assault, or drunkenness, or any breach of the statutes or rules, orders or bye-laws relating to hackney carriages, &c. The grounds of refusal, or revocation must be endorsed by the commissioners upon or annexed to the licence or the requisition therefor. A licence cannot be granted to a person under eighteen, otherwise than jointly with a person of full age, who is trustee, guardian, or administrator of the will or personal estate of a proprietor dying while licensed. A separate licence is required for each carriage, &c. (17 & 18 Vict. c. 45, s. 2). A new licence may be granted on change of ownership (s. 3), and a supplementary licence in case the original is lost, mislaid, obliterated, or defaced (s. 4). The application for the licence is in writing, containing certain particulars, including, in the case of a stage carriage, the fixed route or line of way by which it is intended such carriage shall proceed to its destination (16 & 17 Vict. c. 112, s. 8). A licence shall not be required for a cart bringing farm produce to market or manure from town (ib.). The duties per annum (which may be altered or abolished with the consent of the Lord Lieutenant (17 & 18 Vict. c. 45, s. 8)) are as follows:—two-horse job carriage, £8; one-horse job carriage, £5; stage carriage, £8; hackney carriage, £2; licence on transfer, 10s.; cabriolet, £1 4s.; hackney carriage (when proprietor has a cabriolet licence, and has paid a bulk premium of £12 10s.), £1; job horse, £2; cart or dray used or let to hire, 12s. (17 & 18 Vict. c. 45, schedule B.). A “Dublin plate,” costing 1s., is delivered with each licence (16 & 17 Vict. c. 112, ss. 11 and 15). Notice of change of residence, &c., must be given, and particulars of the change are to be endorsed on the licence (16 & 17 Vict. c. 112, s. 14). Entry of licences, and of all endorsements thereon, is to be made in a book to be kept by the commissioners of police, and certified extracts therefrom under the hand of the principal officer in charge thereof are to be evidence in all proceedings (16 & 17 Vict. c. 112, s. 12). The commissioners may on the requisition of the applicant (s. 53) grant a licence to any person over sixteen to drive, on production of a satisfactory certificate of ability to drive and of good character, the duty on which is 2s. 6d. the first year, each succeeding year 1s. (s. 52). The licence may be revoked or suspended by a justice for breach of the statutes or regulations made thereunder (s. 54). Badges are to be supplied to, and worn by, drivers (s. 55).

Power is given to the divisional justices to determine disputes between proprietors and drivers (s. 35); but agreements between drivers and proprietors are to be unenforceable unless in writing (s. 36). The commissioners may alter fares with the consent of the Recorder of Dublin (s. 48), and may appoint and alter carriage stands, and limit the number of carriages for each (s. 49), and may make rules for the regulation of drivers, carriages, &c. (s. 50).

All offences may be determined by a divisional justice, whether the cause of complaint arose within the district or not; in case of disputes, the hirer may require the driver to drive to the police court where the matter may be determined without a summons, or to the nearest police station to have the complaint entered if the police court is not open (s. 61). The summons is to be served forty-eight hours at least before the hearing (s. 64); the defendant is a competent witness (s. 65); justices may award compensation to persons brought to answer unfounded complaints (s. 67).

The following is a summary of the offences under the statute; the penalties mentioned being maximum penalties:—

plates.

Procuring licence in fictitious name, penalty 40s. or two months, and revocation of licence (16 & 17 Vict. c. 112, s. 13); neglect to give notice of change of residence, penalty 40s. (s. 14); neglect to deliver up plate at expiration of licence, penalty 40s. (s. 17); not delivering up lost plate when found, or using a plate after it has been defaced, 40s. (s. 18); driver driving without plates may be apprehended and vehicle detained and sold unless penalty paid (s. 19); forging licence or plate, misdemeanour, imprisonment not exceeding two months (s. 21); refusal to deliver up plate to have same changed after notice in writing from commissioners, penalty 40s. (s. 22); obstructing officers seizing plate where licence discontinued or revoked, penalty £5 (s. 24); letting to hire without licence or plate, penalty £10 (s. 25), proprietor or driver failing to deliver to owner, commissioners of police, or to police station property left in licensed vehicle, penalty 40s. (s. 26); in case of hurt or damage caused by negligence or misconduct of any driver of any vehicle or person in charge of any horse, justice may award reasonable compensation to party aggrieved, and in default may order two months' imprisonment (s. 32); persons driving without licence or badge, proprietor suffering unlicensed person to act as driver, penalty 40s. (s. 33); if any complaint made against driver, the justice shall summon proprietor to produce drivers and their licences, and in default, penalty 40s. (s. 34); compensation may be awarded to driver where licensed proprietor wrongfully retains licence on the driver quitting his service (s. 37); driver of hackney carriage must deliver a ticket, with his number thereon, to hirer if required (s. 38); driver refusing to convey, to any place within ten miles of General Post Office, a person who tenders legal fare, or who occupies more than ten minutes in performing the distance of one mile; or demanding or exacting more than the legal fare, penalty 40s. (s. 39); hackney carriages found in any street are to be deemed plying for hire, and any driver who is not actually hired is obliged to drive to any place within district or within ten miles of the General Post Office, penalty on refusal, after tender of the legal fare, 40s. (s. 40); complainant wrongfully bringing complaint against driver for refusal to drive may be ordered to pay compensation (s. 41); demanding or exacting more than agreed sum, penalty 40s. (s. 42); agreement to pay driver more than legal fare is void; any person paying same can recover excess, and driver or proprietor is, in addition, liable to penalty not exceeding 40s. (s. 43); hirer may require driver to drive a certain distance without specifying destination, penalty on driver refusing, 40s. on person refusing to pay hire of carriage, or injuring the same, such reasonable sum as to justice may seem meet, with reasonable amends to party aggrieved, and in default of payment two months' imprisonment (s. 47); person acting as driver, or driver allowing persons so to act without consent of proprietor, penalty 40s. (s. 51); driving without displaying a badge, penalty 40s. (s. 55); wearing badge without licence, penalty 40s. (s. 56); not delivering up lost badge when found, or wearing badge after it has been defaced, penalty 40s. (s. 57); forging of licence or badge, a misdemeanour, penalty two months' imprisonment (s. 58); driver neglecting to notify change of abode, penalty 40s. (s. 59); no advertisements are to be carried upon any vehicles or on foot to the annoyance of inhabitants or passengers' (s. 60); witness refusing to obey summons to attend, penalty 40s. (s. 66). In case of the refusal or revocation of a licence, or a judgment for the payment of any sum exceeding twenty shillings, or for any term of imprisonment exceeding a month, an appeal may be taken to the Recorder of Dublin, to the sessions next ensuing, if held after the expiration of a week, and otherwise to the next sessions but one (s. 69). Notice in writing of the appeal must be given within forty-eight hours of the refusal or revocation of the licence, or after the giving of the judgment appealed against, to the secretary of the commissioners, or to the clerk of the justices, as the case may be; the notice to be lodged in due time with the clerk of the peace (s. 70). An appeal shall not stay execution unless a recognizance with two sureties is entered into to prosecute the appeal (17 & 18 Vict. c. 45, s. 9). The Recorder may state a case for the opinion of the King's Bench Division (16 & 17 Vict. c. 112, s. 72), and may award costs (s. 73). One moiety of the penalty is to be paid to the revenue of the metropolitan police district, and the other moiety to the prosecutor, unless where the prosecutor is a member of the Dublin metropolitan police force, in which case the entire penalty goes to the revenue of the district (s. 77).

Appeals.

The Dublin Traffic Act, 1875<sup>2</sup> (38 & 39 Vict. c. cxcv), enables (s. 1) the Chief Commissioner of Police, with the approval of the Recorder of Dublin, to be given as prescribed, to make regulations as to traffic, and generally for giving effect to the provisions of the Act. The following offences are created under the Act:—obstructing thoroughfare (s. 5); driving cattle otherwise than as prescribed (s. 6); washing footways otherwise than as prescribed (s. 7); prohibition of removing dead animals, ashes, &c., between 10 a.m. and 7 p.m. in any prescribed street (s. 8); prohibition of carriage of advertisements otherwise than as prescribed (s. 9); unloading goods save as prescribed (s. 14); driving carts, &c., of greater length, &c., than prescribed (s. 15). The Chief Commissioner may, by regulations made under the authority of the Act, prescribe the pace, &c., of traffic (s. 10), or prohibit cleansing and watering of streets save as prescribed (s. 11). Within special limits to be prescribed (s. 12), the route, &c., of vehicles may be prescribed (s. 13). Any householder may, personally or by his servant, or by any constable, require any street musician to desist, under a penalty (s. 16). Shoeblocks and messengers may be licensed by the commissioner (s. 17); wrongfully obstructing standings, &c., is prohibited (s. 19). The publication of regulations and orders is provided for by s. 19, and betting in the streets is prohibited by s. 21. Penalties politan police.

Search, detention, and arrest.

D. M. P. constables have power, under warrant, to search for concealed arms (48 Geo 3, c. 140, s. 52), or for traitors, felons, or stolen goods (5 Geo. 4, c. 102, s. 13), and may, without warrant, arrest nightwalkers, suspected thieves, and all persons gaming or tipping in streets or public places, such persons to be deemed rogues and vagabonds (48 Geo. 3, c. 140, s. 53); like powers (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 29, s. 7); power to enter licensed houses and arrest tipplers or gamblers (5 Geo. 4, c. 102, s. 16), penalty for opposing entry £10 (s. 17), or refusing admittance £5 (s. 18); penalties on tipplers and gamblers, in prohibited hours, £2, £20, £50 (s. 19).

A superintendent or inspector has the right to board vessels by night or day accompanied by constables, for the purpose of directing the conduct of police constables stationed on board same, and inspecting and observing the conduct of employees on board the ship, and for the purpose of taking all such measures as may be necessary for providing against fire and other accidents, and preserving peace and good order, and for prevention or detection of felonies and misdemeanours (5 & 6 Vict. c. 24, s. 23); superintendent, inspector, or sergeant, having just cause to suspect that a felony has been or is about to be committed, may board any boat or vessel for the prevention or detection of such felony, and take into custody the persons suspected (s. 24); constable may stop, search, and detain any vessel, boat, or carriage in which there shall be reason to suspect that anything stolen or unlawfully obtained may be found or any person reasonably suspected of having or conveying property stolen or unlawfully obtained (s. 29); and between 8 p.m. and 6 a.m. to stop and detain carts suspected of removing furniture to avoid payment of rent (s. 30), horse, boat, or vehicle detained under the Act may be ordered by the justice to be sold to defray penalty and costs (s. 31); constable may apprehend without warrant any person offending within his view against the Act whose name and residence are not known (s. 26), and may apprehend without warrant disorderly persons or suspected persons, and persons found loitering between sunset and 8 a.m. (s. 27; see also 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 29, s. 7), and persons charged with recent assaults of an aggravated character (s. 28), and any person found committing any indictable offence or misdemeanour (s. 29); persons apprehended without warrant are to be taken to the nearest station-house (s. 32), where, in the case of a charge summarily triable or a charge of having carelessly done any hurt or damage, recognizance may be taken and accused discharged if the police court is shut (s. 33). Where a person charged with felony or a grave misdemeanour shall be brought to a police station without warrant, whilst the police court is shut, the complainant may be bound over, and if he refuses, accused may be liberated upon entering into recognizances (s. 34) to appear before the justice of the division at his next sitting (s. 35). Constable shall not be responsible for irregularity in any warrant executed by him (2 & 3 Vict. c. 78, s. 13); constable may destroy mad dog; owner allowing same at large after having reasonable ground for believing it in a rabid state, penalty £5 (ib., s. 15).

Stolen property.

Removing furniture at night.

*Arrest without

Accoutrements.

Constable on dismissal, &c., not delivering up accoutrements, &c., penalty one month's imprisonment (5 & 6 Vict. c. 24, s. 3); unlawful possession of accoutrements or assuming dress of constable, penalty £10 (s. 4).

Law of Distress Act,
51 & 52 Vict.
c. 47.

Part 2 of the Law of Distress and Small Debts (Ireland) Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 47), provides for the appointment of bailiffs in the city of Dublin for the purpose of levying distresses for rent, or executing any decree of the Court of Conscience, or any decree or order of the Dublin divisional justices in pursuance of their small debts jurisdiction (ss. 6, 7); and the amount of their annual salaries (s. 8); publication and advertisement of the names, &c., of bailiffs (s. 9); the maintenance by the municipal authority of a public store for the storage of all goods seized pending sale or redemption (s. 10); storage charges (s. 11). If any bailiff or assistant bailiff shall extort any money or security for money, or other thing, or if any person, not being authorized as provided by the Act, shall act as a bailiff in cases within the Act, such person so offending shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, punishable by fine not exceeding £20, or imprisonment not exceeding twelve calendar months, with or without hard labour; or such person may be proceeded against summarily, and upon conviction shall be punishable by fine not exceeding £20, or imprisonment not exceeding six calendar months, with or without hard labour (s. 12). If any such bailiff or person assisting him shall offend against any of the provisions of the Act, or shall be guilty of any misconduct or illegality in the case of any distress or execution within the Act, other than in the last preceding section mentioned, the person aggrieved may proceed summarily against such offender, who on conviction shall be punishable by fine not exceeding £10, or imprisonment not exceeding three calendar months, with or without hard labour (s. 13). In any case within this or the preceding section the court may order the certificate of the offender to be withdrawn or suspended; and such order shall be transmitted to the municipal authority, or to the Recorder of Dublin, in case the certificate was granted by him, and the certificate shall be withdrawn or suspended accordingly: Provided that in case of any distress or execution within the Act, any person feeling aggrieved by anything done thereunder, or claiming to be the owner of any of the goods seized, may proceed by complaint in a court of summary jurisdiction, and the court may order all persons interested to be summoned, and shall give all requisite orders and directions as the justice of the case may require, whether as to the custody of the goods pending litigation, or the terms upon which the same should be sold, or for the return of the goods on such terms as to giving security or otherwise as shall appear just (s. 13). Summary proceedings under Part II. of the Act shall be regulated as in cases of summary jurisdiction under the Acts regulating the court of the divisional justices in Dublin, and subject to the like appeal, and shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any remedies existing before the Act (s. 14).

Distress Act.

The Indictable Offences (Ireland) Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 69),<sup>1</sup> does not appear in the revised statutes; but, nevertheless, the statute is in force so far as Dublin is concerned, and is the sole statute now regulating procedure in indictable cases in the metropolitan police district. The Petty Sessions Act (14 & 15 Vict. c. 93, s. 43) purports to repeal the Indictable Offences Act. But, since the Petty Sessions Act applies to the Dublin metropolitan police district only in so far as it relates to the backing and execution of warrants (s. 41), the effect is to leave the Indictable Offences (Ireland) Act in force in Dublin.

Indictable
offences.

In all cases where a charge or complaint is made that any person has committed, or is suspected to have committed, any treason, felony, or indictable misdemeanour, or other indictable offence, within the limits of the jurisdiction of the justice, or that any person guilty, or suspected to be guilty, of having committed any such crime or offence elsewhere out of the jurisdiction of such justice is residing, or being or is suspected to reside, or be within the limits of the jurisdiction of such justice, the justice may issue his warrant for the apprehension of such person; or, the justice may issue a summons in the first instance, and, if the summons be not obeyed, may then issue a warrant (s. 1). The justice may issue a warrant to apprehend for indictable offences committed on the high seas or abroad when the offender is, or is suspected to be, within the district (s. 2), or to apprehend a party against whom an indictment is found (s. 3), and may issue warrants on enforce appearance,

&c.

<sup>1</sup> The opinion has always been acted upon, without question, that the Indictable Offences (Ir.) Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 69), applies to the police district of Dublin metropolis. Possibly the correctness of this view may never be formally decided; but the statute itself affords some indication that it was never intended to apply to Dublin (see ss. 1, 20, 22, 29, and Smyth's "Justice of the Peace," p. 192, Macnally's "Justice," vol. i., p. 177).

Indictable offences.	Sundays, including search warrants (s. 4). Certain rights are given in the case of indictable offences to act as justices for an adjoining county (ss. 5-7). If a warrant is to be issued, the information must be in writing and on oath; but if a summons only is to issue, the information need not be in writing or upon oath (s. 8). A summons is to be served by delivering same to the party personally, or if, he cannot conveniently be met with, by leaving the same with some person for him at his last or most usual place of abode (s. 9). No objection is to be taken or allowed to any information or complaint, summons or warrant, for any alleged defect therein in substance or in form, or for any variance between it and the evidence; but if any such variance shall appear to the justice to be such that the party has been deceived or misled, the justice may adjourn, remanding the party charged or admitting him to bail (ss. 8, 9, 10). A warrant to apprehend must be under the hand and seal of the justice, and may be directed to a constable by name or to the constables generally in the county or district in which the justice has jurisdiction, and may be executed within the place of jurisdiction, or in the case of fresh pursuit at any place in the next adjoining county, within seven miles of the border (s. 10). A justice is empowered to summon witnesses for the prosecution within his jurisdiction under his hand and seal, <sup>1</sup> to attend and give evidence, and if summons is not obeyed, warrant may issue; and if the justice is satisfied that the witness will not attend in the first instance, warrant may be issued; persons appearing in answer to a summons and refusing to be examined may be committed for seven days (s. 16). The depositions must be taken in writing, and the deposition of persons who have died can be read in evidence at the trial (s. 17). After examination of the accused the justice is to read the depositions taken against him, and caution him as to any statement he may make, and inform him that he has nothing to hope or fear from either promise or threat, and the statement of accused will be taken down and signed by the justice (s. 18). The place where the examination is taken is not to be deemed an open court, and the justice may order that no person remain without consent (s. 19).

Power is given to remand for a period not exceeding eight days, by warrant; if remand for three days only, by verbal order; the accused may be admitted to bail; if party does not appear on recognizance, the justices may transmit the same to the clerk of the peace (s. 21). If a person be apprehended in one county on charge of an offence committed in another, he may be examined in the former, and, if evidence be deemed sufficient, may be committed to the prison for the county or place where the offence is alleged to have been committed; if insufficient, he is to be brought before some justice in the latter county (s. 22). Power is given to the justices to admit to bail persons charged with any felony (save felonies under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 12), or with any assault with intent to commit any felony, or with any attempt to commit any felony, or with any offence against 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 34 (the Whiteboy Act), or with obtaining or attempting to obtain Justices shall admit to bail persons charged with other misdemeanours (ib.). No bail in cases of treason or felony under 11 and 12 Vict. c. 12, but by order of the Lord Lieutenant or the King's Bench Division (s. 24). If the evidence is not thought sufficient, the accused is to be discharged, otherwise the accused is to be committed for trial (s. 25). The defendant is entitled to have copies of the depositions at a cost not exceeding 1½*d.* per ninety words (s. 27).

Disposal of prisoner.

It may be noted that the jurisdiction, outside that of trials at bar in the King's Bench, in respect of crimes committed in the city and county of Dublin is as follows:—(A) The city (1) under the Commission issued by the authority of the 2 Geo. 2, c. 15; (2) under the powers conferred on the Recorder by the charters of the city and the provisions of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 108; (B) in the county (1) under the Commission issued under the authority of the Act of 1729 already referred to; (2) the quarter sessions held at Kilmainham.

Criminal trials in city and county of Dublin.

There was no commission of assize ever issued to the county of Dublin. Since, however, the extension to Ireland by the 63rd section of 40 & 41 Vict. c. 57 of the Winter Assize Act, 1876, this county has, under the provisions of that Act, been occasionally named as the winter assize county for Leinster. The criminal business of the county was, up to 1798, mainly discharged at the quarter sessions, Kilmainham, which was usually presided over by a judge or serjeant. In that year, owing to the great increase of crime, as recited in the preamble of the 38 Geo. 3, c. 55 (Ir.), power was given to appoint a permanent chairman of these sessions, the Act preserving the right to preside to a judge of the King's Bench or serjeant in event of either being present at the sessions. This mode of appointment was repealed by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 57.

The Recorder of the city is, since the passing of the 40 & 41 Vict. c. 56, the ex-officio chairman of these quarter sessions. In the city, amongst other charters, that of 2 Rich. 3 names the mayor and Recorder<sup>1</sup> for the time being justices of Oyer and Terminer and general gaol delivery within the city suburbs and franchises, with liberty to deliver the city gaol. Many other charters and statutory provisions followed, dealing with the city criminal court, and in the result "all crimes and offences committed within these limits, except treason, are within the cognizance and jurisdiction of this court."<sup>2</sup>

The provisions of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 108, vest all the powers of the court in the Recorder, who sits as sole judge.

Justices' Protection Act, 1849.

Acts within jurisdiction.

*Acts without
jurisdiction.*

*Other pro-

To entitle a plaintiff to succeed in an action brought against a justice of the peace for an act done by him within his jurisdiction, it is necessary for the plaintiff to allege in the statement of claim, and to prove at the trial, that the act was done maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause (Justices' Protection Act, 1849, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 16, s. 1).<sup>1</sup> But if the act is done without or in excess of jurisdiction, the action will lie without such allegation or proof, provided that no action shall be brought (1) for anything done under a conviction or order until the same has been quashed, either upon appeal or upon application to the King's Bench Division, (2) for anything done under a warrant to compel appearance if the warrant has been followed by a conviction or order, until the conviction or order has been quashed, or (3) where a warrant to compel appearance has not been followed by a conviction or order, or is a warrant upon an information for an alleged indictable offence, if the warrant was preceded by a summons and the summons was disobeyed (s. 2). Where a conviction or order shall be made by one or more justices, and a warrant of distress or commitment shall be granted thereon by some other justice bona fide and without collusion, no action shall be brought against the justice who granted the warrant by reason of any defect in the conviction or order or for want of jurisdiction in the justice who made the same, but the action must be against the justice or justices who made the conviction or order (s. 3). No action lies against a justice for issuing a distress warrant for recovery of poor rate by reason of any irregularity or defect in the rate, or of the party not being liable to be rated, nor against a justice for the manner in which he exercises a discretionary power (s. 4). No action lies against a justice for conforming to a rule of the King's Bench Division directing him to do an act (s. 5). No action lies against a justice for anything done under a warrant of distress or commitment upon any order or conviction which has been affirmed on appeal (s. 6). In all cases where by the Act it is enacted that no action shall be brought under particular circumstances,<sup>2</sup> if any such action shall be brought, it shall be lawful for a judge of the court in which the same shall be brought, upon application of the defendant, and upon an affidavit of the facts, to set aside the proceedings with or without costs (s. 7). The plaintiff in any action brought against a justice shall not recover more than 2*l.* damages if he is proved to have been guilty of the offence of which he was convicted, or that he was liable by law to pay the sum he was ordered to pay, and, with respect to imprisonment, that he had undergone no greater punishment than that assigned by law for the offence of which he was so convicted, or for non-payment of the sum he was ordered to pay (s. 13).

Justices' Protection Act, 1849.

Under s. 1 of the statute, it is necessary, in actions brought, in respect of acts done within a justice's jurisdiction, to allege and prove malice and want of reasonable and probable cause. From a large number of cases, the following have been selected to show the conditions necessary for the success of an action against justices. Some of the cases were decided before 12 & 13 Vict. c. 16, but sections 1 and 2 of that statute were merely declaratory of the existing law.

Examples.

Rogers v. Jones, (1824) 5 D. & R. 268. Where a justice committed a party to prison for an alleged offence against one statute, and afterwards drew up a conviction for a different offence from that stated in the warrant of commitment. Held, that the conviction was no justification of the magistrate in an action against him for false imprisonment.

James v. Saunders, (1834) 10 Bing. 429. Whether a justice was acting as a justice may, under certain circumstances (e.g., where the defendant, on the occasion of street disturbances, seized and detained the plaintiff until a constable came up), be a question for the jury.

Newman v. Hardwicke, (1838) 8 A. & E. 124, 3 N. & P. 368, 7 L.J.M.C. 101. If goods be seized upon a warrant, founded upon a conviction which is bad upon its face, the justices issuing the warrant are liable in trespass.

Annette v. Osborne, (1840) 2 Jebb & Sym. 376, 2 I.L.R. 317, 1 Cr. & Dix C.C. 540. A justice who arrests upon his own suspicion of a felony must be able to show, not only that the suspicion was reasonable, but that what he did under the influence of it was no more than was necessary to prevent the escape of the suspected person. The reasonableness of the suspicion is a question for the jury.

Cave v. Mountain, (1840) 1 M. & G. 257, 9 L.J.M.C. 90. A warrant was issued on an information which charged a felony, and which, in support of the offence alleged, adduced evidence that was entirely hearsay, and therefore inadmissible. Held, that though the admission of the hearsay evidence was wrong, yet the justice had acted within his jurisdiction. Where, supposing the facts alleged to be true, the justices have jurisdiction, their liability to be sued, or their exemption from such liability on the ground of jurisdiction, cannot be affected by the truth or falsehood of these facts, or by the sufficiency or insufficiency of the evidence adduced for the purpose of establishing them.

Stevens v. Clark, (1842) Car. & M. 509, 2 M. & Rob. 435. Where a justice defends an action brought in respect of anything done under a warrant issued by him, he must, in order to succeed, prove not merely that the warrant is regular, but that it is founded upon an information duly sworn.

Clark v. Woods, (1848) 2 Ex. 395. The English statute 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 4, limits the period for which a person can be imprisoned, in default of payment of sums directed to be paid by him under that statute, to one month. A warrant issued under the statute directed defendant to be detained in prison "until payment of the said sum." Held, that the warrant was bad in toto, and that an action of trespass lay against the justices and the constable for an arrest and imprisonment under it, and defendant was held entitled to recover back all moneys paid under it. The backing of a warrant (under 24 Geo 2., c. 55, s. 1) by a justice is merely ministerial, and the justice who issues the warrant is responsible for an arrest under it, although it be backed and executed in a county other than that in which it is issued.

Examples.

Linford v. Fitzroy, (1849) 13 Q.B. 240, 18 L.J.M.C. 108, 13 Jur. 303. In an action against a justice for refusing to take bail on a charge of misdemeanour in which the justice was bound to take bail. Held, that defendant's duty in this respect was not merely ministerial, and that the action was not sustainable without proof of malice.

Barton v. Bricknell, (1850) 13 Q.B. 393. Action for trespass to plaintiff's goods. The conviction had been quashed because it contained an illegal alternative of confinement in the stocks on non-payment. The plaintiff had not been in fact put in the stocks, but his goods had been seized. Held, that the act complained of (the distress of the goods) was within the jurisdiction, though had plaintiff been imprisoned in the stocks this would have been an act without jurisdiction.

Leary v. Patrick, (1850) 15 Q.B. 266, 19 L.J.M.C. 211. The plaintiff was convicted in a penalty of £5, no mention being made of costs. A warrant of distress was issued, reciting a conviction for £5 and 12s. costs. The warrant was afterwards quashed. Held, that there was an excess of jurisdiction in the issue of the warrant, and that an action was maintainable against the justice issuing it.

Ratt v. Parkinson, (1851) 20 L.J.M.C. 208. Defendant was summoned for non-payment of a church rate. The justices, without drawing up a formal order, issued a warrant, which was dated, but omitted to recite the order and to show a previous disobedience of the order. Held, that the error was merely one of form, and that the justices were entitled to the protection of section 1. "I should be inclined to think that exceeding his jurisdiction in section 2 means assuming to do something which the Act under which he is proceeding could by no possibility justify, as in the case in the Queen's Bench of Leary v. Patrick . . . But I abstain from offering an opinion on this point" (ib., per Jervis, C.J.; but see Coghlan v. Woods, (1882) 10 L.R.I. 29).

Haylock v. Sparke, (1853) 1 E. & B. 471, 22 L.J.M.C. 67. A person having been charged with having published a criminal libel, the justice, who had jurisdiction to bind him to be of good behaviour, but none to bind to the peace, required the offender to find sureties to keep the peace, and on default issued a warrant. Held, that the warrant was an act within jurisdiction, though informally exercised.

Bessell v. Wilson, (1853) 1 E. & B. 489, 22 L.J.M.C. 94. In the case of an offence tried summarily, a justice has no jurisdiction to issue a warrant where the defendant appears by counsel or solicitor; and where he does so he will not be entitled to the protection of section 1.

Grady v. Hunt, (1855) 5 I.C.L.R. 445. A justice's warrant of committal to prison until the party find sufficient sureties of the peace is illegal, if it omit to specify the time for which he is to be kept in prison. The issuing of such a warrant is an act without jurisdiction (see also Prickett v. Gratrex, (1846) 8 Q.B. 1020).

Lalor v. Bland, (1858) 8 I.C.L.R. 115. The provision in the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 16, s. 2 (forbidding the bringing of an action until the conviction is set aside), only applies to actions within that section, i.e., for acts done without or in excess of jurisdiction.

Bott v. Ackroyd, (1859) 28 L.J.M.C. 207, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1053, 7 W.R. 420. The defendants, justices of the peace, convicted the plaintiff in a penalty of £2 and costs or two months' imprisonment. Against this decision, which was given orally, the plaintiff gave notice of appeal, and immediately left the court. A conviction and warrant of commitment were afterwards drawn up, in which blanks were left for the amount of costs to be inserted, and so signed by the defendants. The blanks were afterwards filled up by the magistrate's clerk, and the plaintiff was arrested on the warrant, when he, for the first time, became aware of the amount of costs. Held, that the signing in blank for the defendants was a mere irregularity and not an excess of jurisdiction, and that the plaintiff having brought an action for false imprisonment was rightly non-sued under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, s. 1, identical with the Irish Act, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 16, s. 1 (see also R. v. Binney, (1853) 1 E. & B. 810).

Lawrenson v. Hill, (1860) 10 I.C.L.R. 177. A warrant issued by a justice founded upon an information which discloses no criminal offence, cannot be sustained by proof that there was in fact parol evidence on oath given which conveyed a criminal charge. Though the justice has a general jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the inquiry, yet the particular act of issuing such a warrant is without or in excess of jurisdiction, and an action brought for plaintiff's arrest and false imprisonment is maintainable under s. 2 of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 16. Under that section the bona fide belief of the justice that he is acting within his jurisdiction affords no defence (see M'Donald v. Bulwer, (1862) 13 I.C.L.R. 549).

Pease v. Chaytor, (1863) 3 B. & S. 620. Justices are not liable to an action if they honestly, though erroneously, decide that an objection to the validity of a rate made at the hearing of a complaint for non-payment of arrears is not bona fide, and proceed to adjudicate and issue their warrant to enforce payment.

Maloney v. French, (1869) I.R. 3 C.L. 391. A justice of the peace has no power, where a prisoner is brought before him, and he is otherwise too occupied to investigate the charge, to order that the prisoner be kept in custody till such time as the defendant or some other justice shall be able to inquire into the matter; and an action for false imprisonment will lie if he does so. If a justice, for any reason, cannot go into the case against a prisoner brought before him, he ought to direct the person in whose custody such prisoner is to bring him before some other justice (Edwards v. Ferris, (1836) 7 C. & P. 542).

Smith v. Ewen, (1875) 39 J.P. 724. Where a summons purported to have been served upon a defendant by being left at his house whilst he was at sea, and he, before his return from sea, was convicted summarily and sentenced to imprisonment upon the charge set forth in the summons, it was held that an action lay against the justices as for an act done without jurisdiction (see 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 1, corresponding to 14 & 15 Vict. c. 93, s. 12 (2), as to service of summons, and 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 13, corresponding to 14 & 15 Vict. c. 93, s. 20 (2), as to proceeding in absence of defendant). But the correctness of this decision, or at all events of the reason given for it, seems open to question. It appears from the cases cited, p. 49, et seq., that it is within the jurisdiction of the justices to determine whether the summons has been served a reasonable time before the hearing, and that, indeed, the High Court will not, generally speaking, interfere with their determination upon this point. It is submitted that where they inquire into the question of service, and bona fide come to a conclusion upon it, no action lies against them, though their conclusion is erroneous (see Johnston v. Meldon, (1891) 30 L.R.I. 15, infra). It would of course be otherwise if the justices convicted without making any inquiry as to service, or if they acted, in such inquiry, maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause.

Forbes v. Lloyd, (1876) I.R. 10 C.L. 552. In case of a dispute in a fair or market, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 92, s. 17 (1), authorizes a justice to cause all parties to be brought before him. Held, that these words did not authorize the arrest of a defendant who had not been summoned to appear, and that an action lay for false arrest.

Coghlan v. Woods, (1882) 10 L.R.I. 29. If a warrant committing a person to a lunatic asylum as a dangerous lunatic under 30 and 31 Vict. c. 118, fails to show upon its face all the elements material to the jurisdiction, e.g., that the justices called in a proper medical officer, and that such officer gave the requisite medical certificate, an action for false imprisonment will lie against the justices as well as the medical superintendent of the asylum.

Johnston v. Meldon, (1891) 30 L.R.I. 15. The plaintiff was convicted of an offence against the fishery laws. At the hearing the defendant raised a question of title. The justices honestly, but mistakenly, proceeded to adjudicate. The conviction was afterwards quashed on the ground that the claim was bona fide. Held, that an action for false imprisonment suffered on the conviction did not lie, (1) because where means of knowledge, as distinguished from knowledge, of want of jurisdiction are relied on to sustain an action against a justice for an act done without jurisdiction, the action will lie only when the justice acted maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause; and (2) that the jurisdiction was to inquire as to whether the claim was bona fide or not; that such jurisdiction was a continuing one, and that a decision thereon, though erroneous, and all subsequent proceedings, were within the jurisdiction.

Polley v. Fordham, (No. 2) (1904) 91 L.T. 525, 68 J.P. 504, 20 T.L.R. 639. Where it appears upon the face of a summons that a justice has no jurisdiction to entertain the matter, it is immaterial that the want of jurisdiction was not brought to his knowledge at the hearing of such summons, and the plaintiff, in an action against the justice, need not allege malice or want of reasonable and probable cause.

Quinn v. Pratt, (1908) 2 I.R. 69. Sect. 1 of 60 & 61 Vict. c. 30, gives power to a "court of summary jurisdiction" to make orders with respect to property in possession of the police. A was charged with larceny of certain property, and returned for trial. Afterwards, in the absence of the defendant A, and others who claimed to be interested in the property, two justices, sitting in the day-room of a police barrack, purported to make an order disposing of the property under sect. 1 of 60 & 61 Vict. c. 30. Held, (1) that the two justices sitting as aforesaid were not a court of summary jurisdiction, and (2) that there was no jurisdiction to make the order without the parties interested being present or summoned to attend; and that, therefore, an action for trover of the goods lay against the justices.

upon its face.

Some of the above-mentioned cases (Newman v. Hardwicke, (1838) 8 A. & E. 124, Coghlan v. Woods, (1882) 10 L.R.I. 29) apparently show that a conviction or order which is bad upon its face affords no defence to an action against a justice, for such a conviction or order is without or in excess of jurisdiction (see remarks of Pales, C.B., in Re Heaphy, (1888) 22 L.R.I. 500, 511). The conviction or order must, however, be quashed before an action can be taken upon it (s. 2; cf. Lalor v. Bland, (1858) 8 I.C.L.R. 115, and McDonald v. Bulwer, (1862) 13 I.C.L.R. 549); and "the plaintiff can recover as damages no more than two pence, if it be proved that he was guilty of the offence charged, or that he was liable to pay the sum that he was ordered to pay, or that the punishment ordered was no greater than that authorized by law" (Justices' Protection Act, 1849, s. 13). The words "guilty of the offence charged" apply, it is submitted, to criminal proceedings, and probably would receive a liberal interpretation, so as to include a case where the conviction is set aside as not fully or accurately describing the offence, and clearly would apply where a conviction is set aside as containing a general adjudication of guilt, in respect of a summons charging several offences conjunctively or distinctively. The words "that he was liable to pay the sum that he was ordered to pay" apparently apply to orders of a civil nature (s. 13).

proof.

In any action for acts done within the justice's jurisdiction, it is not sufficient for the plaintiff to prove his innocence, and to call on the defendant to show probable cause; the plaintiff must give such evidence of what passed on the hearing (by calling the witnesses for the prosecution, or otherwise) that it may appear there was no probable cause for the conviction (Burley v. Bethune, (1814) 5 Taunt. 580, decided on 43 Geo. 3, c. 141; see also Abrath v. N. E. R. Co., (1883) 11 Q.B.D. 440). Unless special reasons are shown, particulars will not be ordered of the matters relied on as reasonable cause (Roberts v. Owens, (1890) 54 J.P. 295; 6 L.T.R. 172).

Setting aside
proceedings.

Section 7 of the Justices' Protection Act, 1849, enables the High Court to set aside, on the application of the defendant, and with or without costs, proceedings brought against a justice, in all cases where by the Act it is enacted that no action "shall be brought under particular circumstances" (that is, of course, where such circumstances exist in the particular case). Instances of such statutory prohibition are:—action not to be brought in respect of a conviction unless the conviction is quashed, nor for an act done under a warrant to compel appearance, if a conviction did not follow, or if a summons were previously served, and not obeyed (s. 2). The only reported case under s. 7 is that of Rockford v. Rynd, (1881) 8 L.R. 1. 204, where the application to stay was based upon the circumstance that the action was late, having been instituted upwards of six months from the cause of action, which was forbidden by section 8 of the Act.<sup>1</sup>

Setting aside proceedings.

Justices issued a warrant of distress, in ignorance of the fact that the conviction to enforce which the distress was sought had been quashed. The action not having been brought within six months, an application was made, under section 7, to set aside the proceedings; and the point was made by the plaintiff that the issuing of the distress warrant was not an act done by the justices in execution of their office, and therefore was not within section 8. Held, that as the affidavits in support of the motion (while averring that the defendants bona fide believed that they were justified in acting as they did) did not show facts upon which such belief was founded, they were deficient, and the motion should be refused (Rockford v. Rynd, supra).

A justice of the peace, when sitting in the course of his judicial duties, is a "judge" within the meaning of the rule laid down by Munster v. Lamb, (1883) 11 Q.B.D. 588, and Hodson v. Pare, (1899) 1 Q.B. 455, that defamatory observations by a judge in the course of his judicial duties are not actionable (Law v. Llewellyn, (1906) 1 K.B. 487).<sup>2</sup> The statements of witnesses, counsel, and solicitors are also absolutely privileged (Dawkins v. Lord Rokeby, (1875) L.R. 7 H.L. 744; Munster v. Lamb, (1883) 11 Q.B.D. 588). A member of a county council, sitting to hear applications for music and dancing licences in England, is not absolutely privileged, and is only entitled to the qualified privilege extending to a communication made without malice on a privileged occasion (Royal Aquarium Society v. Parkinson, (1892) 1 Q.B. 431); but justices in Ireland at licensing sessions are a Court (R. Findlater v. Dublin J.J., (1904) 2 I.R. 75), and seem therefore to be absolutely privileged.

Action for defamation.

Where defendant was arrested under a warrant which was altogether bad, he was held entitled to recover as special damages against the justices the costs of obtaining his release (Norton v. Monckton, (1895) 43 W.R. 350). An action will lie against the governor of a prison for imprisoning a defendant under a defective warrant (Demer v. Cook, (1903) 88 L.T. 629, 67 J.P. 206); but where a gaoler receives a prisoner under a warrant which is correct in form, no action will lie against him if it should turn out that the warrant was improperly issued, or that the court had no jurisdiction to issue

Arrest under defective warrant.

<sup>1</sup> Section 8 is now repealed, but the Public Authorities' Protection Act, 1843, contains a similar provision; and the proceedings could now be stayed or set aside in the like case by the court, under its inherent jurisdiction (see Judicature (Ir.) Act, 1877, s. 27, (5), Wylie, pp. 34-37).

it (Henderson v. Preston, (1888) 21 Q.B.D. 362; Greaves v. Keene, (1879) 4 Ex. D. 73).

Criminal
information.

Proceedings by way of criminal information may, by leave or direction of the King's Bench Division, be taken against a justice where he has been guilty of such misconduct in his office "as calls for punishment upon public grounds" (Paley, 8th ed., 511), such as acting from a dishonest, oppressive, or corrupt motive (see R. v. Borron, (1820) 3 B. & Ald. 432; R. v. Badger, (1843) 4 Q.B. 468). Notice containing a distinct statement of the matters complained of must be served personally upon the justice, or left at his residence with some member of his household, six days before the time named in it for making the necessary application to the King's Bench Division for leave (Order 84, Rule 22: see R. v. Rae, (1874) 1 R. 8 C. L. 524.). The application is by motion to the divisional court for a conditional order within a reasonable time after the matters complained of, and supported by an affidavit of the applicant that the defendant was actuated by corrupt motives, and further, if the application is in respect of an unjust conviction, that the applicant is innocent of the charge (Order 84, Rule 23).

The costs are entirely in the discretion of the court; and even where a rule has been discharged, a justice has been ordered to pay the costs (see R. v. Dodson, (1839) 9 A. & E. 704). This discretion is not interfered with by the Public Authorities' Protection Act, 1893 (Paley, 8th ed. 515).

Time for action.

An action against a justice must be brought within six months after the acts complained of; notice of action is no longer necessary (Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, 56 & 57 Vict. c. 61). The defendant, a police magistrate, convicted the plaintiff of an offence, and ordered him to pay a fine. The plaintiff having failed to pay the fine, the defendant issued a distress warrant under which the plaintiff's goods were seized. The conviction was subsequently quashed. The plaintiff thereupon brought an action against the defendant for illegal distress. The action was commenced more than six months after the conviction was made, but less than six months after the distress warrant was issued. Held, that the action was not barred by the Public Authorities' Protection Act (Polley v. Fordham, (1904) 2 K.B. 345). The six months are reckoned exclusive of the day of committing the act complained of (Clarke v. Davey, (1820) 4 Moore, 465). Thus, if the imprisonment in respect of which the plaintiff claims damages ends on December 14th, the action will be in time if the writ is issued on June 14th (Hardy v. Ryle, (1829) 9 B. & C. 603); but the damages will be limited, in case of a continuing imprisonment, to such portion of it as was suffered within six calendar months from the issue of the writ (Massey v. Johnson, (1809) 12 East 67). In case of an illegal distress the time is reckoned from the date of the sale of the distress (Collins v. Rose, (1839) 5 M. & W. 194).

CLERK OF PETTY SESSIONS.

THE method of appointing a clerk of petty sessions is prescribed by the Petty Sessions Clerk Act, 21 & 22 Vict. c. 100, s. 7.<sup>1</sup> Whenever a vacancy arises in the office of a petty sessions clerk serving one district only, the justices of such petty sessions shall nominate some person to hold the office ; and in any borough having a separate commission of the peace within 3 & 4 Vict. c. 108 (as to which see p. 6, ante), and for which borough petty sessions are held, the clerk shall be nominated by the justices of the borough. Whenever a vacancy shall arise in the office of petty sessions clerk serving two or more districts, the justices of such districts shall appoint some proper person to fill such office. Notice is to be given by the clerk of the peace of the time and place of election, the notice to be published in some newspaper circulating in the county or division, and served upon each such justice seven days previous to the election. Every appointment shall be notified to the registrar.

There is no definition of the term "the justices of such petty sessions." According to opinions of the law officers of 22nd October, 1866, 7th June, 1867, 11th September, 1871, and 11th May, 1875, the phrase includes a justice for the county who is resident in the district, or one of the districts, or a justice who, though not so resident, has been in the habit of attending and acting as a justice at the petty sessions of the district, or one of the districts. A justice cannot be considered as having been in the habit of attending and acting for the district who has not attended at least four times in each of the three years next preceding the election, or if the justice has been appointed for less than three years, he must have attended a proportionate number of times. But it is submitted that these opinions are only meant as a rough guide, to be modified according to the circumstances, e.g., in case of a justice who has been prevented by illness from attending. The chairman has no casting vote. In R. (Rogcroft) v. Cork JJ., (1910) 2 I.R. 601, it was held that a justice who had not been resident in the county for over twenty years, but who occasionally visited the county, and last adjudicated while on a visit in the county four years prior to the election, was not a justice of the district, and the opinions of the law officers above mentioned (and cited in Molloy's Justice of the Peace, p. 494) were referred to, with approval (p. 611). See also p. 333, post.

Appointment.

In the case of R. (Fitzgerald) v. Kerry J.J. (1910) 44 I.L.T.R. 352, at an election of a petty sessions clerk for the C district, eleven magistrates took part. Five voted for F, six for B. F moved for a mandamus on the ground that X and Y, who voted for B, were not qualified: X, though owning property in the district, being resident twelve miles away, and having last attended petty sessions in the district in the year 1903: Y, though owning property in the district, being a bank manager and resident at M, in the adjoining county, and having last attended petty sessions in the district in the year 1900. B objected to several magistrates, inter alia, to H, who resided three miles away in another district, and who had attended petty sessions in the district once in each of the preceding years, and F, who was chairman of the rural district council, on the ground that he was only ex-officio a member of the bench. The court held that X, Y, and H were disqualified, that, there being four lawful votes each way, a mandamus must issue for a new election, that, in the case of a magistrate residing outside the petty sessions district, attendance at petty sessions was a necessary qualification, the mere issuing of summonses, &c., not being enough. The court refrained from deciding whether a justice residing within the district could be qualified without attendance at petty sessions.

The office is held during the pleasure of the justices of the district or districts, and the Lord Lieutenant (s. 8 (1)).

Where an election was held, and the result was in dispute, the Lord Lieutenant signified his pleasure that neither candidate should hold office under the said election, and that a new election should take place. On an application by one of the candidates for a writ of mandamus to admit him to the office, it was held that the writ should be refused, for the writ will not issue in vain, and would be ineffectual, having regard to section 8 and the declared pleasure of the Lord Lieutenant (R. (Whitley) v. Cork J.J. (1909) 43 I.L.T.R. 133). But a mandamus will be granted to compel a new election (R. (Rogers) v. Cork J.J., supra; R. (Fitzgerald) v. Kerry J.J., supra).

Security must be given by the clerk before he enters on his duties (21 & 22 Vict. c. 100, s. 11, sch. B; 44 & 45 Vict., c. 18, s. 3). He shall not practise as a barrister or solicitor, or act as a solicitor's clerk, clerk of poor law union, or collector of any public tax, or be concerned in the keeping of any hotel, tavern, eating-house, or licensed house, or engage in any business which the Lord Lieutenant by general or special order shall prohibit (21 & 22 Vict. c. 100, s. 8).

Regulations.

The following regulations are in force<sup>1</sup> regarding the position:—

A clerk whose salary does not exceed £70 per annum is, immediately after his election, and before approval, required to pass an examination in the subjects set out in No. I.

If the salary exceeds £70 per annum, a clerk is given six months to prepare in the subjects set out in No. II., and may also be required to pass in the subjects of No. I. as soon as elected.

All details of the examination No. II. are sent to a clerk on his election.

<sup>1</sup> The Lord Lieutenant has power to make rules for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the Act (s. 29); and whether this section gives power to make the above regulations seems immaterial, inasmuch as the Lord Lieutenant's concurrence is required to the appointment of every clerk.

No. I.

Regulations.

Writing. Arithmetic. Dictation.

The Filing of Returns.

The Taking of Informations, and preparing Petty Sessions Forms.

No. II.

Certain portions of Mr. Justice Stephens' Digest of the Criminal Law, and Digest of the Law of Evidence ;

Certain portions of Humphrey's Justice of the Peace, or Supple's Justice of the Peace and Guide to Petty Sessions Clerks ;

The principal statutes relating to the duties of Clerks of Petty Sessions ; and Circulars to Petty Sessions Clerks and Magistrates.

The limits of age of persons eligible for the appointment of Clerk of Petty Sessions are twenty-one and forty years, except in the following cases, viz. :—

I.—The limits of age are twenty-one and fifty years in the case of a candidate who is—

- (1) A magistrate. [Magistrates are not eligible as candidates in the Petty Sessions District in which they reside, or in which they attend at Petty Sessions] ;
- (2) A practising barrister ;
- (3) A solicitor ;
- (4) A clerk of a solicitor of not less than 10 years' standing ;
- (5) A conducting clerk of a solicitor of not less than 7 years' standing ;
- (6) A person who has for 5 years immediately preceding his candidature constantly assisted a Petty Sessions Clerk ;
- (7) A recognised assistant to the Petty Sessions Clerk of Belfast or Cork, who is paid by the Department ;
- (8) A retired district inspector, head constable, sergeant, or constable of the Royal Irish Constabulary.

(The rule at (8) also applies to members of the Royal Irish Constabulary who are still serving, but they must retire before their appointment as Clerk of Petty Sessions is approved.)

II.—The limits of age are twenty-one and fifty-five years, in the case of a candidate who is a Petty Sessions Clerk.

The candidate elected must undergo a medical examination as to his fitness for the post.

The Lord Lieutenant may order that two or more districts shall be served by one clerk (20 & 21 Vict. c. 100, s. 6). Districts and salaries.

By the Petty Sessions Clerks and Fines (Ireland) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 69, s. 2), the Lord Lieutenant is empowered to fix, and from time to time vary, a scale of salaries to be paid to the several petty sessions clerks in lieu of the scale set forth in the schedule to the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 100. The Petty Sessions Clerks (Ireland) Act, 1881, 44 & 45 Vict. c. 18, s. 1, enacts that the salaries and emoluments of petty sessions clerks shall not be raised or lowered on account of the amount of fines levied in the court of which they are clerks, or on account of the amount of stamps used therein, but may be raised on account of the length of service, or for merit, or for new duties attached to the office, and shall not be liable to be reduced during the tenure of the same occupant. The justices are obliged, if required by the Chief or Under-Secretary, to make a return of the business done, and of all fees and fines received in the district for any period not exceeding seven years (21 & 22 Vict. c. 100, s. 9).

If a clerk of petty sessions shall cease to hold the office, by reason of inability to perform the duties, or by reason of the consolidation of districts or offices, the Lord Lieutenant, on the recommendation of the justices, may direct that he shall be paid such gross sum by way of gratuity, or such annual sum by way of pension, as to the Lord Lieutenant shall appear just, such gratuity not to exceed the amount of three years' fees, and such pension not to exceed two-thirds of the salary (21 & 22 Vict. c. 100, s. 12). The pension shall cease if the pensioner shall be appointed petty sessions clerk of any district, or to any other public office or situation of equal value (s. 12). As to the fund out of which the gratuity or pension is payable, see p. 333. All the provisions of 21 & 22 Vict. c. 100, s. 12, apply to the assistants who are employed pursuant to 21 & 22 Vict. c. 100, s. 10) of the clerks of petty sessions at Cork and Belfast (7 Ed. 7, c. 22.).

The duties of the clerk of petty sessions cannot be performed by deputy, except in case of sickness, unavoidable absence, or other emergency, in which event the justices may appoint a temporary substitute (21 & 22 Vict. c. 100, s. 8).

Duties.

The duties of the clerk of petty sessions are defined by the Petty Sessions (Ireland) Act, 1851, ss. 5, 10, 21, the Petty Sessions Clerks (Ireland) Act, 1858, s. 8, and the Petty Sessions Clerks and Fines (Ireland) Act, 1878, s. 5. These duties are as follows: (1) To make minutes of all proceedings either in or out of sessions in a "minute book," and to enter up the orders at petty sessions in the "order book"; (2) to have custody of the books to be kept in the courthouse or place of holding petty sessions; (3) to prepare all informations and other forms; (4) to retain a copy in a book of all orders, circulars, and opinions of law officers, and to make copies of all informations when directed by the justices, and to retain copies of all abstracts or schedules or documents transmitted to clerks of the Crown and peace; (5) to enter cases in the order book in consecutive order; (6) to enter and account for all fines and sums levied, and act as to same as required by the Fines and Penalties Act, 1851; and account for all stamps to registrar; (7) to make returns and to observe general regulations; (8) to attend assizes or quarter sessions if required, to answer any complaint of neglect of duty as to informations; (9) to furnish copy of informations or complaints on payment of a fee of sixpence; (10) to transmit informations in indictable offences to the clerk of the Crown or clerk of the peace; (11) to enter in the order book all orders made out of sessions, and have same signed at petty sessions by the justice who made the order, or, on his refusal to sign same, to record the fact; (12) to adjourn the court if no justice shall be in attendance for one hour after the appointed time (where the case on the books requires two justices and only one attends, an adjournment may be declared: Ex parte Mulcahy, (1898) 4 I.W.L.R. 186); (13) in case of appeal, to cause the notice of appeal to be served on the respondent, to give appellant a certificate that the notice of appeal has been given and recognizance entered into, and to transmit recognizance to clerk of peace or officer of Recorder's court, seven days at least before the commencement of the sessions; (14) to fill up all stamped forms when required; (15) to fill processes and forms and deliver certificate of appeal under the Small Debts Act.<sup>1</sup>

Besides the above, other duties are imposed by various statutes. The clerk of petty sessions is obliged to keep a register of licences (Licensing (Ireland) Act, 1874, s. 16), to serve notices of convictions under the licensing code on the owner of the premises (Licensing Act, 1872, s. 56), to enter particulars of convictions in register, and retain the licence if forfeited (ib. s. 55), to keep the register of clubs under the Registration of Clubs (Ireland) Act, 1904 (4 Edw. 7. c. 9, s. 1).

A certificate, signed by a justice, of an order of justices sitting in petty sessions was furnished by a petty sessions clerk, pursuant to s. 21 of the Petty Sessions Act, for use in certiorari proceedings, and this certificate was erroneous as regards a material part of the order. Held, that the petty sessions clerk was not liable for loss sustained through the incorrectness of the certificate (Doherty v. Myles, (1905) 40 I.L.T.R. 39). A clerk of a court, who acts in pursuance of, and for the purpose of carrying out, the order of the court, is a ministerial officer, and is not liable for acts done by him as such (Dews v. Riley, (1851) 11 C.B. 434; Demer v. Cook, (1903) 88 L.T. 629). As to responsibility of governor of goal, an illegal act of warder in keeping in custody an acquitted prisoner, see Mee v. Cruickshank, (1902); 20 Cox 210; see also Demer v. Cook, (1903) 88 T.L. 629, noted p. 327, ante.

The salaries as well as the pensions and gratuities of petty sessions clerks are paid out of a fund known as the Petty Sessions Clerks Fund, derived from the sources specified in 21 & 22 Vict. c. 100, s. 28; 28 & 29 Vict. c. 50, s. 16, and 44 & 45 Vict. c. 18, s. 2. (see Casey v. Pope, (1906) 40 I.L.T.R. 48.)

As to application of fines and penalties, see Fines Act 'Ir.', 1851, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 90, APPENDIX OF STATUTES.

NOTE.

It is now definitely settled that residence in a petty sessions district is, per se, sufficient qualification to entitle a justice to vote at the election of a petty sessions clerk for the district in which such justice resides (R. (Hude, v. Carlow JJ., (1911) 45 I.L.T.R. 62).

Such election is a ministerial act, and need not be held in open court (ib.).

Application of English pre-Union statutes. THE Irish statute known as Poynings’ Act (1495, 10 Hen. 7 (Ir.), c. 22) extended all the then existing statute law of England to Ireland. With the exception of a few other statutes, not affecting the subject of this work, which also were extended to Ireland by the Irish Parliament, the statute law of England between 1495 and 1800, the date of the passing of the Act of Union (39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 67), does not apply to Ireland. Since the Act of Union, all statutes of the Imperial Parliament, from which Ireland is not expressly excluded, apply to Ireland, unless the contents of the statute itself show that it has no application to Ireland.<sup>1</sup>

Commence-ment of statutes. Down to 1793 in England, and 1795 in Ireland, all statutes came into operation from the first moment of the first day of the session in which they were passed, unless they contained an express provision to the contrary (Att.-Gen. v. Panter, (1772) 6 Bro. P.C. 486). But now, unless a statute contains an express provision to the contrary, it comes into operation on the day it receives the Royal assent (35 Geo. 3, c. 12 (Ir.); 33 Geo. 3, c. 13). A statute operates as from the first moment of the day on which it comes into operation (Coll v. Porteous, (1892) 19 Ont. App. 111). Where an Act passed after the 31st December, 1889, or any order in Council, order, warrant, scheme, letters patent, rules, regulations, or bye-laws made, granted, or issued, under a power conferred by any such Act, is expressed to come into operation on a particular day, the same shall be construed as coming into operation immediately on the expiration of the previous day (Interpretation Act, 1889, 52 & 53 Vict. c. 63, ss. 42, 36 (2)).

Repeal, re-enactment, &c. Where any Act passed after 1st January, 1890, repeals and re-enacts, with or without modification, any provisions of a former Act, references in any other Act to the provisions so repealed shall, unless the contrary intention appears, be construed as references to the provisions so re-enacted (ib., s. 38 (1)). Where an Act passed after 1850 repeals a repealing enactment, it shall not be construed as reviving any enactment previously repealed, unless words are added reviving that enactment (s. 11 (1)). Where such an Act repeals wholly or partially any former enactment, and substitutes provisions for the enactment repealed, the repealed enactment shall remain in force until the substituted provisions come into operation (s. 11 (2)). Where any Act passed after 31st December, 1890, repeals any other enactment, then, unless the contrary intention appears, the repeal shall not (a) revive anything not in force or existing at the time at which the repeal takes effect; or, (b) affect the previous operation of any enactment so repealed or anything duly done or suffered under any enactment so repealed; or, (c) affect any right, privilege, obligation, or liability acquired, accrued, or incurred under any enactment so repealed, or, (d) affect any penalty, forfeiture, or punishment incurred in respect of any offence committed against any enactment so repealed; or, (e) affect any investigation, legal proceeding, or remedy in respect of any such right, privilege, obligation, liability, penalty, forfeiture, or punishment, as aforesaid; and any such investigation, legal proceeding, or remedy may be instituted, continued, or enforced, and any such penalty, forfeiture, or punishment may be imposed, as if the repealing Act had not been passed (s. 38).

Repeal,
re-enactment,
&c.

In all Acts passed since 1850, unless the contrary intention appears, words importing the masculine gender shall include females, and words in the singular shall include the plural, and words in the plural shall include the singular (ib., s. 1 (1)). In the construction of every enactment relating to an offence punishable on an indictment or on summary conviction "person" shall, unless the contrary intention appears, include a body corporate (ib., s. 2 (1), and see p. 83). Where, under any Act, any forfeiture or penalty is payable to a party aggrieved, it shall be payable to a body corporate in every case where that body is the party aggrieved (ib., s. 2 (2)). In every Act passed since 1850, unless the contrary intention appears, the expression "month" means calendar month, the expression "land" includes messuages, tenements, and hereditaments, houses and buildings of any tenure; and the expressions "oath" and "affidavit," in the case of persons allowed by law to affirm or declare instead of swearing, include affirmation and declaration; and the expression "swear," in the like case, includes affirm and declare (s. 3). In every Act passed since 1850 and before 1st January, 1890, the expression "county" shall, unless the contrary intention appears, be construed as including a county of a city and a county of a town (s. 4). Every Act passed after 1850 shall be a public Act and be judicially noticed as such, unless the contrary is expressly provided by the Act (s. 9). The expression "the Summary Jurisdiction (Ireland) Acts" shall mean, as respects the Dublin metropolitan police district, the Acts regulating the powers and duties of justices of the peace or of the police of that district, and as respects any other part of Ireland, the Petty Sessions (Ireland) Act, 1851, and any Act, past or future, amending the same (s. 13 (9)). The expression "the Summary Jurisdiction Acts" when used in relation to Ireland shall mean the Summary Jurisdiction (Ireland) Acts (s. 13 (10)). The expression "court of summary jurisdiction" shall mean any justice or justices of the peace, or other magistrate, by whatever name called, to whom jurisdiction is given by, or who is authorized to act under, the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, and whether acting under the Summary

terms.

Jurisdiction Acts or any of them, or under any other Act, or by virtue of his commission, or under the common law (s. 13 (11), and see p. 146). The expression "court of quarter sessions" means the justices of any county, riding, parts, division, or liberty of a county, or of a county of a city, or county of a town, in general or quarter sessions assembled, and shall include the court of the recorder of a municipal borough having a separate court of quarter sessions (s. 13 (14)). Expressions referring to writing, unless the contrary intention appears, are to be construed as including references to printing, lithography, photography, and other modes of representing or reproducing words in a visible form (s. 20). Where an Act passed after 31 December, 1889, authorizes or requires any document to be served by post, whether the expression "serve," or the expression "give" or "send," or any other expression is used, then, unless the contrary intention appears, the service is to be deemed to be effected by properly addressing, prepaying, and posting a letter containing the document, and, unless the contrary is proved, to have been effected at the time at which the letter would be delivered in the ordinary course of post (s. 26). Where an act or omission constitutes an offence under two or more Acts, or both under an Act and at common law, the offender shall, unless the contrary intention appears, be liable to be prosecuted and punished under either or any of those Acts or at common law, but shall not be liable to be punished twice for the same offence (s. 33, and see p. 102). In the measurement of any distance for the purpose of any Act passed after 31 December, 1889, that distance, unless the contrary intention appears, is to be measured in a straight line on a horizontal plane (s. 34).

Time.

Whenever any expression of time occurs in any Act of Parliament the time referred to shall, unless it is otherwise specifically stated, mean, in the case of Ireland, Dublin mean time (Statutes Definition of Time) Act, 1880, 43 & 44 Vict. c. 9).

"Public" Acts.

Every Act passed after 1850 is a public Act, and shall be judicially noticed as such, unless the contrary is expressly provided by the Act (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63, s. 9).

Title: Marginal
note.
Short Titles
Act, 1896.

The title does (Fielding v. Morley, (1899) 1 Ch. 1.), but the marginal note does not (Sutton v. Sutton, (1883) 22 C.D. 573) form part of the Act.

The Short Titles Act, 1896 59 & 60 Vict. c. 14, provides short titles for a great number of Acts, and collective titles for a number of groups of Acts.

Statutory rules and regulations

The Rules Publication Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 66), prescribes the procedure for making statutory rules. "Statutory rules" mean rules, regulations, or bye-laws, made under any Act of Parliament which (a) relate to any court in the United Kingdom, or to the procedure, practice, costs, or fees therein, or (b) are made by His Majesty in Council, the Treasury, the Lord Lieutenant, or the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, or a Secretary of State, the Admiralty, the Board of Trade, the Local Government Board for Ireland, the Chief Secretary for Ireland, or any other Government department (s. 4). At least forty days before making the rules, notice of the proposal to make the rules, and of the place where copies of the draft rules may be obtained, shall be published in the London Gazette, and, in the case of any rule extending to Ireland, also in the Dublin Gazette, and, if they extend to Ireland only, solely in the Dublin Gazette (s. 1 (1), (6)). During these forty days any public body may obtain copies of the draft rules, on payment not exceeding therefor threepence a folio, and any representations or suggestions made in writing by a public body interested to the rule-making authority shall be taken into consideration by that authority, and on the expiration of these forty days the rules may be made by the rule-making authority, either as originally drawn, or as amended by such authority, and shall come into operation forthwith, or at such time as may be prescribed in the rules (s. 1 (2)). Section 1 applies to statutory rules where the Act directs the rules to be laid before Parliament, but does not include rules if the same or a draft thereof are required to be laid before Parliament for any period before the rules come into operation, nor does it include rules made by the Local Government Board for Ireland, the Board of Trade, or the Revenue Departments, or by or for the purpose of the Post-office (s. 1 (4)).

rules and regulations.

Rules made by the Department of Agriculture, &c., for Ireland under the Diseases of Animals Acts, 1894 and 1896, are by 62 & 63 Vict. c. 50, s. 21 (4) excluded from the operation of section 1 of the Rules Publication Act, 1893, as by s. 1 (2) of the Destructive Insects and Pests Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 4) are orders made by the same department under the Destructive Insects and Pests Acts, 1877 and 1907, and as by s. 8 of the Bee Pest Prevention (Ir.) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 34), are orders made by the same department under that Act.

Where a statute prescribes that the rules shall be laid before Parliament, it is not necessary, in a prosecution under the rules, to prove that they were in fact laid before Parliament; and the rules are valid and operative even if that provision is not complied with, unless the statute directs that they shall not come into operation until they are so laid before Parliament (Hepburn v. Wilson, (1902) 4 F. (Just. Cas.) 18, Ct. of Justiciary; cf. Walsh v. Somerville, (1888) 22 L. R. I. 314).

Such rules and regulations should be proven in any prosecution under them: as to evidence thereof, see EVIDENCE, p. 278.

The power to make bye-laws is conferred by statute on many corporations or public bodies, such as railway companies, town commissioners, and the like. The statute usually directs the method of proof of the making and publication of the bye-law, and such proof will have to be adduced in any proceeding under the bye-law.<sup>1</sup>

Bye-laws.
Power to make.

Even though a bye-law has been duly made and published, it will be void if unreasonable; and justices, if the point that a bye-law is unreasonable is raised, must consider and determine it. In Kruse v. Johnston, (1898, 2 Q.B. 91, at p. 99, Lord Russell of Killowen, L.C.J., said: "Bye-laws ought to be supported if possible. They ought to be, as has been said, 'benevolently' interpreted, and credit ought to be given to those who have to administer them that they will be reasonably administered. This involves the introduction of no new canon of construction. But, further, looking to the character of the body legislating under the delegated authority of Parliament, to the subject-matter of such legislation, and to the nature and extent of the authority given to deal with matters which concern them, and in the manner which to them shall seem meet, I think courts of justice ought to be slow to condemn as invalid any bye-law, so made under such conditions, on the ground of supposed unreasonableness

<sup>1</sup> See also EVIDENCE, pp. 278, et seq.

Bye-laws.
Unreasonable-
ness.

. . . I do not mean to say that there may not be cases in which it would be the duty of the court to condemn bye-laws, made under such authority as these were made, as invalid because unreasonable. But unreasonable in what sense? If, for instance, they were found to be partial and unequal in their operation as between different classes; if they were manifestly unjust; if they disclosed bad faith; if they involved such oppressive or gratuitous interference with the rights of those subject to them as could find no justification in the minds of reasonable men, the court might well say, 'Parliament never intended to give authority to make such rules; they are unreasonable and ultra vires.' But it is in this sense, and in this sense only, as I conceive, that the question of unreasonableness can properly be regarded. A bye-law is not unreasonable merely because particular judges may think that it goes further than is prudent or necessary or convenient, or because it is not accompanied by a qualification or an exception which some judges may think ought to be there. Surely it is not too much to say that, in matters which directly and mainly concern the people of the county, who have the right to choose those whom they think best fitted to represent them in the local government bodies, such representatives may be trusted to understand their own requirements better than judges. Indeed, if the question of the validity of bye-laws were to be determined by the opinion of judges as to what was reasonable in the narrow sense of that word, the cases in the books on this subject are no guide; for they reveal, as indeed one would expect, a wide diversity of judicial opinion, and they lay down no principle or definite standard by which reasonableness or unreasonableness may be tested."

Examples.

The following are some cases in which the validity of bye-laws was challenged on the ground of unreasonableness:—

Johnson v. Mayor, &c., of Croydon, (1886) 16 Q.B.D. 708. Bye-law, made pursuant to the Municipal Corporation Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), s. 23, which provides that bye-laws may be made for the good order and government of the borough, and for the prevention and suppression of nuisances not already punishable in a summary way, that no person (not being a member of the army or auxiliary forces acting under the orders of his commanding officer) should sound or play upon any musical instrument in any of the streets in the borough on Sunday. Held, void, as making the playing of a musical instrument an offence, whether it causes a nuisance or annoys anybody or not.

Innes v. Newman, (1894) 2 Q.B. 292. Bye-law, providing that if any person should make any noise in any of the streets of the borough to the annoyance of the inhabitants, he should be guilty of an offence. Held, good, and justices were entitled to convict under it, even though only one inhabitant was proved to have been annoyed.

Huffam v. North Staffordshire R. Co., (1894) 2 Q.B. 821. Bye-law providing that "any passenger using or attempting to use a ticket on any day for which such ticket is not available" should be liable to a penalty (irrespective of fraud or intention to commit a fraud). Held, bad.

Kent County Council v. Humphrey, (1895) 1 Q.B. 903. The Weights and Measures Act, 1889, s. 28, enables local authorities to make bye-laws requiring a weighing instrument to be carried with any vehicle in which coal is carried for sale or delivery to a purchaser. A bye-law is good which requires every coal dealer to provide, and every person employed by him, and conveying or carrying coal for sale or delivery to a purchaser from or out of any vehicle, to carry therewith a correct and stamped weighing machine of the form approved by the county council, and requiring that such person shall reweigh the coal upon being requested to do so.

Hanks v. Bridgman, (1896) 1 Q.B. 253. A bye-law made by a tramway company under the Tramways Act, 1870, requiring that every passenger upon a tramway shall, when required so to do, either deliver up his ticket or pay the fare legally demandable for the distance travelled by him, is good, and magistrates are bound to convict, under it, a passenger whose refusal to comply with it was caused by his having lost the ticket for which he had paid.

Strickland v. Hayes, (1896) 1 Q.B. 290, 60 J.P. 164. A bye-law (made by a county council, and purporting to be made in exercise of a statutory power to make bye-laws for the good rule and government of the county) that no person should "in any street or public place, or on land adjacent thereto," use any obscene language was held bad, as going entirely beyond anything necessary for good rule and government, as the use of such language in a place where no one except the speaker heard it would be an offence against the bye-law (cf. Gentel v. Rapps, infra).

Teale v. Harris, (1896) 60 J.P. 744. A bye-law (made by the council of a municipal borough in pursuance of a statutory power to make bye-laws for the good rule and government thereof) that no person should, to the annoyance or disturbance of residents and passengers, keep or manage a shooting gallery, swing-boat, roundabout, or other like thing, in any street or public place, or on land adjoining or near to such street. Held, good, as being distinguishable from the bye-law in Strickland v. Hayes, supra, by the words "to the annoyance or disturbance," &c.

Collman v. Mills, (1897) 1 Q.B. 396. A bye-law (made under s. 4 of the Slaughter Houses, &c. Metropolis Act, 1874, 37 & 38 Vict. c. 67, as kept in force by s. 142 (2) (b) of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891), authorizing the local authority to make bye-laws for regulating the conduct of (inter alia) slaughter houses, made it an offence for the licensed occupier of a slaughter house to slaughter sheep in the pound of the slaughter house or in view of other sheep. Held, that the bye-law was good, and that under it the occupier was liable for the act of his servant.

Baker v. Williams, (1898) 1 Q.B. 23. A bye-law enacting regulations respecting air-space, and made under the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, 1878, and orders thereunder, which enable local authorities to regulate the ventilation of dairies and cowsheds is good.

Kruse v. Johnson, (1898) 2 Q.B. 91. A bye-law (made by a county council pursuant to the Local Government Act, 1888 (E.), 51 & 52 Vict. c. 41, s. 16, which gives county councils the same power of making bye-laws for counties that councils of boroughs have as regards boroughs under s. 23 of the Municipal Corporation Act, 1882) prohibiting any person from playing music or singing in any public place or highway, within fifty yards of any dwellinghouse, after being requested by any constable, or an inmate of such house, or his or their servant, to desist, was held good.

Mayor, &c., of Southend v. Davis, (1900) 16 T.L.R. 167. A bye-law made under a local Act provided that "No organ or other musical instrument worked by steam or other mechanical means shall be used within the borough, provided that this bye-law shall not apply to any locomotive or steam engine in use on any railway within the borough; nor to any steam whistle or steam trumpet within the meaning of the Factories (Steam Whistles) Act, 1878." The bye-law, as being verbatim with the terms of the Act, was held good.

Gentel v. Rapps, (1902) 1 K.B. 160. A bye-law (made by a tramway company under the Tramways Act, 1870, s. 46, which enables a tramway company to make bye-laws for the prevention of nuisances in the tramcars) that no person shall swear, or use offensive or obscene language, in a tramcar is good, though it does not add "so as to be a nuisance or annoyance to others." The insertion of those words in a bye-law referring to a very large area may be necessary, for "what is a nuisance in one part of it may possibly not be so in another" (ib., per Channell, J., at p. 165; and cf. Strickland v. Hayes, supra).

Salt v. Scott-Hall, (1903) 2 K.B. 245. A bye-law made under s. 157 of the Public Health (E.) Act, 1875, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 55 (enabling an urban authority to make bye-laws with respect to the structure of walls, foundations, roofs, and chimneys of new buildings for securing stability and the prevention of fires, and for purposes of health) prohibited the erection, within the district, of any new building not constructed of brick, stone, or other hard and incombustible material. Held, that the fact that the bye-law did not reserve to the sanitary authority any power to exempt exceptional cases from its operation (as, for instance, where the building was remote from other dwellings, and had all its rooms on the ground floor, such as a bungalow), did not make the bye-law unreasonable; but held, also, that, in a case such as that of a bungalow, the justices were at liberty, if they so thought fit, to treat a breach of the bye-law as a trivial offence, and to dismiss the summons. Such bye-laws should contain such a dispensing power (Pomeroy v. Malvern U. C., (1903) 89 L. T. 555). Cf. Enniscorthy U. D. C. v. Field, infra; and Dublin Corporation v. Irish Church Missions, (1901) 2 I.R. 387).

Enniscorthy U.D.C. v. Field, (1904) 2 I.R. 518. A bye-law (made by an urban district council purporting to act under s. 38 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, 53 & 54 Vict. c. 59, which enables an urban authority to "make bye-laws for the prevention of danger from whirligigs and swings when driven by steam power") that no person should cause or suffer any whirligig or swing to be set in motion or driven on any land immediately adjoining or abutting upon any street or road within the urban district of Enniscorthy unless such whirligig or swing was placed at a distance of not less than 20 yards from any road or street, and separated therefrom by a wall not less than 14 inches in thickness and carried up to a height of not less than 4 feet above the level of the street or road. Held, void, as it required a structure of a permanent character, involving large expense, to provide against a temporary danger, which could as effectively be provided against by a temporary structure.

Scott v. Pilliner, (1904) 2 K.B. 855. A bye-law (made by a county council, apparently, though the fact is not stated in the report, under the same authority as that mentioned in Kruse v. Johnson, supra) imposing a penalty on any person frequenting and using any street or public place for the purpose of selling or distributing any paper, or written or printed matter devoted wholly or mainly to giving information as to the probable result of races, steeplechases, or other competitions. Held, void, both on the ground of uncertainty, and mainly on the ground that it might strike at perfectly innocent sales of papers giving information as to the probable results of competitions on which there might be no betting at all" (ib., p. 858, per Lord Alverstone, L.C.J.).

Heiton v. McSweeney, (1905) 2 I.R. 47. A bye-law (made by a county council in exercise of the powers given to them by the Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898, s. 16, to make bye-laws "for the good rule and government" of the county, provided that the owner of every vehicle should cause a lighted lamp to be attached thereto and kept lighted during lighting-up hours. Held (Gibson, J., dissenting), that the bye-law was not void for making the master liable in respect of the omission or neglect of his servant (see also Collman v. Mills, supra).

good in part and bad in part.

A bye-law may be good in part, and bad in part (R. v. Lundie, (1862) 5 L.T. 830). In that case, a private Act of Parliament empowered certain persons to make bye-laws for the regulation of certain common pastures, and to impose reasonable penalties for breaches of such bye-laws. In exercise of this power, these persons made a bye-law, that if any pasture freeman entitled to stock the common pastures should depasture any vicious horse on any part of the said common pasture, such person and the owner of such horse should respectively pay for every such offence the sum of £5. Held, that the bye-law was good as regards the part of it imposing a penalty on the person putting such horse on the land, but bad as regards the part imposing a penalty on the owner of such horse.

Repeal by Statute Law
Revision Acts.

It must not be assumed that a statute, or portion of a statute, repealed by any of the periodic Statute Law Revision Acts, is repealed for all purposes. Such repeals shall not affect "any jurisdiction, or principle, or rule of law or equity, established or confirmed, or right or privilege acquired, or duty or liability imposed or incurred, or compensation secured by or under any enactment repealed" (Statute Law Revision and Civil Procedure Act, 1883, 46 & 47 Vict. c. 49, s. 5). It has been said that a repeal by a Statute Law Revision Act is, in the main, "literary only" (Hardeastle on Statutes (1907), 4th ed., p. 296). For instance, it has been held that Lord Cairns' Act, 21 & 22 Vict. c. 27, though repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1883, is still in operation (Sayers v. Collyer, (1884) 28 C.D. 103, 107; see also Winfield v. Boothroyd, (1886) 34 W.N. 501; In the matter of Scott & Crawford, (1910) 44 I.L.T.R. 19; R. v. Dillon and O'Brien, (1891) 28 L.R.I. 276, at p. 280).

Repeal by Statute Law
Revision Acts.

The coinage of Great Britain and Ireland was assimilated on and from 5th January, 1826, by 79 Geo. 4, c. 18. All Acts relating exclusively to Ireland passed before that date are conversant with Irish currency. All Acts passed on and after that date are conversant with the present currency only. If a conviction imposes a penalty in Irish currency it will be void, having regard to 33 & 34 Vict. c. 10 (Noble v. Hughes, (1896) 2 I.W.L.R. 90, noted, p. 91, ante).

SURETIES OF THE PEACE AND GOOD BEHAVIOUR— SUPPLEMENTAL NOTE.

"It seems clear, that wherever a person has just cause to fear that another will burn his house, or do him a corporal hurt, as by killing, or beating him, or that he will procure others to do him such mischief, he may demand the surety of the peace against such person; and that every justice of the peace is bound to grant it, upon the party's giving him satisfaction upon oath that he is actually under such fear; and that he has just cause to be so, by reason of the other's having threatened to beat him, or lain in wait for that purpose; and that he does not require it out of malice or for vexation" (1 Hawk, P.C., 8th ed., p. 479). "Those upon whom is imposed the duty of keeping the peace, be they conservators, justices, or judges, have power to direct that sureties shall be given for good behaviour and for keeping the peace, if they are judicially satisfied that there is danger of a future breach of the peace" (per Palles, C.B., in Ex parte Harken, (1889) Judgments of Superior Courts, 316, at p. 322).

For what cause the surety of the peace is grantable.

"It may be forfeited by any actual violence to the person of another, whether it be done by the party himself, or by others through his procurement, as manslaughter, rape, robbery, unlawful imprisonment, &c.; . . . also, for treason . . . and also by any unlawful assembly in terrorem populi; and even by words directly tending to a breach of the peace, as by challenging one to fight, or in his presence threatening to beat him, &c. However, it seems that it shall not be forfeited by bare words of heat and choler, as the calling a man knave, teller of lies, rascal, or drunkard; for though such words may provoke a choleric man to break the peace, yet they do not directly challenge him to it, nor does it appear that the speaker designed to carry his resentment any farther. And it has been said, that even a recognizance for the good behaviour, shall not be forfeited for such words; from whence it follows, a fortiori, that a recognizance for the peace shall not" (1 Hawk. P.C., 8th ed., p. 483).

How recognizance to the peace may be forfeited.

"A man may be bound to his good behaviour for many causes of scandal which give him a bad fame, as being contrary to good manners only; as for (a) haunting bawdy-houses with women of bad fame; or for (b) keeping bad women in his own house; or for speaking words of contempt of an inferior magistrate. . . . However, it seems the better opinion that no one ought to be bound to the good behaviour for any rash, quarrelsome, or unmannerly words, unless they either directly tend to a breach of the peace, or to scandalize the government by abusing those who are intrusted by it with the administration of justice, or to deter an officer from doing his duty; and therefore it seems that

For what cause a person may be bound to good behaviour.

For what cause a person may be bound to good

he who barely calls another rogue or rascal, or teller of lies, drunkard, &c., ought not, for such cause, to be bound to good behaviour. However, I cannot find any certain precise rules for the direction of the magistrate in this respect, and therefore am inclined to think that he has a discretionary power to take such surety of all those whom he shall have just cause to suspect to be dangerous, quarrelsome, or scandalous, as of those who sleep in the day and go abroad in the night, and of such as keep suspicious company, and of such as are generally suspected to be robbers, &c., and of eavesdroppers and common drunkards, and all other persons whose misbehaviour may reasonably be intended to bring them within the meaning of the statute as persons of evil fame, who, being described by an expression of so great latitude, seem in a great measure to be left to the judgment of the magistrate. But if he commit one for want of sureties, he must show the cause, &c., with convenient certainty" (1 Hawk. P.C., 8th ed., pp. 485, 6).

Security for good behaviour may be taken : for using opprobrious terms in a court of justice, publishing an obscene book, offering medicine to destroy a child in the womb, disturbing a religious service, unlawful fishing or hunting, for hunting or stealing deer or conies ; and it is a usual part of the judgment in a misdemeanour (ib., p. 486 n.). The following are also instances in which the justices were held entitled to require the person charged to enter into sureties to be of good behaviour :—libel (Haylock v. Sparke, (1853) E. & B. 471) : public utterances manifesting that the speaker was in unlawful concert and combination to prevent tenants paying their rent (R. (Reynolds) v. Cork JJ., (1882) 10 L.R.I. 1 ; R. (Feehan) v. Queen's Co. JJ., (1882) 10 L.R.I. 294).

misbehaviour a surety to be of good behaviour may be forfeited.

"It is laid down as a general rule in the argument of Stamp and Hide's case, that whatever will be a good cause to bind a man to his good behaviour, will forfeit a recognizance for it. Yet this is since denied in Hayward's Case ; and indeed does by no means seem to be maintainable, because the statute, in ordering persons of evil fame to be bound in this manner, seems in many cases chiefly to regard the prevention of that mischief which they may justly be suspected to be likely to do ; and in that respect requires them to secure the public from that danger which may probably be apprehended from their future behaviour, whether any actual crime can be proved upon them or not ; and it would be extremely hard in such cases to make persons forfeit their recognizance who yet may justly be compellable to give one, as those who keep suspicious company, or those who spend much money idly without having any visible means of getting it honestly, or those who lie under a general suspicion of being rogues, &c. However, it seems that such a recognizance shall not only be forfeited for such actual breaches of the peace, for which a recognizance for the peace may be forfeited, but also for some others, for which such a recognizance cannot be forfeited, as for going armed with great numbers to the terror of the people, or speaking words tending to sedition, &c., and also for all such actual misbehaviours which are intended to be prevented by such a recognizance, but not for barely giving cause of suspicion of what perhaps may never actually happen" (1 Hawk. P.C., 8th ed., pp. 486-7).

CATALOGUE OF SUMMARY OFFENCES.

INTRODUCTORY TO PARTS II. AND III.

(Catalogue of Summary Offences, and Catalogue of Indictable Offences.)

HINTS TO JUSTICES.

One justice is sufficient unless the particular statute otherwise directs. Where it so directs, the fact will be noted post. Two justices are usually required where the offender is brought up out of petty sessions and cannot find bail for his appearance at petty sessions.

Number of justices.
See p. 54.

If a justice arrives late, and it is deemed desirable that he should adjudicate, the whole evidence should be given again.

Justice must hear the whole case.
See p. 56.

Generally, any person may prosecute.

Who may prosecute.
See p. 43.

A justice who signs a summons should himself hear the complaint before doing so.

Justice should hear complaint.
See p. 46.

Where a condition is necessary to the exercise of summary jurisdiction (e.g., consent to be tried summarily), take care that same is complied with ; and let such compliance appear on the face of the order.

Conditions precedent.
See p. 56.

Justices have ample power to amend a summons, and there is no reason why such power should not be exercised to the full. An ill drafted summons can be amended into a properly drafted one ; and apparently (see Keenan v. Costelloe, p. 97) a new charge can be substituted where same is necessary to raise the real issue in the case. Where any amendment is made, any application of a defendant for an adjournment should be favourably considered. Apparently no amendment can be made unless defendant appears.

Amendment of summons.
See p. 93, et seq.

In cases not within the Petty Sessions Act, such as offences relating to game, the particular statute and the procedure thereby directed must be followed.

Cases outside P. S. Act.
See p. 76.

The Petty Sessions Act applies, generally speaking, to all offences triable summarily, save offences relating to excise, customs, stamps, taxes, post office, or game. The Act also applies to cases of illicit distillation.

Application of P. S. Act.
See p. 41, 76 n.

Justices may call any person who is in court and examine him, whether he has been summoned as a witness or not.

Justices may call witness.
See p. 57.

Defendant and husband or wife of defendant not competent witnesses.

In criminal cases the defendant, or the husband or wife of the defendant, cannot, as a rule, be examined. There are, however, many exceptions noted post under each title, and collected in chapter on "Evidence," p. 260, ante.

Complainant may give rebutting evidence.
See p. 57.

The complainant can give evidence in reply where the defendant has given any evidence other than evidence of character.

Formal proofs admissible after complainant's case closed.
See p. 57.

If the defendant, at the close of the complainant's case, objects that the case has failed for want of necessary formal proof, the justices may, and should, allow the omission to be rectified.

Speeches at end of case.
See p. 57.

Strictly speaking, neither complainant nor defendant has any right to address the Court at the close of the case.

Rehearing case heard in defendant's absence.
See p. 47.

Where a case is heard and determined in the absence of the defendant, who appears before the bench has separated, and before the order-book has been signed, the case can be re-opened if the justices who heard the case think fit, and if the complainant is also present.

Form of conviction.
See pp. 84, 85, 86.

Be precise about the form of conviction; but there is no magic about it. Follow the words of the statute, and do not attempt to improve on them. Abhor vagueness; it is as easy to say "did assault constable A" as "did assault certain constables"; the former is right, the latter is wrong.

Conviction where several offences charged.
See pp. 87, 88, 102.

One summons may contain several distinct charges. The adjudication must leave no doubt that each and every one of the charges has been disposed of. If, for instance, there are five charges in one summons, the order must show which of the five are dismissed, and on which of the five there are convictions. It is a question of some nicety when defendant can be punished for more than one offence on the same facts: when in such doubt, err on the safe side by convicting on one charge only. Where a person is convicted of several offences charged in one summons, there is only "one case," and the total costs awarded against him, under the Petty Sessions Act, cannot exceed 20s.

"Cautioned."

Every man is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is established by satisfactory proof. If the justices are not satisfied of defendant's guilt beyond reasonable doubt, then he is not guilty, and he is entitled to a dismiss. The law knows no such order as "Cautioned." Either a man is guilty or he is not guilty. If he is guilty, a justice should not shrink from saying so. If he is not guilty, or, what is tantamount to the same thing, not proved to be guilty, it is his right to be acquitted without any words suggesting a stain upon his character.

Burthen of proof.

But while the burthen of proof is in the first instance always upon the prosecutor, yet, having regard to the statute or the nature of the defence, it may shift to the defendant in the course of the case. Thus, on a charge under the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, where a false trade mark has been proved to have been used by the defendant, if the defendant wishes to prove that he “acted innocently” within s. 2 (2) (c), the affirmative proof thereof will rest upon him; so also, in a case of selling drink during prohibited hours, where the publican relies upon a defence that he believed the purchasers were bona fide travellers, the burthen of proving such defence to the satisfaction of the justices lies upon the publican. While, as already stated, the defendant is, in a matter in which the proof rests upon the complainant, entitled to the benefit of the doubt, the defendant is not entitled to the benefit of the doubt on an issue the proof whereof lies upon him, and in any of the cases given, or any like case, if the justices are not affirmatively satisfied, by the evidence adduced on behalf of the defendant or otherwise, of the truth of such defence, they should convict.

Burthen of proof.

If the case has been tried on the merits, the dismiss should be on the merits. The practice of dismissing without prejudice a case which is heard upon the merits, because the evidence establishes a case of strong suspicion but not of proof, is, it is suggested, entirely wrong. The dismiss without prejudice should not be adopted unless in a case in which the failure to prove the case arises from some oversight as to a technical proof on the part of the complainant, and the justices think that, having regard to all the circumstances, the case ought to be proceeded with again. Insufficiency of evidence, however, should not be considered as a ground for having the case tried again.

“Dismissed without prejudice.”

Costs not exceeding 20s. may be given to either complainant or defendant, when the Petty Sessions Act applies. As regards costs in cases to which it does not apply, see under each subject. The text, post, is silent where the Petty Sessions Act applies. A police constable in almost every case prosecutes as a common informer, and therefore costs can be given against him; but, as he would have to pay such costs out of his own pocket, it is suggested that costs ought not to be given against a constable who does his duty in a fair and reasonable manner.

Costs.
See p. 68.

The punishment must be neither more nor less than the statute allows. If a fixed penalty (e.g., when the defendant is made liable to a “penalty of £—”), the justices must order the fixed penalty, and not less. Where the statute contains such words as “not exceeding £—,” any sum from a farthing to the sum named can be imposed. When there is an increased penalty on a second or subsequent offence, the fact that the conviction is for a second or subsequent offence should appear therein. In Acts passed before 5th January, 1826, relating exclusively to Ireland, convert Irish currency.

The punishment.
See pp. 65, 67, 90.

The order for imprisonment in default of payment of a penalty should state “unless such sums be sooner paid”; and where the penalty and costs added together exceed £5, should order an antecedent distress.

Imprisonment.
See p. 67.

Scale of imprisonment.
See pp. 64, 67.

In default of payment of a penalty imprisonment (without hard labour) may be imposed, the term not to exceed the scale laid down by the Small Penalties Act, for the purposes of which the fine and costs should probably be added together.<sup>1</sup> In case of an offence punishable by imprisonment without the option of a fine, such imprisonment may be either with or without hard labour, unless the particular statute otherwise directs. When the conviction says "imprisonment" merely, this means imprisonment without hard labour. As to consecutive sentences, see pp. 68, 1011*n*<sup>2</sup>.

Sureties for good behaviour.
See p. 34, et seq.

If a person is convicted of any offence, e.g., larceny, he may in addition to any other punishment be bound over to be of good behaviour, which includes, and is more comprehensive than, binding to keep the peace. Even where a charge is dismissed, provided there are circumstances which justify it, the defendant can be bound over to be of good behaviour or to keep the peace. A successful complainant can be similarly bound over.

Amendment of order.
See pp. 99, 109.

When justices have delivered a spoken judgment, they can certainly change their minds unless and until the order has been signed in the order book. Even after they have signed an order in the book they can possibly alter it before they separate; but, apparently, after they have separated they cannot alter the order.

Appeals.
See p. 132, et seq.

An appeal lies under the Petty Sessions Act where the order is for the payment of any sum exceeding 20s. (exclusive of costs) or for imprisonment exceeding one month, or for the doing of anything at a greater expense than 40s., but not when the sum (exclusive of costs) amounts to only 20s. exactly, or the imprisonment is only a month exactly. In the great majority of cases the appeal will be governed by the Petty Sessions Act, but there are many important exceptions dealt with under each title, post, and discussed also p. 131, ante. Where, in any subject dealt with in the following catalogue, the text is silent as to appeals, it may be assumed that the appeal sections of the Petty Sessions Act apply.

See p. 143.

Probation of offenders.
See p. 59.

The Probation of Offenders Act, 1907, enabling the court, if they find a charge established, to dismiss the case, or to release the offender on recognizance as mentioned in the statute, is not confined to children or young persons, or even necessarily to first offences.

Children, offences by.

As regards indictable offences by persons under fourteen, note the provisions of the Summary Jurisdiction over Children (Ir.) Act, 1884, which, as amended by the Children Act, 1908, is noted at p. 73, and printed verbatim, APPENDIX OF STATUTES.

By s. 111 of the Children Act, 1908, a court of summary jurisdiction cannot (except as provided in that section) try a person under sixteen in the presence of anybody except the reporters and those actually concerned in the case.

Juvenile courts.

The effect of section 115 of the Children Act, 1908, is that no person under fourteen is to be allowed to remain as a mere spectator in any court during any criminal proceedings whatever.

Exclusion of children from court.

Under s. 114 of the Children Act, 1908, justices may order the court to be cleared of everyone except those concerned in the case and the reporters whilst any witness under sixteen is giving evidence as to indecent or immoral conduct. Besides the above provisions, justices can order the court to be cleared at any time they think fit of any persons who are causing a disturbance.

Clearing the court.

Where several defendants are charged in the same summons with a joint offence, none of them can be examined as witnesses, nor can they claim as of right that the cases shall be tried separately. It is apparently within the discretion of justices to direct that the cases shall be tried separately. In summary cases where several defendants are jointly charged, if an application is bona fide made to have the cases tried separately, so as to allow the defendants to be examined on each other's behalf, it is suggested that the application ought to be acceded to.

Joint offence.
See p. 47.

Strictly speaking, each justice at quarter sessions has the same power as the county court judge to decide questions of law as well as of fact. Indeed, apparently there is nothing to prevent any justice delivering to the grand or petty jury at quarter sessions a charge on his own account. But the county court judge is the statutory chairman. He is, moreover, a trained lawyer, and therefore more likely to be right on questions of law. Sympathy with an application for a licence is, perhaps, sometimes natural enough, but to grant it, against the opinion of the judge on the legality of doing so, spells disaster to the applicant himself; for the order will most probably be set aside, with costs against the applicant. Furthermore, public controversy between the chairman and his fellow-justices is to be deprecated.

Powers of justices at quarter sessions.
See p. 10.

You cannot sit to hear an appeal from yourself, however desirable it may seem to do so. On such an appeal, divest yourself for the time of your judicial office, and take your seat in the body of the court as an ordinary citizen.

Justice cannot hear appeal from himself.
See p. 137.

Be careful not to infringe the rule against determining questions of title. If in doubt, decline to proceed further, after you have satisfied yourself that a question of title is involved.

Title ousting jurisdiction.
See pp. 206, et seq.

It is not enough to be just, you should be obviously just; Lord Field said: "The administration of justice ought not only to be pure in itself, and capable of being demonstrated to be so, but nothing should be done by those who are administering it to throw on it a substantial doubt." If your presence on the bench be challenged on the score of interest or bias, it is safer and wiser not to act, if the challenge is real and bona fide. Costs have frequently been awarded by the High Court against disqualified justices who have persisted in acting, though challenged.

Acting where question of bias raised.
See p. 215.

Preliminary investigation of indictable offences.
See pp. 23, 24.

A justice has no business to try an indictable offence. If a prima facie case is made out, the case should be sent forward. It is the function of the jury, not of the justices, to weigh the evidence.

At the same time, the accused should not be discouraged from calling his evidence at the preliminary inquiry. Such evidence may show that there is really nothing in the charge; and it cannot fail to throw some light on the case.

Cases triable either on indictment or summarily.

In cases in which the option lies with the justices to try a case either summarily or on indictment, it is suggested that the case should be sent forward for trial, if the accused so wishes. A trial by jury is the normal and constitutional method of ascertaining the guilt or innocence of a person charged with a crime.

Exercise of discretion.

"Discretion should be exercised honestly and in the spirit of the statute. 'According to his discretion' means, it is said, according to the rules of reason and justice, not private opinion; according to law and not humour; it is not to be arbitrary, vague, and fanciful, but legal and regular; to be exercised not capriciously, but on judicial grounds and for substantial reasons" (Stroud, sub verb.).

ABUSIVE LANGUAGE.

Mere abusive language is not an offence; but persons guilty of abusive language tending to a breach of the peace may be bound over. As to abusive language amounting to a contempt of court, see CONTEMPT OF COURT. As to language contemptuous of the Christian religion, and language regarding the Sovereign that amounts to seditious libel, see CATALOGUE OF INDICTABLE OFFENCES.

ACCIDENTS TO WORKMEN.

In case of accident in certain employments, such as to cause any person employed therein either loss of life or such bodily injury as to cause him to be absent one whole day, employer to send notice to Board of Trade as soon as possible, and, in case of an accident not resulting in death, not later than six days from accident; penalty not exceeding 40s. The employments are—(1) Construction, use, working, or repair of any railway, tram road, tramway, canal, bridge, tunnel, or other work authorized by any local or personal Act of Parliament; (2) Use or working of any traction engine or other engine or machine worked by steam in the open air (Notice of Accidents Act, 1894, s. 1, and schedule;<sup>1</sup> Notice of Accidents Act, 1906, s. 6). The Board of Trade has power to apply section one of the Act of 1894 to any employment in which twenty persons or more, not being domestic servants, are employed by the same employer, and which, in their opinion, is specially dangerous to life or limb (s. 2), and to hold formal investigation in case of serious accidents, with power to summon witnesses, and to award costs, which are recoverable in like manner as a penalty under the Act—Penalty, on obstructing court or refusing to obey summons or to make return or produce documents, fine not exceeding £10, recoverable on summary conviction (s. 3).

Notice of accidents.

57 & 58 Vict.
c. 28,
6 Edw. 7.
c. 53.

The Notice of Accidents Act, 1906, further provides for annual returns of accidents in mines and quarries (s. 1); notices of accidents in mines and quarries (s. 2); or railway sidings used in connection with mines and quarries (s. 3); making further enactment in respect of notice of accidents in factories and workshops (s. 4); confers power on the Secretary of State to extend provisions as to notice of accidents to dangerous occurrences (s. 5).

As to accidents in cases of explosives, see EXPLOSIVES.

Every employer in any industry to which the Secretary of State may direct that the section shall apply, to send return to Secretary of State of compensation paid for injuries during the year—Penalty, not exceeding £5 (Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, s. 12).

Return of compensation.
6 Edw. 7,
c. 58.

<sup>1</sup> Portion of the schedule is repealed by Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, s. 54.

ADULTERATION.

Corn, meal, or flour.

1 & 2 Vict.
c. 28, s. 8.

Adulterating corn, meal, or flour, or selling corn, meal, or flour, not equal to sample, or fraudulently increasing weight of corn, meal, or flour—Penalty, not exceeding £10 or less than 40s., with forfeiture of article (Bread (Ireland) Act, 1838, s. 8).

14 & 15 Vict.
c. 92, s. 7.

Selling or offering for sale wheat, rye, meslin, peas, beans, barley bere, oats, shillin, cutlings, meal, flour, malt, or other corn, spoiled or adulterated by wetting or mixing other stuff, or not equal to sample—Penalty, forfeiture, and fine not exceeding 40s., or imprisonment not exceeding a month (Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1851, s. 7, printed verbatim in APPENDIX OF STATUTES).

Wine.

23 & 24 Vict.
c. 107, s. 31.
Seeds.

Licensed wine retailer fraudulently diluting or adulterating wine, or knowingly selling or offering for sale wine diluted, or in any way adulterated—Penalty, first offence, not less than £10 or more than £20; second offence, disqualification for selling wine for five years, or penalty not less than £20 or more than £50 (Refreshment Houses (Ireland) Act, 1860, s. 31).

32 & 33 Vict.
c. 112.

"Every person who, with intent to defraud, or to enable another person to defraud, . . . kills<sup>1</sup> or causes to be killed any seeds; or dyes<sup>2</sup> or causes to be dyed any seeds; or sells or causes to be sold any killed or dyed seeds"—Penalty, first offence, not exceeding £5; subsequent offence, not exceeding £50; in case of subsequent offence the court may further order offender's name, occupation, place of abode, place of business, and particulars of his punishment under the Act, to be published at the expense of such offender, in such newspaper or newspapers, or in such other manner, as the court may think fit (Adulteration of Seeds Act, 1869, s. 3); proceedings, including appeal, governed by the Summary Jurisdiction (Ireland) Acts (ss. 4, 6); complaint to be commenced within twenty-one days after the offence (s. 7); the intent to defraud any particular person need not be alleged or proved (s. 5); costs may be given to the defendant for an unreasonable prosecution (s. 8).

As to food and drugs, see FOOD AND DRUGS.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Indecent
advertisements.

52 & 53 Vict.
c. 18.

"Whoever affixes to or inscribes on any house, building, wall, hoarding, gate, fence, pillar, post, board, tree, or any other thing whatsoever, so as to be visible to a person, being in or passing along any street, public highway, or footpath, and whoever affixes to or inscribes on any public urinal, or delivers, or attempts to deliver, or exhibits, to any inhabitant, or to any person being in or passing along any street, public highway, or footpath, or throws down the area of any house, or exhibits to public view in the window of any house or shop, any picture, or printed or written matter, which is of an indecent or obscene nature"—Penalty, not exceeding 40s., or one month's imprisonment, with or without hard labour (Indecent Advertisements Act, 1889, s. 3).

"Whoever gives or delivers to any other person any such pictures, or printed or written matter mentioned in section 3 of this Act, with the intent that the same, or some one or more thereof, should be affixed, inscribed, delivered, or exhibited, as therein mentioned"—Penalty, not exceeding £5, or three months' imprisonment, with or without hard labour (s. 4).

Any advertisement relating to syphilis, gonorrhœa, or nervous debility, or other complaint or infirmity arising from or relating to sexual intercourse, shall be deemed to be printed or written matter of an indecent nature within the meaning of s. 3 (s. 5). Constable may arrest, without warrant, any person whom he shall find committing any offence against the Act (s. 6).

Local authority (that is the urban district council in urban districts containing population of over 5,000, elsewhere the county council (s. 7)) may make bye-laws (1) for the regulation and control of hoardings and similar structures used for the purpose of advertising when they exceed twelve feet in height, (2) for regulating, restricting, or preventing the exhibition of advertisements in such places and in such manner, or by such means as to affect injuriously the amenities of a public park or pleasure promenade, or to disfigure the natural beauty of a landscape (Advertisements Regulation Act, 1907, s. 2).—Penalty for contravening bye-law, not exceeding £5, and not exceeding 20s. for every day during which offence is continued after conviction (s. 10). Bye-laws as to advertisements. 7 Ed. 7, c. 27.

Existing hoardings and advertisements to be exempt for five years from the making of the bye-laws (s. 1). The bye-laws are to be confirmed by the Lord Lieutenant, acting with the advice of the Privy Council (ss. 3, 9), after prior publication for at least thirty days (s. 3); the Lord Lieutenant may consider objections and direct local inquiry (s. 3); production of a copy of bye-law certified by a person purporting to be the clerk of the local authority to be a true copy, to be prima facie evidence of bye-laws, and of the due making, and, if it is so stated in certificate, of the due confirmation thereof (s. 3).

AGRICULTURAL FERTILISER AND FEEDING STUFFS.

The Fertiliser and Feeding Stuffs Act, 1906, deals with the sale, either wholesale or retail (1) of any article for use as a fertiliser of the soil, (2) of any article for use as food for cattle or poultry. In the application of the Act to Ireland the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland is substituted for the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries (s. 12). The statute, with notes, is printed verbatim in 6 Ed. 7, c. 27.
APPENDIX OF STATUTES.

AIDING AND ABETTING.

"Every person who shall aid, abet, counsel, or procure the commission of any offence which is or shall be punishable on summary conviction, shall be liable to be proceeded against and convicted for the same, either together with the principal offender, or before or after his conviction, and shall be liable on conviction to the same forfeiture and punishment to which such principal offender shall be by law liable (except where the age of such aider or abettor shall exceed fourteen years, in which case he shall be liable to the same forfeiture and punishment to which any principal offender whose age shall exceed fourteen years shall be liable), and may be proceeded against and convicted either in the county where such principal offender may be convicted, or in that in which such offence of aiding, Aiding and abetting summary offence.

14 & 15 Vict. c. 93, s. 22. abetting, counselling, or procuring, may have been committed" (Petty Sessions (Ireland) Act, 1851, s. 22).

Under the similar English section (s. 5 of the English Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848) a person who aided and abetted the offence of driving a motor car at a speed dangerous to the public, by allowing such driving to take place when he could and should have prevented it, was held rightly convicted, as a principal, on a charge "that he did drive a motor at a speed dangerous to the public" (Du Cros v. Lambourne, (1907) 1 K.B. 40; see also Benford v. Sims, (1898) 2 Q.B. 641; Burton v. Scott, (1909) 25 T.L.R. 239). He might also have been convicted of aiding and abetting (Howells v. Wynne, (1863) 15 C.B. (N.S.) 3; Du Cros v. Lambourne, supra).

Aiding and abetting indictable offence.

As to aiding and abetting indictable offences, see INDICTABLE OFFENCES—"ACCESSORY AND PRINCIPAL."

ALIENS.

Alien immigration: 5 Ed. 7, c. 13.

The Aliens Act, 1905, 5 Ed. 7, c. 13, regulates alien immigration. It applies to an immigrant ship, that is a ship bringing more than twenty alien steerage passengers who are to be landed in the United Kingdom, or such number of these passengers as may be fixed by order of the Secretary of State, s. 8 (2)<sup>1</sup>. An immigrant means an alien steerage passenger who is to be landed in the United Kingdom, but does not include a passenger who shows to the satisfaction of the immigration officer or board concerned with the case that he desires to land in the United Kingdom only for the purpose of proceeding within reasonable time to some destination out of the United Kingdom, or any passengers holding through tickets to such destination if the master or owner of the ship gives security that except for transit they will not remain in the United Kingdom (s. 8 (1)).

An immigrant shall not be landed in the United Kingdom from an immigrant ship except at a port at which there is an immigration officer appointed under the Act,<sup>2</sup> and shall not be landed at such port without the leave of that officer given after an inspection of the immigrants, and the officer shall withhold leave in case of undesirable immigrants. An immigrant shall be considered undesirable (a) if he cannot show that he has in his possession, or is in a position to obtain, the means of decently supporting himself and his dependants (if any); or (b) if he is a lunatic or an idiot, or owing to any disease or infirmity appears likely to become a charge upon the rates, or otherwise a detriment to the public; or (c) if he has been sentenced in a foreign country with which there is an extradition treaty for a crime, not being an offence of a political character, which is, as respects that country, an extradition crime within the meaning of the Extradition Act, 1870; or (d) if an expulsion order under the Act has been made in his case (s. 1).

No immigration board has been established, or officer appointed, for Ireland.

Expulsion of undesirable aliens.

If it be certified to the Secretary of State by any court (including a court of summary jurisdiction) that an alien has been convicted by that court of any felony or misdemeanour, or other offence, for which the court has power to award imprisonment, without the option of a fine, or of an offence as a prostitute under s. 72 of the Towns Improvement (Ir.) Act, 1854, and that the court recommend that an expulsion order should be made in the case of such alien, either in addition to or in lieu of the sentence of such court, then the Secretary of State may, if he thinks fit, make an order requiring such alien to leave the United Kingdom within a time fixed by such order, and thereafter to remain out of the United Kingdom; and if such alien be found within the United Kingdom in contravention of such order, he shall be guilty of an offence against the Act (s. 3), and shall be liable on summary conviction to imprisonment not exceeding three months with hard labour (ss. 7, 9). If any question arises with reference to the giving of such certificate as to whether any person is an alien or not, the onus of proving that that person is not an alien shall lie on that person (s. 7 (5)).

<sup>1</sup> The number was reduced to twelve by Order of 19th December, 1905, but restored to twenty by Order of 9th March, 1906.

ALKALI WORKS.

The Alkali, &c., Works Regulation Act, 1906 (6 Ed. 7, c. 14), makes provision for the registration and regulation of alkali and kindred works mentioned in the first schedule to the Act.

ANCIENT MONUMENTS.

<sup>1</sup> Injuring or defacing any ancient monument<sup>1</sup>—Penalty, not exceeding £5, and expenses of repair, or, at the discretion of the court, imprisonment with or without hard labour not exceeding one month<sup>2</sup> (Ancient Monuments Protection Act, 1882, s. 6). The Act applies to (a) the monuments mentioned in the schedule thereto, (b) any other monuments of like character, of which the Commissioners of Works, at the request of the owners thereof, may consent to become guardians (ss. 8, 11), (c) any monuments declared by order in council to be ancient monuments (s. 10), (d) any monument which is maintained by the Commissioners in pursuance of any gift, devise, or bequest (Ancient Monuments Protection Act, 1910), (e) ancient monuments vested in the Commissioners on a sale under the Land Purchase Acts (Irish Land Act, 1903, s. 14), (f) ancient monuments of which a county council consent to become guardians under the Local Government Act, 1898 (Local Government (Ir.) Act, 1898, s. 49).

45 & 46 Vict.
c. 73.

10 Ed. 7, c. 3.

3 Ed. 7, c. 37.
61 & 62 Vict.
c. 37.

Where the Commissioners of Works are of opinion that the preservation of any ancient structure is a matter of public interest they may, at the request of the owner, consent to become the guardians thereof, and <sup>1</sup> "Ancient monument" includes the site of such monument and such portion of land adjoining same as may be required to fence, cover in, or otherwise preserve from injury the monument; also the means of access to such monument (s. 11).

The following are the ancient monuments mentioned in the schedule to the Act:—Navan Fort (Co. Armagh); stone monuments and groups of sepulchral cists in Glen Maulin (Co. Donegal); Grianan of Aileach (Co. Donegal); Giant's Ring, near Ballylessan (Co. Down); earthen fort at Downpatrick, Dunkeltair (Co. Down); Stague Fort (Co. Kerry); earthen mound at Greenmount (Co. Kerry); stone monument at Ballyna (Co. Mayo); cairns and stone circles at Moytura (Co. Mayo); tumuli, New Grange, Knowth, and Dowth (Co. Meath); earthworks on Hill of Tara (Co. Meath); earthworks at Teltown, Taltin (Co. Meath); earthworks at Wardstown, Tlaghta (Co. Meath); tumuli on the hills, called Slieve Na Calliagh (Co. Meath); cairn at Heapstown (Co. Sligo); sepulchral remains at Carrowmore; the cairn called Miscaun Mave or Knocknarea (Co. Sligo); cave containing Ogham-inscribed stones at Drumloghan (Co. Waterford); the Catstone and the cemetery on the hill of Usnagh (Co. Westmeath).

<sup>2</sup> The owner can only be convicted where the Commissioners of Works or county council have been appointed guardians.

55 & 56 Vict.
c. 46.

thereupon the Ancient Monuments Protection Act of 1882 shall apply to such structure (Ancient Monuments Protection (Ireland) Act, 1892; see also Act of 1882, s. 2).

Offences and penalties shall be prosecuted according to the Summary Jurisdiction Acts<sup>1</sup>—(Act of 1882, s. 7).

Cruelty
generally.

12 & 13 Vict.
c. 92.

Meaning of "animal."

"If any person shall cruelly beat, ill-treat, overdrive, abuse, or torture, or cause or procure to be cruelly beaten, ill-treated, overdriven, abused, or tortured any animal"—Penalty not exceeding £5<sup>2</sup> (Cruelty to Animals Act, 1849, s. 2). Overdriving includes overriding (s. 29). The convicting justices may order the offender to pay compensation, not exceeding £10, if he has caused damage to be done to any animal, person, or property (s. 4).

"Animal" includes any horse, mare, gelding, bull, ox, cow, heifer, steer, calf, mule, ass, sheep, lamb, hog, pig, sow, goat, dog, cat, or any other domestic animal (s. 29), and now by the Cruelty to Animals Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 60), s. 3, is defined to be any domestic animal, whether of the species enumerated in s. 29, or any other kind or species whatever and whether a quadruped or not. Cocks used for fighting (Bridge v. Parsons, (1863) 3 B. & S. 382; Bates v. McCormick, (1863) 8 Ir. Jur. N.S. 239; Allen v. Small, (1904) 2 I.R. 705), linnets kept in captivity and used as decoys (Colam v. Pagett, (1884) 12 Q.B.D. 66) are domestic animals; but wild rabbits caught in nets and fed five or six days before they are liberated to be coursed (Aplin v. Porritt, (1893) 2 Q.B. 57), a pinioned and tamed sea-gull (Yates v. Higgins, (1896) 1 Q.B. 166), or caged and trained lions (Harper v. Marcks, (1894) 2 Q.B. 319), are not domestic animals, though leopards trained to hunt for their master, otters trained to catch fish, and elephants trained to assist in the capture of wild elephants might be held to be domestic (ib., per Wright, J.). The distinction between wild animals and domestic animals is now, however, of comparatively little importance in view of the 63 & 64 Vict. c. 33 (as to which see p. 362).

"Cruelly."

"Cruelly" means unreasonably inflicting unnecessary pain (Budge v. Parsons, (1863) 3 B. & S. 382; Elliott v. Osborne, (1891) 17 Cox 346; Swan v. Saunders, (1881), 14 Cox 566 at p. 570). Cock-fighting is within the section (Bates v. McCormick, supra); so is dubbing or cutting off the combs of cocks (Murphy v. Manning, (1877) 2 Ex. D. 307), to fit them for fighting, &c. Branding an identification mark with a red-hot iron on lambs is not cruelty (Bouryer v. Morgan, (1906) 22 T.L.R. 426); neither is the dishorning of cattle (R. v. McDonagh, (1891) 28 L.R.I. 204, in

<sup>2</sup> If a case is heard before two justices, or one police magistrate, three months' imprisonment, with or without hard labour, may be imposed, without the option of a fine (s. 18).

ANIMALS, CRUELTY TO.

The Cruelty to Animals Act, 1849, the Cruelty to Animals Act, 1854, the Wild Animals in Captivity Protection Act, 1900, and the Injured Animals Act, 1907, have been repealed by the Protection of Animals Act, 1911, 1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 27, which became law as the volume was going through the press. That statute, which contains substituted provisions, will be found at p. 1277. It is, however, conceived that the notes in the present article will be found useful.

which the court refused to follow the English case, to the contrary effect, "Cruelty." of Ford v. Wiley, (1889) 23 Q.B.D. 203; nor the spaying (Lewis v. Termor, (1887) 18 Q.B.D. 352), or the castration of animals (see judgment of Lord O'Brien, C.J., in R. v. M'Donagh, supra, at p. 210); but if such operations are performed in an unskilful or careless way, or so as to cause unnecessary suffering, the magistrate can and ought to convict (ib., per Gibson, J., 234). A performance in which wild and domestic animals are exhibited together is not necessarily cruelty; but circumstances (e. g. the fact that a lion, immediately after exhibiting some tendency to attack a pony, was allowed to remain in a cage with the pony, which it subsequently attacked and killed) may warrant a conviction (Thielbar v. Craigen, (1905) 21 Cox 44). Mere carelessness is not necessarily cruelty (Westbrook v. Field, (1887) 3 T.L.R. 465). If a person has a right to kill an animal, his right is confined to killing it outright in a humane way (Adcock v. Murrell, (1890) 54 J.P. 776; Duncan v. Pope, (1899) 19 Cox 241).

The following decisions on the section seem worthy of a full note:—

A mare met with an accident, by which one of her hind legs was dislocated and fractured. The defendant, the owner of the animal, for several months kept the mare in a field, where she was obliged to move about, in much pain, for the purpose of obtaining her food. For some time after the accident there was a probability of the recovery of the mare, but the defendant admitted that for some time prior to the issue of the summons he knew the mare was incurable. The justices found that the omission to slaughter the animal did not amount to cruelty within the statute:—Held, that the justices were right in holding that the defendant could not be convicted merely for keeping a mare that had a diseased leg. "But the real question which the magistrates should have put to us is, did he not cause and procure the mare to be tortured by putting her into a field, where he knew that she must move her leg about and endure torture to obtain food? I think it is the same as if he had at every step she took got some person to raise her leg and put it to ground and so cause her to endure torture" (per Kelly, C.B.). The case was accordingly remitted to the justices. (Everitt v. Davies, (1878) 42 J.P. 248).

The defendant shot a dog which was trespassing in his garden, and the dog fell at the defendant's kitchen door, distant some yards from the road. The defendant then thought it was dead and dragged it on to the road, but in the course of so doing the dog showed signs of life and the defendant then became aware that the dog was alive and in pain. The defendant left the dog in the road, and on a police constable calling at his house about an hour later, and calling attention to the state of the dog, refused to come out and did not kill the dog, which remained in the road till about three o'clock the following morning, when it was found by a policeman, who killed it. The magistrate, while not deciding that the original shooting of the dog was lawful, assumed for the purpose of the case that it was so, and held that the not killing the dog afterwards or seeing that it was killed was merely an act of omission and not within the statute. Cockburn, C.J., in upholding the decision of the justice, said:—"Here on the facts we must take it that the appellant was justified in shooting the dog... In what happened afterwards the appellant was purely passive"; and Mellor, J., said:—"In my opinion we must take it that the act of shooting was not unlawful. If so, then all the defendant did was simply that he did nothing" (Powell v. Knight, (1878) 42 J.P. 597). It is difficult to follow the reasoning of this case. The court acted on the justice's assumption that the original shooting of the dog was lawful, as if this were a question of fact found by the justice, whereas it was not a finding of fact, but a mere assumption of law. Further, the word “lawful” is ambiguous. It may mean either that the shooting was not an act of cruelty within the statute, thus begging the question; or it may mean not involving any legal wrong, in which alternative the assumption was clearly wrong, for trespassing dogs cannot be shot unless they are in hot pursuit of game at the time (see Addison on Torts, 8th ed., 581).<sup>1</sup>

“Cruelly.”

Osborne.*

The defendant received a large cargo of cattle late on Saturday night, and next Monday one of the bullocks was found with wounds caused by the head rope not having been loosened:—Held, that as no knowledge was proved against the defendant of the state of the bullock, the magistrate was wrong in convicting (Elliott v. Osborne, (1891) 17 Cox 346).

*Armstrong v.
Mitchell.*

The defendant, a gamekeeper, was driving pheasants across his master's land, when a greyhound came into the field, galloped across it, and frightened the birds. The defendant shot the dog twice, first, at a distance of about fifty yards, and again at a distance of about ninety yards, inflicting twenty-five to thirty shot wounds, in consequence of which the dog suffered considerable pain. The dog was not chasing any other animal or doing any damage at the time it was shot. The justices found that the defendant had no intention of killing the dog, but that he had the intention of injuring it if necessary for the purpose of frightening it away from the field, and dismissed the charge. The decision was affirmed, on the ground that “the question was a question of fact which the magistrates had found in favour of the respondent, and it was quite possible that shooting at the dog with small shot at a distance of fifty yards might fall far short of cruelty to the dog.” This case decides no principle whatever (Armstrong v. Mitchell, (1903) 20 Cox 497).

*Hooker v.
Gray.*

The defendant shot a cat which belonged to his next-door neighbour, and which was at the time in the defendant's garden, with a saloon rifle, intending to kill it. The bullet struck the cat in the back, wounding it severely, and it crawled away in the direction of its owner's property, where it was found after half an hour, alive, but in great pain. The justices having dismissed the charge, they were upheld on the ground that the court “could not assume that to use a saloon rifle for the purpose of shooting at a cat was cruelty in itself, or would of necessity amount to torturing the animal. As the magistrates did not find<sup>2</sup> that after shooting the cat the respondent, with knowledge of the pain and suffering which his act had caused, did not do his best to put the animal out of its pain, they were justified in dismissing the summons.” Mr. Justice Phillimore, in agreeing, said he was not sure that “if a person shot at an animal and hit it, and knew that the animal was lingering on in pain, it would not be his duty to put the animal out of pain” (Hooker v. Gray, (1907) 21 Cox, 437).

The defendant found a dog caught in a trap set by him for the purpose of catching vermin. The dog was suffering great pain, which was obvious to the defendant, who went at once to a neighbouring farmer to ascertain if the dog was his. Finding that it was not, the defendant returned to his farm, fed and attended to his horses, and then went in search of the police. The defendant would have run some risk of being bitten if he had attempted to release the dog with his hands. The dog was released from the trap about 11.30 a.m. by two police officers, having been in the trap for two hours to the defendant's knowledge. The justices found as a fact that the dog was caused a great deal of suffering which could have been avoided by the defendant had he taken steps to release the dog immediately he found it was caught in the trap, and considered that the dog had been cruelly ill-treated, but thought they were bound by the cases of Powell v. Knight, Armstrong v. Mitchell, Hooker v. Gray, supra, to dismiss the complaint:—Held, that Powell v. Knight did not support the general proposition that no act of omission could be brought to sustain a charge under the section, and (per Lord Alverstone, C.J.) the principle is that "where the act was not a direct act of commission, if the defendant had caused pain by a lawful act, and he alone could stop it, the justices were entitled to consider whether he had done his best to stop it," and to acquit or convict accordingly. The case was sent back to the magistrates for further consideration (Green v. Cross, (1910) 26 T.L.R. 507).

<sup>1</sup> It may here be remarked that in Daniel v. Janes, (1877) 2 C.P.D. 351, it was held that the placing of poisoned flesh in an enclosed garden, for the purpose of destroying a dog which was in the habit of straying there, is not an offence punishable under the Malicious Damage Act, 1861, s. 41, but semble is an offence against the Poisoned Flesh Prohibition Act, 1864. This case was followed in Smith v. Williams, (1892), 9 T.L.R. 9, in which it was held that shooting trespassing fowls was not within the same statute, but Mathew, J., regretted that Daniel v. Janes could not be reconsidered, and the case was also doubted by Lord Alverstone, C.J., in Armstrong v. Mitchell, (1903) 20 Cox 497.

On the hearing of an information against the respondent for cruelty to a sheep, evidence was given that the sheep died in a field belonging to the respondent a quarter of a mile from his house, death being due to exhaustion owing to the sheep being eaten by maggots, and that it must have suffered great pain. Evidence was also given that the respondent stated that he knew some of his sheep were affected with fly, and that four days previous to the death of the sheep he sent a man to dress the wounds. The justices dismissed the information on the ground that there was not sufficient evidence that the respondent unlawfully and cruelly caused the sheep to be ill-treated. It was held that, as it was for the prosecution to prove the offence, it could not be said that the justices were wrong (Potter v. Challans, (1910) 102 L.T. 325).

The defendant was the certificated manager of a colliery, certain horses belonging to which were worked while suffering from raw wounds; but he was not proved to have had any notice or knowledge of the state of the horses—Held, that he could not be convicted (Small v. Warr, (1883) 47 J.P. 20). See also Elliott v. Osborne, (1891) 17 Cox 346; Greenwood v. Backhouse, (1902) 20 Cox 196; Hughes v. Mooney, (1909) 43 I.L.T.R. 127. But proof of the fact that cruelty was not intended is no defence if there was in fact cruelty (Duncan v. Pope, (1899) 19 Cox, 241).

The words "ill treat," "abuse," and "torture" create three separate offences, and therefore a conviction for "ill-treating, abusing, and torturing" is bad (Johnson v. Needham, (1909) 1 K.B. 626).

Defendant was charged in one information with having unlawfully caused to be ill-treated four ponies. The evidence was that he turned out the four ponies at the same time into the same field and kept them there for a considerable time without proper food. During the hearing of the case no notice was given to him that he was being charged with four offences. He was convicted, fined £5 for each pony, four convictions being drawn up against him, each stating that he was fined for ill-treating a pony: Held, that the information alleged only one offence, and that the defendant could not, without previous notice, be convicted on that information of four offences, and that three of the convictions were bad and should be quashed (R. v. Rawson, (1909) 2 K.B. 748; see also R. (Daly) v. Cork JJ., (1898) 2 I.R. 694, noted, p. 91). Where there is only one act or omission, though in respect of several animals, the justices are justified in treating the facts alleged as constituting but one offence (R. v. Cable, (1906) 1 K.B. 719).<sup>1</sup>

"Every person who shall keep or use or act in the management of any place for the purpose of fighting or baiting any bull, bear, badger, dog, cock, or other kind of animal, whether of domestic or wild nature, or shall permit or suffer any place to be so used"—Penalty, £5 per day. "Every person who shall receive money for the admission of any other person to any place kept or used for any of the purposes aforesaid shall be deemed to be the keeper thereof, and every person who shall in any manner encourage, aid, or assist at the fighting or baiting"—Penalty, not exceeding £5 (Cruelty to Animals Act, 1849, s. 3).<sup>1</sup>

c. 92.

The offence of encouraging, &c., within this section, can occur only at a place kept for the purposes aimed at by the section (Clark v. Haque, (1860) 2 El. & El. 281; Morley v. Greenhalgh, (1863) 3 B. & S. 374; Coyne v. Brady, (1862) 12 I.C.L.R. 577). But persons assisting, &c., at a fighting, &c., of any animal anywhere are obviously guilty either of an offence under s. 2 as aiders and abettors (14 & 15 Vict. c. 93, s. 22.), or may apparently be charged as principals (see p. 353, ante). The mere presence at a "main" is, it is submitted, some evidence of encouraging, &c., within the section (see R. v. Coney, (1882) 8 Q.B.D. 584). Turning out rabbits in an enclosure from which they cannot escape and coursing them with dogs is not "baiting animals" (Pitts v. Millar, (1874) L.R. 9 Q.B. 380).

Any person failing to supply food and water to animals that he has impounded, or caused to be impounded—Penalty, not exceeding £1 (Cruelty to Animals Act, 1849, s. 5).<sup>1</sup> Any other person on such failure may supply food, &c., and recover costs thereof from the owner of the animal (s. 6).<sup>3</sup>

By the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 60, s. 1, the person supplying food, &c., can recover double the value thereof from the owner, or, alternatively, may sell the animal after it has been impounded for seven days in order to recover such double value.

<sup>3</sup> The section refers not to the pound-keeper, but to the person who has caused the animal to be impounded (Dargan v. Davies, (1877) 2 Q.B.D. 118). As to offences by pound-keeper, see POUNDS.

<sup>4</sup> It is submitted that section 7 of the Act, enacting a penalty for non-compliance with 26 Geo. 3, c. 71 (E.) (which provides for licensing of slaughter-houses, and that the owners of such licensed slaughter-houses shall affix their names, &c., over the door), is not applicable to Ireland. As to licensing of slaughter-houses in Ireland, see PUBLIC HEALTH.

<sup>5</sup> This section, in view of the grounds upon which the decision in Colam v. Hall, (1871) L.R. 6 Q.B. 206, was based, clearly applies to an unlicensed as well as to a licensed slaughter-house.

Any such keeper, &c., failing to enter in book description of any such animal, or to produce such book to any justice when required—Penalty, not exceeding £2<sup>2</sup> (s. 10). vehicles.

A justice may order the sale of any vehicle or animal detained by the police pursuant to section 19 of the Act for the purposes of satisfying penalty imposed under the Act, &c. (s. 19).

When a complaint is made against the driver or conductor of any vehicle for any offence committed by him<sup>4</sup> against the Act, the justice to whom the complaint is made may summon, if he think proper, the owner of such vehicle to produce on the hearing of such complaint such driver, etc., to answer such complaint; and if such driver, etc., shall not appear, it shall be lawful for the court, if it think fit, to hear and determine the case as if he had been produced, and to order such owner to pay any penalty, sum of money, or costs in which such driver, etc., may be convicted; any sum of money paid under such order to be recoverable by such owner from such driver, etc., as provided in the Act (s. 22).

Such owner so summoned to produce such driver, etc., and without satisfactory excuse failing so to do, may, if the court think proper, be fined forty shillings for every such failure to produce, until he shall produce such driver (s. 22). A conviction for non-production is not a bar to a second charge for a subsequent non-production (see R. (Shortall) v. Queen's Co. JJ., (1899) 5 I. W. L. R. 122).

Obstruction, &c., of any constable or pound-keeper whilst doing anything by virtue of the Act—Penalty, not exceeding £5 (Cruelty to Animals Act, 1849, s. 20).<sup>2</sup>

Obstruction of constable,
&c.

The procedure under the Cruelty to Animals Act, including, it is submitted, the right of and procedure on appeal, is regulated by the Petty Sessions Act (Ir.), 1851. It is submitted that s. 14 of the Act, providing a time-limit as to the institution of proceedings, is impliedly repealed and replaced by s. 10 (4) of the Petty Sessions Act, 1851. A constable, on his own view, or upon the complaint of any other person who shall declare his or her name and place of abode, may seize an offender and bring him before a justice (Cruelty to Animals Act, 1849, s. 13). Certiorari is taken away (s. 26); as to the effect of this provision, see p. 226, ante.

Procedure.

<sup>1</sup> The section applies to an unlicensed as well as a licensed slaughterhouse. In Colam v. Hall, (1871) L. R. 6 Q. B. 206, it was held to apply to the unlicensed slaughterhouse used in connection with a pack of foxhounds. And section 10, in view of the ground on which this decision was based, would seem to apply to an unlicensed as well as a licensed slaughter-house.

<sup>3</sup> It would seem doubtful whether this section applies to Ireland, inasmuch as the licence contemplated by it is the licence issued under the English Act, 26 Geo. 3, c. 71; though, of course, a licence for slaughter-houses exists in Ireland also; see PUBLIC HEALTH.

<sup>4</sup> Scilicet, it is submitted in reference to the driving of the vehicle.

Offences as to wild animals in captivity

63 & 64 Vict.
c. 33.

“ Any person shall be guilty of an offence who, whilst an animal is in captivity or close confinement, or is maimed, pinioned, or subjected to any appliance or contrivance for the purpose of hindering or preventing its escape from such captivity or confinement, shall, by wantonly or unreasonably doing or omitting any act, cause, or permit to be caused, any unnecessary suffering to such animal, or cruelly abuse, infuriate, tease, or terrify it, or permit it to be so treated” (Wild Animals in Captivity Protection Act, 1900, s. 2). An offender may be proceeded against under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts—Penalty, imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding three months, or a fine not exceeding £5, and in default imprisonment with or without hard labour (s. 3).

The word “ animal ” in the Act means any bird, beast, fish, or reptile which is not included in the Cruelty to Animals Acts, 1849 and 1854 (s. 1). The Act does not apply to any act done or any omission in the course of destroying or preparing any animal for destruction as food for mankind, nor to any act permitted by the Cruelty to Animals Act, 1876,<sup>1</sup> nor to the hunting or coursing of any animal which has not been liberated in a mutilated or injured state for the purpose of facilitating its capture or destruction (s. 4). The respondent, the Master of the Cambridge University Drag Hounds, was summoned under the Wild Animals in Captivity Act, 1900, for permitting a hind to be cruelly abused. It was given in evidence that in connection with the drag hounds a number of hinds were kept, and that one of these, which was not in a mutilated or injured state, had been released and was being hunted: that three times during the hunt it took refuge in a yard, from which it was dislodged by being prodded and whipped; that once when being so driven out of the yard it ran against some barbed wire, and was injured thereby; that when caught in the yard it was dragged along the road for some distance till it fell down exhausted; that it was again dragged along for some fifteen or sixteen yards, when it fell down and died. One witness stated that the respondent said he was present the whole of the time, that there was no cruelty so far as he could see, and that he gave orders for the hind to be got out of the yard, with a view to hunting it again, because it was not blown, but was only sulking, as it had done before. At the close of the evidence for the prosecution it was submitted on behalf of the respondent that he had no case to answer, as all the acts deposed to took place while the hind was being hunted, and by sect. 4 of the Wild Animals in Captivity Act, 1900, it was provided that the Act did not apply to anything done in the hunting of an animal. The justices upheld this contention, and accordingly dismissed the information:—Held, that the justices should have considered that there was a case requiring explanation as to how the acts done at the last stage of the proceedings could be hunting, and that the case should therefore be remitted to the justices for further hearing (Rodgers v. Pickersgill, (1910) 26 T.L.R. 493).

Vivisection.

39 & 40 Vict.
c. 77.

Performing on any living animal<sup>2</sup> any painful experiment, except subject to the restrictions<sup>3</sup> imposed by the Act—Penalty, not exceeding, first offence, £50, subsequent offence, £100, or, at the discretion of the court, three months' imprisonment (Cruelty to Animals Act, 1876, s. 2).

Exhibiting to the general public any such experiment—Penalty, same as under sect. 2. Publishing any advertisement of such exhibition—Penalty, not exceeding £1 (s. 6).

<sup>3</sup> The Act provides for the licensing of persons to conduct experiments in vivisection, and for the registration of places in which same may be performed: and for the use of anæsthetics in experiments on a cat or dog, &c.

A search warrant may be granted, upon a sworn information, by a justice to a police constable. Refusal of admission to, or obstruction of, or failure to give correct name and address to, such constable—Penalty, not exceeding £5 (s. 13). No prosecution can be instituted against any person licensed under the Act to perform experiments on animals except with the assent in writing of the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant (ss. 20, 21). If any person is charged under the Act before a court of summary jurisdiction with an offence in respect of which a penalty of more than £5 can be imposed, such person can elect to be tried on indictment (s. 19).

"Any person who shall on any public highway use any dog for the purpose of drawing or helping to draw any cart, carriage, truck, or barrow"—Penalty, not exceeding £2, first offence; subsequent offence, £5 (Cruelty to Animals Act, 1854, s. 2).

As to cruelty to cattle in transit by train, steamer, etc., see ANIMALS, DISEASES or, at p. 366.

"(1) If a police constable finds any animal so diseased or so severely injured or in such a physical condition that it cannot without cruelty be removed, he shall, if the owner is absent or refuses to consent to the destruction of the animal, at once summon a duly registered veterinary surgeon, if any such veterinary surgeon resides within a reasonable distance, and, if it appears by the certificate of such veterinary surgeon that the animal is mortally injured, or so severely injured or so diseased or in such a physical condition that it is cruel to keep it alive, it shall be lawful for the police constable, without the consent of the owner, to slaughter the animal or cause it to be slaughtered with such instruments or appliances, and with such precautions, and in such manner, as to inflict as little pain and suffering as practicable, and, if the slaughter takes place in a street or public place, to remove the carcase or cause it to be removed therefrom.<sup>1</sup>

"(2) Any reasonable expense which may be incurred by any constable in carrying out the provisions of this Act may be recovered from the owner summarily as a civil debt, and, subject thereto, any such expense shall be defrayed out of the fund from which the expenses of the police are payable in the area in which the animal is found" (Injured Animals Act, 1907, s. 1).

"For the purposes of this Act the word 'animal' means any horse, mule, ass, bull, cow, ox, heifer, calf, sheep, goat, or swine" (s. 2).

The Diseases of Animals Act, 1894, as amended by the Diseases of Animals Act, 1896, and the Diseases of Animals Act, 1903 (all which Acts are to be construed as one Act)<sup>1</sup> provides for the notification of disease in animals,<sup>2</sup> and confers extensive powers on "the Department"<sup>3</sup> and certain local authorities in reference to the suppression of certain diseases amongst animals.

Department.

The Act of 1894 confers wide powers on the Department of Agriculture in Ireland to take steps to check disease, including:—power to declare place or area infected with cattle plague (ss. 5, 6), or infected with pleuro-pneumonia, or foot-and-mouth disease, including power to prohibit markets, fairs, exhibitions, or sales (ss. 8, 9);<sup>4</sup> general powers as to infected areas and places (s. 10); to order slaughter of animals, and compensation in case of cattle plague (s. 7), pleuro-pneumonia (s. 14), foot-and-mouth disease (s. 15), swine fever (s. 16), generally (ss. 19, 20); to provide for expenses (s. 17); to provide for pleuro-pneumonia or foot-and-mouth disease during transit, &c. (s. 21);<sup>5</sup> to make orders, generally, for preventing or checking disease (s. 22),<sup>6</sup> and as to the powers of inspectors

<sup>3</sup> The term by which the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland is popularly known, and by which it is referred to in the Act creating it (62 & 63 Vict. c. 50).

<sup>4</sup> The respondent was passing along a highway in charge of a horse and float containing pigs, two of which had been previously ordered, and, whilst so travelling, asked other people if they wanted to buy pigs, and subsequently sold them all to various people: Held, not to be a breach of an order, "no market, fair, sale, or exhibition of swine shall be held," &c., for, though there was a selling, there was no holding a sale (M'Lean v. Monk, (1898) 18 Cox, 686).

<sup>6</sup> The general orders made under this section, as enlarged by s. 1 of the Diseases of Animals Act, 1903, or ss. 4, 10, 21, 23, 25, 30, 68, and now (December 31, 1910) in force, are:—

and other officers of local authorities (s. 68), movement of cattle<sup>1</sup> into, within, or out of infected places and areas unless under prescribed conditions (s. 12). Section 11 forbids movement into, within, or out of infected places and areas in case of pleuro-pneumonia and foot-and-mouth disease, save under conditions prescribed by schedule to the Act. A person owning or having charge of animals<sup>2</sup> in place or area infected may exclude strangers by notice (s. 13). The Diseases of Animals Act, 1903, provides power to make orders for the prevention of sheep scab, and as to examination of sheep and facilities for sheep-dipping.

Department.

One of the matters in connection with which the Department may make orders under section 22 is the muzzling of dogs, and the keeping of dogs under control, and the seizure and slaughter of stray or unmuzzled dogs, or of dogs not under proper control. These provisions have been supplemented by the Dogs Act, 1906, giving power to make regulations as to collars on dogs, &c. See Dogs.

The Department may alter or revoke any order of the Department. Every order of the Department shall have effect as if it had been enacted by the Act.<sup>3</sup> The Department shall, in the case of every order made by them under the Act, publish in the Dublin Gazette a notice that the

By the Bovine Tuberculosis (Ireland) Order of 1910 (dated Jan. 27, 1910), tuberculosis is declared a disease for the purposes of ss. 22 and 65, 43 and 44, and 74 of this Act.

Separation of diseased animals, and notice to police.

“(1) Every person having in his possession or under his charge an animal<sup>1</sup> affected with disease<sup>2</sup> shall :—(a) as far as practicable keep that animal separate from animals not so affected; (b) with all practicable speed give notice of the animal being so affected to a constable of the police force for the police area wherein the animal so affected is. (2) The constable to whom notice is given shall forthwith give information thereof to such person or authority as [the Department] by general order direct. (3) [The Department] may make such orders as they think fit for prescribing and regulating the notice to be given to or by any person or authority in case of any particular disease or in case of the illness of an animal, and for supplementing or varying for those purposes any of the provisions of this section” (Diseases of Animals Act, 1894, s. 4).

Cruelty to animals in transit.

It is provided by the Animals (Transit and General) (Ireland) Order of 1895 (No. 1 in the list on p. 364) that a railway company shall not allow any vehicle used for carrying animals to be overcrowded so as to cause unnecessary suffering to such animals (Ch. 3, par. 8); and by the same order it is provided that a railway company shall not between 1st November and 30th April following, both days inclusive, carry in any open truck sheep shorn within sixty days, unless such sheep are provided with clothing (Ch. 3, par. 9). It is provided by the Animals (Transit and General) Amendment (Ireland) Order of 1904 (which is to be read as one with the last-mentioned Order of 1895) that no cow shall be permitted by the owner, his agent, or any person in charge to be carried by railway if reasonably likely to calve during the journey (par. 7); and by the same order it is provided that no animal shall be permitted by the owner, his agent, or any person in charge to be carried by railway if for any reason it cannot be carried without unnecessary suffering (par. 8).

Provision of water at railway station.

“(1) Every railway company shall make a provision, to the satisfaction of [the Department] of water and food, or either of them, at such stations as [the Department] by general or specific description, direct,<sup>3</sup> for animals carried, or about to be, or having been carried, on the railway of the company; (2) the water and food so provided or either of them shall be supplied to any such animal by the company carrying it, on the request of the consignor or of any person in charge thereof; (3) as regards water, if, in the case of any animal, such a request is not made, so that the animal remains without a supply of water for twenty-four consecutive hours, the consignor and the person in charge of the animal shall each be guilty of an offence against this Act; and it shall lie on the person charged to prove such request and the time within which the animal had a supply of water; (4) but [the Department] may, if they think fit, by order prescribe any other period, not less than twelve hours, instead of the period of twenty-four hours aforesaid, generally, or in respect of any particular kind of animals; (5) the company supplying

<sup>2</sup> “Disease” means cattle-plague, pleuro-pneumonia, foot-and-mouth disease, sheep-pox, sheep-scab, or swine-fever (s. 59).

<sup>3</sup> The Water Supply on Railways (Ireland) Order of 1901 specifies the stations at which water is to be provided. No order has been made by the Department either as to varying the period of twenty-four hours mentioned in s. 23 (3) or as to food.

water or food under this section may make in respect thereof such reasonable charges (if any) as [the Department] by order approve. . . .” (Diseases of Animals Act, 1894, s. 23).

Subject as hereinafter appears, a foreign<sup>1</sup> animal may be landed at a port defined for the purpose by the Department, to be called a foreign animals' wharf,<sup>2</sup> but must be slaughtered before it leaves the wharf (Diseases of Animals Act, 1896, s. 1 (1), schedule 3 to Act of 1894). But foreign animals intended for exhibition or other exceptional purposes, and the landing of which is allowed for the time being by the Department, subject to the provisions as to quarantine in section 27 of the Act of 1894, are not within these provisions (Act of 1896, s. 1 (1)). Further, the Department may, whenever they deem it expedient so to do, make orders entirely prohibiting the landing of any animals, or of carcases, fodder, litter, dung, or other thing brought from any place outside the United Kingdom, and shall prohibit the landing of such animals whenever they think such prohibition necessary in order to prevent the importation from such place of animals affected with foot-and-mouth disease (Act of 1894, s. 25). The orders made under this section and now (Dec. 31, 1910) in force are:—Nos. 17, 20, 22, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, and 35 in the list given at p. 364.

59 & 60 Vict.

If any person lands or attempts to land or ship any animal or thing in contravention of the Act or of an order of the Department, he shall be liable, under and according to the Customs Acts, to the penalties imposed on persons importing, etc., goods contrary to the Customs Acts, with forfeiture of animal or thing (Act of 1894, s. 56).

The local authority shall pay to the receiver of wreck the expenses connected with the burial of carcases washed ashore and buried by his direction; the owner of the vessel from which the animal or carcass was thrown shall be liable to repay the expenses to the local authority, recoverable as salvage is recoverable (Diseases of Animals Act, 1894, s. 46).

Burial of carcase washed ashore.

“Carcass” includes carcases of frozen meat (The Suevic (1908), P. 292).

“If any person is guilty of an offence against this Act, he shall for every such offence be liable—(1) to a fine not exceeding £20; or (2) if the offence is committed with respect to more than four animals, to a fine not exceeding £5 for each animal; or (3) where the offence is committed in relation to carcases, fodder, litter, dung, or other thing (exclusive of animals), to a fine not exceeding £10 in respect of every half ton in weight thereof after one half ton, in addition to the first fine of not exceeding £20” (Diseases of Animals Act, 1894, s. 51).

Penalties.

“If any person, without lawful authority or excuse, proof whereof shall lie on him, does any of the following things, he shall be guilty of an offence against this Act:—(i) If he does anything in contravention of this Act, or of an order of the Department, or of a regulation of a local authority; or (ii) if, where required by this Act or by an order of the

offences.

<sup>1</sup> As to meaning of “animals” see p. 366, n. 1. “Foreign” means brought to the U.K. from a country outside the U.K. (Act of 1894, s. 59).

In relation to animals brought from the Channel Islands or the Isle of Man, the Department may, if they think fit, by order or by licence, vary any of the provisions of the third schedule to the Act relating to slaughter or quarantine (Act of 1894, s. 28).

<sup>2</sup> The Department may make such orders as they think fit, subject and according to the provisions of the Act, for the regulation of ports (Act of 1894, s. 30 (1), i.-xiii.). The only such order made and now (Dec. 31, 1910) in force is the Portal Inspection (Ireland) Order of 1895, dated December 17th, 1895 (No. 2 on the list on p. 364).

As to the power of the Department to, by order, appoint a body other than the county council to be the local authority, for the purposes of the provisions of the Act as regards foreign animals, in relation to a port or part of a port, see s. 30 (3). As to power to detain vessels, see the Act of 1894, s. 45.

General
Offences.

Department to keep an animal separate as far as practicable, or to give notice of disease with all practicable speed, he fails to do so; or (iii) if he fails to give, produce, observe, or do any notice, licence, rule or thing which by this Act, or by an order of the Department, or by a regulation of a local authority, he is required to give, produce, observe, or do; or (iv) if he does anything which by this Act or an order of the Department is made or declared to be not lawful; or (v) if he does or omits anything, the doing or omission whereof is declared by this Act or by an order of the Department to be an offence by him against this Act; or (vi) if he refuses to an inspector or other officer, acting in execution of this Act, or of an order of the Department, or of a regulation of a local authority, admission to any land, building, place, vessel, pen, vehicle, or boat which the inspector or officer is entitled to enter or examine, or obstructs or impedes him in so entering or examining, or otherwise in any respect obstructs or impedes an inspector or constable or other officer in the execution of his duty, or assists in any such obstructing or impeding; or (vii) if he throws or places, or causes or suffers to be thrown or placed, into or in any river, stream, canal, navigation, or other water, or into or in the sea within three miles of the shore, the carcass of an animal which has died of disease, or been slaughtered as diseased or suspected; and on a further conviction within a period of twelve months for a second or subsequent offence against the same sub-section of this section he shall be liable, in the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding one month, with or without hard labour, in lieu of the fine to which he is liable under this Act" (s. 52).

Miscellaneous
offences punishable by imprisonment.

"(1) If any person does any of the following things, he shall be guilty of an offence against this Act:—(i) if, with intent to unlawfully evade this Act, or an order of the Department, or a regulation of a local authority, he does anything for which a licence is requisite under this Act, or an order of the Department, or a regulation of a local authority, without having obtained a licence: or (ii) if where a licence is requisite, having obtained a licence, he, with the like intent, does the thing licensed after the licence has expired: or (iii) if he uses or offers or attempts to use as such a licence an instrument not being a complete licence, or an instrument untruly purporting or appearing to be a licence, unless he shows to the satisfaction of the court that he did not know of that incompleteness or untruth, and that he could not with reasonable diligence have obtained knowledge thereof: or (iv) if, with intent to unlawfully evade this Act, or an order of the Department, or a regulation of a local authority, he alters, or falsely makes, or ante-dates, or counterfeits, or offers or utters, knowing the same to be altered, or falsely made, or ante-dated, or counterfeited, a licence, declaration, certificate, or instrument made or issued, or purporting to be made or issued under or for any purpose of this Act, or of an order of the Department, or of a regulation of a local authority: or (v) if, for the purpose of obtaining a licence, certificate, or instrument, he makes a declaration or statement false in any material particular, unless he shows to the satisfaction of the court that he did not know of that falsity, and that he could not with reasonable diligence have obtained knowledge thereof: or (vi) if he obtains or endeavours to obtain such a licence, certificate, or instrument by means of a false pretence, unless he shows to the satisfaction of the court that he did not know of that falsity, and that he could not with reasonable diligence have obtained knowledge thereof: or (vii) if he grants or issues such a licence, certificate, or instrument, being false in any date or other material particular, unless he shows to the satisfaction of the Court that he did not know of that falsity, and that he could not with reasonable diligence have obtained knowledge thereof, or if he grants or issues such a licence, certificate, or instrument, having, and knowing that he has, no lawful authority to grant or issue the same : or (viii) if, with intent to unlawfully evade or defeat this Act, or an order of the Department, or a regulation of a local authority, he grants or issues an instrument being in form a licence, certificate, or instrument made or issued under this Act, or an order of the Department, or a regulation of a local authority, for permitting or regulating the movement of a particular animal, or the doing of any other particular thing, but being issued in blank, that is to say, not being before the issue thereof so filled up as to specify any particular animal or thing : or (ix) if he uses or offers or attempts to use for any purpose of this Act, or of an order of the Department, or of a regulation of a local authority, an instrument so issued in blank, unless he shows to the satisfaction of the court that he did not know of it having been so issued in blank, and that he could not with reasonable diligence have obtained knowledge thereof : or (x) if he by means of any fraud or false pretence obtains, or attempts to obtain, compensation from the Department or a local authority in respect of an animal slaughtered, or aids or abets any person in any such fraud or false pretence : or (xi) if, without lawful authority or excuse, proof whereof shall lie on him, he digs up, or causes to be dug up, a carcase buried under the direction of the Department or of a local authority or of a receiver of wreck : or (xii) if, where the Department has by order prohibited, absolutely or conditionally, the use for the carrying of animals, or for any purpose connected therewith, of a vessel, vehicle, or pen, or other place, he, without lawful authority or excuse, proof whereof shall lie on him, does anything so prohibited ; (2) and in every case in this section specified he shall be liable, on conviction, in the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two months, with or without hard labour, in lieu of the fine to which he is liable under this Act" (s. 53).

offences
punishable by
imprisonment.

The local authorities who, under section 2 of the Diseases of Animals Act, 1894, 57 & 58 Vict. c. 57, are to execute and enforce the Act are the county councils (Diseases of Animals Act, 1894, s. 67 (1), Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898, s. 6, art. 45 of Adaptation of Irish Enactments Order of 30th January, 1899). In case of a county borough the local authority is the council of such county borough (Local Government (Ir.) Act, 1898, s. 21 (2)). The county boroughs in Ireland are Dublin, Belfast, Cork, Limerick, Londonderry, Waterford (s. 21, sch. 2).

Powers and duties of local authorities.

Section 8 (6), (7), (8), (11), of the Act of 1894 authorizes the making by local authorities of certain orders under the Act declaring places infected with pleuro-pneumonia, or foot-and-mouth disease.<sup>1</sup>

"An order or regulation of a local authority may be proved—(i) by the production of a newspaper purporting to contain the order or regulation as an advertisement ; or (ii) by the production of a copy of the order or regulation purporting to be certified by the clerk of the local authority as a true copy. An order or regulation so proved shall be taken to have been duly made unless and until the contrary is proved. An order or regulation of a local authority authorized by this Act or by an order of [the Department] shall alone be deemed for the purposes of this Act an order or regulation of a local authority" (Act of 1894, s. 37).

The powers of a local authority are confined to its own district, save where otherwise expressly provided (s. 38).<sup>2</sup>

Every local authority shall at their own expense publish every order of the department ; and every licence or other instrument sent to them by the Department for publication, in such manner as the Department direct, and subject to and in the absence of any direction, by advertisement in a newspaper circulating in the district of the local authority. The validity or effect of an order of the Department, licence, or other instrument issued by the Department shall not be affected by want of, or defect or irregularity in, publication (Act of 1894, s. 49).

<sup>1</sup> Schedule 4 authorizes the local authority to delegate its functions to a committee, who may appoint sub-committees. As to the power of the Department to direct that the local authority shall make orders only itself or by its executive committee, see s. 31 (2).

Powers and duties of police.

The police force of each police area shall execute and enforce the Act and every order of the Department (s. 43). The police force in Ireland means the Royal Irish Constabulary and the Dublin Metropolitan Police, (s. 74); and the term does not include such bodies as the Quay Police of the Dublin Port and Docks Board or the Harbour Police in Belfast. The powers of a constable are set out in s. 43 (2-7), and include the power to stop and detain any person seen or found committing, or reasonably suspected of being engaged in committing, an offence against the Act; and power to apprehend such person should his name and address be unknown and be refused to the constable. A constable may stop, detain, and examine any animal, vehicle, boat, or thing to which the offence or suspected offence relates, and require the same to be forthwith taken back to any place wherefrom it was unlawfully removed. A constable may, without warrant, apprehend any person who obstructs or impedes him in the execution of the Act. Any person called by a constable to his assistance has the same power as the constable.

Veterinary inspector.

A veterinary inspector (s. 69 (4)) has, within his district, for the purposes of the Act all the powers of a constable (s. 44 (1)). The department can make orders as to the powers of inspectors and other officers of the local authority (s. 68). The local authority are not responsible for the negligence of an inspector appointed by them under the Act (Stanbury v. Eacter Corporation, (1905) 2 K.B. 838). A certificate of a veterinary inspector as to an animal being affected with a disease is conclusive evidence of the fact stated therein (s. 44 (5)), and evidence to disprove such fact is not admissible, though the same facts may be given in evidence to show absence of guilty knowledge, when guilty knowledge is of the essence of the offence (Leonard v. Richards, (1891) 25 I.L.T.R. 58).

Certificate of.

Procedure.

The procedure is to follow the Summary Jurisdiction (Ireland) Acts (Act of 1894, s. 75 (1)).

The Court may consist of one or more justices (s. 75 (3)); one-third of the penalty may be awarded to the informer (s. 75 (4)), that is, the complainant, not a mere witness (see Powell v. Castletown, (1891) 30 L.R.I. 93). Any person may prosecute, the right to do so not being confined to local authority (R. v. Stewart, (1896) 1 Q.B. 300)<sup>1</sup>.

Procedure.

The prosecution may be instituted either at the place where the offence was committed, or at the place where the accused is at the time of the institution or commencement of the charge, complaint, or proceeding (s. 57 (4)). Defendant gave a false declaration at B to his drover, who produced it to a constable at C. Held, that the defendant was rightly convicted at C, the place where the document was issued (Oakey v. Stretton, (1884) 48 J.P. 709). The movement of animals into a certain district in the county of Dorset was forbidden. Animals were consigned to a place within the district, with through bills from Cork via Bristol and a specified route. The appellants, a railway company, were no parties to the contract with the consignor, but in furtherance of the scheme of carriage carried the animals over a portion of the route to a point outside the county of Dorset, whence they were subsequently carried into that county by another company. Held, that the appellants were rightly convicted of "causing, directing, or permitting" the movement, contrary to Order in Council (Midland R. Co. v. Freeman, (1884) 12 Q.B.D. 629'. A corporation can be prosecuted under the Act (R. (Lanktree) v. Dublin JJ., (1904) 4 N.I.J.R. 182).

If any person thinks himself aggrieved by the dismissal of a complaint by or by any determination or adjudication of a court of summary jurisdiction under this Act, he may appeal therefrom to a court of quarter sessions (Act of 1894, s. 55). This section gives a right of appeal, both in cases of dismissals and of impositions of fines less than twenty shillings.

"The provisions of the Summary Jurisdiction (Ireland) Acts relative to appeals against orders and convictions shall apply to orders and convictions and to dismissals of complaints under this Act" (s. 75 (2)).

The accused, or the husband or wife of the accused, is a competent but not a compellable witness (s. 57 (3)).

If the owner or any person in charge of any animal is charged with any offence relating to the disease, etc., thereof, he shall be presumed to have known of the existence of the disease, etc., until the contrary is proved (s. 57 (1)). Where any person is charged with an offence in not having duly cleansed, etc., any place, etc., belonging to him or under his charge, and "a presumption against him on the part of the prosecution is raised," it shall lie on him to prove the due cleansing; etc., thereof (s. 57 (2)). The precise meaning of the words in italics is not clear, and there is no reported decision on the point. Probably they merely mean, "when it has been proved on behalf of the prosecution that such place, etc., presents the appearance of not having been cleansed, etc., as required by the Act or any order of the Department."

In any proceeding under this Act no proof shall be required of the appointment or handwriting of an inspector or other authority of the Department, or of the clerk or inspector or other officer of a local authority (s. 48 (1)). As to proof of orders of Department, see p. 277, and of local authority, p. 369; as to certificate of veterinary inspector, p. 370.

Every notice under the Act or under any order or regulation made under this Act must be in writing. Any notice or other instrument under the Act or under an order of the Department or a regulation of a local authority may be served on the person to be affected thereby, either by the delivery thereof to him personally, or by the leaving thereof for him at his last known place of abode or business, or by the sending thereof through the post in a letter addressed to him there. A notice or other instrument to be served on the occupier of any building, land, or place may, except when sent by post, be addressed to him by the designation of the occupier of that building, land, or place, without naming or further describing him; and where it is to be served on the several occupiers of several buildings, lands, or places may, except when sent by post, be addressed to them collectively by the designation of the occupiers of those several buildings, lands or places, without further naming or describing them, but separate copies thereof being served on them severally (s. 48).

Under the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 74), s. 34,<sup>1</sup> and the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 32), s. 9,<sup>2</sup> which are the only sections of those Acts not repealed by the fifth schedule to the Diseases of Animals Act, 1894, the Local Government Board for Ireland have made the Dairies, Cowsheds, and Milkshops Order.

<sup>2</sup> Transferring the power to make orders relative to dairies, cowsheds, and milkshops to the Local Government Board.

Dairies, Cowsheds, and Milkshops
Order.

Milkshops (Ireland) Order of 1908,<sup>1</sup> dated 13th February, 1908, which revokes all previous Orders under those Acts, providing:—

- (a) For the registration with the local authorities of all persons carrying on the trade of cowkeepers, dairymen,<sup>2</sup> or purveyors of milk.
- (b) For the inspection of cattle in dairies, and for prescribing and regulating the lighting, ventilation, cleansing, drainage, and water supply of dairies and cowsheds in the occupation of persons following the trade of cowkeepers or dairymen.
- (c) For securing the cleanliness of milk stores, milk shops, and of milk vessels used for containing milk for sale by such persons.
- (d) For prescribing precautions to be taken for protecting milk against infection or contamination.
- (e) For authorizing local authorities to make regulations<sup>3</sup> for the purposes aforesaid or any of them subject to such conditions as the Board may prescribe.

The Order deals in articles 1–24 with the matters mentioned in (a), (b), (c), (d), and (e). By article 26 it is provided that any person offending against any of the provisions of the Order, or any regulation made under it by a local authority, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding £5, and in the case of a continuing offence to a further penalty not exceeding £2 for each day after written notice of the offence from the local authority. For the interpretation of the terms used in the Order, see article 28.

Offences against this order may be prosecuted, and penalties recovered, in a summary manner and subject to the like provisions as if the orders were a bye-law of a local authority under the Public Health Act, 1878 (Act of 1886, s. 9 (5)). See PUBLIC HEALTH. As to proof of Orders of Local Government Board, see p. 278, ante.

Inspection of dairies by Medical Officer of Health.

As to the power of a medical officer of health, under the Infectious Diseases Prevention Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 34, s. 4, to inspect a dairy for reasons connected with the diseases, not of animals, but of human beings, and also to prohibit the supply of milk for the same reasons from a dairy, see PUBLIC HEALTH.

APPRENTICES.

See MASTER AND SERVANT.

<sup>1</sup> As to the manner in which this order may be proved, see p. 278, ante. It has been held that the local authority are obliged to comply with a sealed order of the L. G. B. directing them to appoint a duly qualified veterinary surgeon as veterinary inspector to fulfil such duties as may be assigned to him by the L. G. B. (R. (Local Govt. Board) v. Kilmallock R.D.C., (1910) Dec., unreported; but see INDEX OF CASES).

<sup>2</sup> A farmer who kept cows to supply milk to his own household, and who occasionally sold at irregular intervals small quantities of milk to his neighbours, was held by the Q. B. Division not to carry on the trade of a dairyman (Southwell v. Lewis, (1880) 45 J.P. 206). A farmer who does not sell milk, but uses it for the purpose of fattening calves, is not a dairyman (Umfreville v. London County Council, (1897) 18 Cox 464).

<sup>3</sup> A regulation which provided that there must be 800 cubic feet of air space for each animal was held good (Baker v. Williams, (1898) 1 Q.B. 23).

The raising or keeping of a standing army in the United Kingdom in time of peace, unless with the consent of Parliament, is unlawful, and, in order to legalize the existence of the army, Parliament, by the Army (Annual) Act, every year re-enacts for one year the Army Act, 1881. The Army Act, 1881, referred to in this Article is the Army Act, 1881, as amended by the twenty-nine Army (Annual) Acts passed since 1881, and as printed with such amendments pursuant to the Army (Annual) Act, 1885. The Army Act, 1881, applies to persons subject to military law, whether within or without His Majesty's dominions (Army (Annual) Act, 1910, s. 2 (2)). A person subject to military law<sup>1</sup> when in His Majesty's dominions may be tried by any competent civil court for any offence for which he would be triable if he were not subject to military law (Army Act, 1881, s. 41 (5) (b)). Articles of War may be made by His Majesty for the better government of officers and soldiers, and such articles shall be judicially taken notice of by all judges and in all courts (s. 69).

A recruiter shall give to each intending recruit a notice stating the conditions of enlistment, and directing such recruit to appear before a justice of the peace. Such justice shall ask the recruit whether he has received and understands the notice, and if he assents to be enlisted, and shall not proceed with the enlistment if he appear to be under the influence of liquor. If he assents, the justice shall, after cautioning him that if he makes any false answer he will be liable to punishment as provided by the Act, read to him the specified questions in the attestation paper, taking care that he understands the questions put to him, and see the answers recorded in the attestation paper, and get such recruit to sign the same and to take the oath of allegiance, and the justice shall also sign the paper (s. 80). Any immaterial error in the attestation paper may be amended by a justice (s. 80 (6)).

To knowingly make a false answer to any question in the attestation paper—Penalty, imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding three months (s. 99 (1)). If the person guilty of this offence has been attested a soldier of the regular forces, he may be proceeded against by court-martial instead of summarily (s. 99 (2)).

Apprentices.

The master of an apprentice in the United Kingdom who has enlisted may claim him while he is under twenty-one, by following the procedure indicated by s. 96.

Unlawful recruiting and interference with recruiting.

Unlawful recruiting, or interference with recruiting—Penalty, not exceeding £20 (s. 98).

Billeting.

General provisions.

Every constable<sup>1</sup> in charge of any place mentioned in any route (as defined in the section) issued to troops shall, on production of such route, and on demand by or on behalf of the officer commanding such troops, billet on the occupiers of victualling houses and other premises mentioned in the Act, such officers, soldiers, and horses entitled under the Act to be billeted, as are stated in such route to require quarters (s. 103). The term "victualling houses" includes all inns, hotels, livery stables, ale-houses, and the houses of sellers by retail of wines for consumption on the premises, and the houses of sellers by retail of brandy, spirits, strong water, or cider; but no officer or soldier is to be billeted in any private house, nor in any house kept for distilling brandy or strong waters in which tippling is not permitted, nor in the house of any shopkeeper whose principal dealing is in goods other than brandy and strong waters, and who does not permit tippling in such house, nor in the house of a person licensed only for the sale of beer or cider not to be consumed on the premises, nor in the house of any foreign consul (s. 104). Officers, soldiers, and horses of the regular forces and of the auxiliary forces when subject to military law (s. 181) are entitled to be billeted (s. 105). A person in whose house troops may be billeted must either give them in such house the accommodation, etc., specified in the second schedule to the Act, or provide such accommodation elsewhere to the satisfaction of the constable who issued the billet (s. 106). Any person aggrieved by reason of being entered in the annual list (made out pursuant to this section) of victualling houses liable to billets, or of being entered thereon to receive an undue proportion of officers, soldiers, or horses, may complain to a court of summary jurisdiction, which may order the list to be amended (s. 107). There is a similar provision with regard to list of persons liable to supply carriages, etc. (s. 114). A justice, on the request of an officer or non-commissioned officer, authorized to demand billets, may vary a route by adding any place or omitting any place, and also may direct billets to be given above one mile from a place mentioned in the route (s. 108 (6)). A justice may require a constable to give an account in writing of the number of officers, soldiers, and horses billeted by such constable, together with the names of the keepers of victualling houses on whom such officers, soldiers, and horses are billeted, and the locality of such victualling houses (s. 108 (7)).

Officers as to billeting by (1) constable.

A constable who (1) billets any officer, soldier, or horse on any person not liable to billets, without the consent of such person; (2) receives, demands, or agrees for money or reward to relieve any person liable to billets from such liability; (3) billets or quarters on any person or premises without the consent of such person or the occupier of such premises any person or horse not entitled to be billeted; (4) neglects or refuses after sufficient notice to give billets demanded for any officer, soldier, or horse entitled to be billeted—Penalty, not less than £2 and not exceeding £10 (s. 109).

Officers as to billeting by (2) keeper of victualling houses.

A keeper of a victualling house who (1) refuses to receive any person or horse billeted on him or to furnish such accommodation as is required by the Act; (2) bribes or agrees to bribe any constable to free him from liability to billets; (3) gives or agrees to give money to any officer or soldier billeted on him in lieu of receiving an officer, soldier, or horse or furnishing accommodation—Penalty, not less than £2, and not exceeding £5 (s. 110).

Any officer or soldier who commits any of the following offences : Offences as to billeting by 3 troops.
 (a) being guilty of violence, extortion, or making disturbance in billets; (b) if an officer, failing to cause compensation to be made by anyone under his command for such violence, etc.; (c) failing to comply with the requirements of the Act as to payment for billets; (d) demanding billets that are not required; (e) taking, or permitting the taking of, bribes for relieving any person from his liability to billets; (f) compelling a constable or other civil officer to give billets contrary to this Act, or discouraging him from performing any duty in regard to billeting; (g) compelling any person to receive without his consent any person or horse not duly billeted on him, or to furnish any accommodation which he is not required to furnish—Penalty, not exceeding £50; conviction to be reported to the Army Council (ss. 111 (2), 30, and 119, read together).

Any justice of any place mentioned in any route purporting to be issued to the commanding officer of any part of the regular forces must, on production of such route and on demand by or on behalf of such commanding officer, issue his warrant to any constable to provide such carriages,<sup>1</sup> animals, and drivers as are stated to be required for the conveyance of regimental baggage and stores (s. 112). Provision is made for payment for the use of such carriages, &c. (s. 113). The police are annually to make out lists of persons liable to furnish carriages, &c. (s. 114). By order, stating that a case of emergency exists, the Chief or Under Secretary may authorize any general or field officer in command of His Majesty's regular forces to issue a "requisition of emergency" under which justices must issue their warrants for the provision, for any purposes mentioned in such requisition, of carriages of every description, including motor cars and locomotives, horses of every description, and boats used for inland navigation, that are mentioned in such requisition (s. 115). Provision is made for the punishment of offences by constables in relation to ss. 112 and 115 (s. 116), by persons ordered to furnish carriages, horses, or boats (s. 117), and by officers and soldiers in connection with the impressment of carriages, horses, and boats (s. 118). Impressment of carriages and horses.

If any officer or soldier fails to comply with the provisions of the Act with respect to the payment of money due for billets, or the use of carriages or animals, or if any person on whom troops are billeted, or who owns or drives any carriage, animal, or boat impressed under the Act, is illtreated by any officer or soldier, such person, after first making complaint, if practicable, to an officer commanding such officer or soldier, may apply to a court of summary jurisdiction, which if satisfied of the truth of the complaint, shall certify to the Army Council the amount, including the costs of such application, due to the complainant. If the Army Council be not satisfied that the amount so certified is due, they may cause a complaint to be made to a court of summary jurisdiction for the same place as that for which the court so certifying acted, and on such last-mentioned complaint, such certificate may be varied or confirmed (s. 119). A justice may, in case of emergency, act as a constable for the purposes of the Act, but no person having any military office or commission shall act as a justice or constable with regard to the billeting of troops under his command (s. 120). Application to petty sessions for money due for billets, or in respect of illtreatment by troops.

If any person (1) forges, or produces to any justice or constable any forged route or requisition of emergency; (2) for the purpose of Fraudulent claims.

procuring billets or carriages, animals or vessels, personates any officer or soldier; or (3) produces to any justice or constable a route or requisition of emergency that he is not authorized to produce, or a document falsely purporting to be a route or requisition—Penalty, imprisonment not exceeding three months, with or without hard labour, or fine not less than £1 nor exceeding £5 (s. 121).

Personation to obtain military pay, &c.

Personation to obtain military pay—Penalty, imprisonment not exceeding three months with or without hard labour, or fine not exceeding £25 (s. 142).

Forgery of certificates, &c.

6 Ed. 7, c. 5.

Forging of certificate of discharge, or seeking employment by means of forged certificates or personating holder thereof—Penalty, imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding one month, or fine not exceeding £20 (Seamen and Sailors' False Characters Act, 1906, s. 1). Using or giving false statements for enlistment, penalty not exceeding £20 (s. 2). Making false written statement as to character or previous employment of any man to be used for enlistment, like penalty (ib.).

Falsely pretending to be deserter.

Falsely pretending to be a deserter—Penalty, imprisonment not exceeding three months, with or without hard labour (Army Act, 1881, s. 152).

Inducing soldiers to desert.

Inducing, aiding, &c., soldiers to desert, concealing deserter—Penalty, imprisonment not exceeding six months, with or without hard labour (s. 153).

Apprehension of deserters.

A justice, if satisfied by evidence on oath that a deserter is or is reasonably suspected to be within his jurisdiction, may issue a warrant authorizing such deserter to be apprehended and brought before a court of summary jurisdiction, which may deal with such deserter as if he were charged with an indictable offence. Such court, if satisfied by evidence on oath or by confession that a person brought before them charged with being a deserter is in fact a deserter, shall forthwith deliver him into military custody, or commit him, until he can be so delivered, to some prison or police station. Upon so doing the court is to transmit to the Army Council a return called a "descriptive return" containing such particulars and in such form as is specified in the 4th schedule to the Act, or as the Army Council may direct. If the court be not satisfied that a person who has confessed that he is a deserter is in fact a deserter, they may from time to time remand him, for not more than eight days at a time, whilst making enquiry regarding him of the Army Council (s. 154).

Purchasing regimental equipment, stores, &c.

Purchasing, taking in pawn, receiving, &c., or soliciting any soldier to give away, or aiding any soldier in making away with regimental equipments, stores, &c., unless purchaser, &c., proves that he did not know that he was dealing with such property, or that the person he dealt with was or acted for a soldier, or unless he proves that such arms, &c., were sold by some competent military authority—Penalty, first offence, not exceeding £20, together with treble the value of such property so bought, &c.; second offence, not less than £5 nor more than £20, together with treble the value of such property so bought, &c., or imprisonment with or without hard labour, not exceeding six months (s. 156 (1)). When any such property as aforesaid is found in the possession of any person, he may be brought before a court of summary jurisdiction, and if such court have reasonable ground to believe that such property was obtained in contravention of the section, and such person, does not satisfy such court that he came by such property lawfully—Penalty, not exceeding £5 (s. 156 (2)).

Any person charged under this section and the husband or wife of such person are competent but not compellable witnesses (s. 156 (3)). Any person found committing an offence against this section may be apprehended and brought before a court of summary jurisdiction, and any person who suspects that property offered to him is offered to him in contravention may apprehend the person so offering and take him and such property before such court (s. 156 (4)). A court of summary jurisdiction, if satisfied on oath that there is reasonable cause to suspect that any person has in his possession, or on his premises, any property obtained in contravention of this section, may issue, as in the case of stolen goods, a warrant to search for such property, and any such property found on such search shall be seized, and the person in whose possession the same is found shall be brought before a court of summary jurisdiction (s. 156 (5)). For the purpose of this section, property shall be deemed to be in the possession or keeping of any person who has it knowingly in the actual possession or keeping of any other person, or in any place whatever, whether occupied by himself or not, and whether for the benefit of himself or any other person (s. 156 (6)).

Receiving, detaining, &c., pensioner's certificate as pledge or security for debt, &c.—Penalties as for offences under s. 156 (1), supra (s. 156 (9)).

The foregoing offences may be prosecuted in any places where the offence was committed or where the offender is, and the fine and forfeiture in respect thereof may be recovered in manner provided by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts,<sup>1</sup> which Acts are to apply to the proceedings. A portion, not exceeding one-half, of any fine imposed may be ordered to be paid to the informer,<sup>2</sup> and, in so far as not so applied, all fines are to be applied as directed by the Fines Act (Ir.), 1851, and any Acts amending the same. The court is to consist of two or more justices sitting in petty sessions, or in the D. M. P. district of one divisional justice<sup>3</sup> (s. 166). Prosecutions for any act done in pursuance or execution or intended execution of the Act or in respect of any alleged neglect or default in the execution of the Act must be commenced within six months after the act complained of, or in the case of a continuing offence within the like period after the ceasing thereof (s. 170 (1)). If a person sentenced by a court-martial in pursuance of the Act is afterwards tried by a civil court for the same offence, such civil court is, in awarding punishment, to have regard to the military punishment undergone (s. 162 (1)).

Detaining certificate of pensioner.
Procedure.

The attestation paper, or the declaration made by any person upon his re-engagement, is evidence of the answers therein appearing. The enlistment may be proved by a copy of the attestation paper purporting to be certified as a true copy by the officer having the custody of such paper, without proof of the handwriting of such officer or of his having such custody (s. 163 (1) (a)). A letter or other document respecting the services of any person in or the discharge of any person from any portion of His Majesty's Forces, or respecting a person not having served in or belonged to such forces, if purporting to be signed by or on behalf of a Secretary of State or the Army Council, or of the Commissioners of the Admiralty, or by the commanding officer of any portion of the forces, or of any of H.M. ships, to which such person appears to have belonged, or alleges that he belongs or has belonged, is evidence of the facts therein stated (s. 163 (1) (b)). Regimental records purporting to be signed by the commanding officer or by the officer whose duty it is to make such record is evidence of the facts thereby stated (s. 163 (1) (g)). A descriptive return<sup>4</sup> purporting to be signed by a justice is evidence of the matter therein stated (s. 163 (1) (i)). Whenever any person subject to military law has been tried by any civil court, the clerk thereof shall, if required by the commanding officer of such person, furnish a certificate setting forth the offence and the order made by the court. Such certificate is sufficient proof of such order<sup>1</sup> (s. 164).

Offences for which a soldier may be taken out of the service.

A soldier of the regular forces is not liable to be taken out of the service by any order of any court of summary jurisdiction or compellable to appear in person<sup>2</sup> before such court, except on account of a charge or conviction of crime, which term means a felony, or misdemeanour, or other offence punishable with fine and imprisonment, or some greater punishment, and does not include the offence of a person absenting himself from his service, or neglecting to fulfil his contract, or otherwise misconducting himself respecting his contract (s. 144 (1, 2, 3)). Any officer or soldier may be proceeded against by the ordinary course of law when accused or convicted of any offence except such an offence is declared not to be a crime for the purposes of s. 144, and if an officer “(a) neglects or refuses on application to deliver over to the civil magistrate any officer or soldier so accused or convicted as aforesaid, or (b) wilfully obstructs or neglects or refuses to assist constables in apprehending any such officer or soldier; misdemeanour (s. 162 (2 & 3)).

Failure to deliver over to civil power soldiers or officers accused or convicted.

Power of justices as to furlough.

If any soldier on furlough is detained by sickness or other casualty rendering necessary any extension of such furlough in any place, and there is not any officer in the performance of military duty of the rank of captain or higher rank within convenient distance of the place, any justice of the peace who is satisfied of such necessity may grant an extension of furlough, not exceeding one month, and shall immediately by letter certify such extension and the cause thereof to the commanding officer of such soldier, if known, and if not, then to the Army Council (s. 173).

Provisions as to military manœuvres. 60 & 61 Vict. c. 43.

Power to close roads.

When military manœuvres are ordered pursuant to the Military Manœuvres Act, 1897, “two justices of the peace, not being military officers in command of the forces, may, if they think fit, on the application of a commissioned officer in command of the authorized forces<sup>3</sup> or of part thereof, by order, suspend for a time not exceeding forty-eight hours any right of way within the specified limits<sup>4</sup> and within their jurisdiction.” If such order relate to “any county, main or parish road,” the justices must make it when sitting in petty sessions in the petty sessions district or districts within which such road or part of a road is situate, and such order must be for only twelve hours, and be made only after seven days’ notice of such intended application has been published in at least one newspaper circulating generally in the district, and subject to such terms and conditions as may be required by the said justices for the protection of individuals or of the public or of public bodies. The officer in command of the authorized forces shall cause such public notice of the order as the justices may require to be given not less than twelve hours before the order comes into force, and shall give all reasonable facilities for traffic whilst the order is in force (Military Manœuvres Act, 1897, s. 3). If within the limits and during the period specified in an Order in Council, authorizing military manœuvres under this Act any person (a) wilfully and unlawfully obstructs or interferes with the execution of the manœuvres; or (b) without due authority enters or remains in any camp—Penalty, fine not exceeding Offences as to manœuvres.

£2, and he and any animal or vehicle under his charge may be removed by any constable, or by or under the order of any commissioned officer of the authorized forces (s. 7 (1)). If within such limits and period any person (a) without due authority moves any flag or other mark distinguishing for the purpose of the manœuvres any lands; or (b) maliciously cuts or damages any telegraph wire laid down by or for the use of the authorized forces—Penalty, fine not exceeding £5 (s. 7 (2)).

When a person holds a canteen under the authority of a Secretary of State or the Admiralty, it shall be lawful for any two justices within their respective jurisdiction to grant, transfer, or renew any licence for the time being required to enable such person to obtain or hold any excise licence for the sale of any intoxicating liquor, without regard to the time of year, and without regard to the requirements as to notices, certificates, or otherwise, of any Acts for the time being in force affecting such licences, and excise licences may be granted to such persons accordingly (Army Act, 1881, s. 174). No offence is committed by selling liquor to a civilian at a canteen (Dickeson v. Mayes, (1910) 1 K.B. 452). The Licensing Act, 1872, does not apply to a sale at a canteen (see s. 72), but it has been said that the provisions in the English Licensing Act, 1874, as to closing hours are applicable (Gallagher v. Rudd, (1898), 1 Q.B. 114, at p. 119).

As to what is an assault, see INDICTABLE OFFENCES, "ASSAULT." Definition.

Any assault, including a common assault, may be proceeded against by indictment; and the various statutory provisions, presently to be noticed, enabling justices, if they think fit, to deal with certain prosecutions for assault summarily, do not take away the right to proceed by indictment, which is, therefore, untouched by the decisions in R. v. Wicklow JJ., (1892) 30 L.R.I. 633, and kindred cases, as to the right of third parties to prosecute. Such third parties, though not purporting to prosecute on behalf of the party aggrieved, may proceed by indictment (R. v. Gaunt, (1895), 18 Cox 210; see also observations of Phillimore, J., in Pickering v. Willoughby, (1907) 2 K.B. 296, at p. 300).

"Where any person shall unlawfully assault or beat any other person, two justices of the peace,<sup>1</sup> upon complaint by or on behalf of the party aggrieved, may hear and determine such offence"—Penalty, not exceeding, together with costs, if ordered, £5, or two months' imprisonment, with or without hard labour (Offences against the Person Act, 1861, s. 42).

Where a person who has been assaulted prefers an information calling upon the defendant to show cause why he should not be Common assault.

Effect of statutes giving summary jurisdiction.
24 & 25 Vict. c. 100. s. 42.

<sup>1</sup> Under the Summary Jurisdiction (Ir.) Act, 1862, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 50, s. 2, the offence under the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, may be prosecuted before one or more justices in petty sessions, and before two justices out of sessions, if the offender shall be unable to procure bail for his appearance at petty sessions, as to which see R. (Connell) v. Dublin JJ., (1861) 13 I.C.L.R. 375, noted, p. 45.

Common

bound over to the peace, but does not ask for a conviction for assault, wishing to preserve his civil remedy,<sup>1</sup> the justices have no jurisdiction to fine for assault (R. v. Deny, (1851) 20 L.J.M.C. 189); but where the summons is for assault, and also calls on the defendant to show cause why he should not be bound over, the justices can convict of assault (Kennington v. Daniel, (1888) 22 L.R.I. 667). Even if the summons for assault be dismissed, the justices may order the defendant to enter into recognizances to keep the peace (Ex parte Davis, (1871) 24 L.T. 547.)

Where an assault is committed upon a person who, through age and infirmity, is in such a feeble state of health, and so under the control of the person who commits the assault as to be incapable of instituting proceedings, an information under section 42 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, may be laid by a person other than the person assaulted, although he has not been authorized by such person to do so (Pickering v. Willoughby, (1907) 2 K.B. 296). "I think we ought to hold that one who from motives of protection makes a complaint for an assault upon such a person makes that complaint on behalf of the person aggrieved" (ib., per Lord Alverstone, C.J.).

c. 50, s. 9.

"It shall be lawful for the justices at petty sessions, if they shall so think fit, to proceed against any person or persons charged with being guilty of an assault, pursuant to the provisions of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, s. 42, notwithstanding that the party aggrieved may decline or refuse to prefer a complaint" (Summary Jurisdiction (Ireland) Act, 1862, s. 9).

The fact that the party aggrieved has declined to prefer the complaint must be proved, and averred in a conviction under this section (see R. v. Wicklow JJ., (1892) 30 L.R.I. 633; Nicholson v. Booth, (1888) 16 Cox 373; R. (Deane) v. Galway JJ., (1901) 35 I.L.T.R. 156; R. (Prendergast) v. Waterford JJ., (1904) 4 N.I.J.R. 196; R. (Johnson) v. Armagh JJ., (1909) 43 I.L.T.R. 112).

Aggravated assault on females and males under fourteen.

24 & 25 Vict.
c. 100, s. 43.

"When any person shall be charged before two justices of the peace with an assault or battery upon any male child<sup>2</sup> whose age shall not in the opinion of such justices exceed fourteen years, or upon any female, either upon the complaint of the party aggrieved or otherwise, the said justices, if the assault or battery is of such an aggravated nature that it cannot in their opinion be sufficiently punished under the provisions hereinbefore contained as to common assaults and batteries, may proceed to hear and determine the same in a summary way, and, if the same be proved, may convict the person accused"—Penalty, not exceeding (together with costs) £20, or six months' imprisonment, with or without hard labour (Offences against the Person Act, 1861, s. 43). Offenders may also be bound over to keep the peace and be of good behaviour, for any period not exceeding six months from the expiration of the sentence (ib.).

There is jurisdiction under this section to hear a case, the facts of which show that the assault has occasioned bodily harm (R. (McGrath) v. Clare JJ., (1905) 2 I.R. 510), but not, it would seem, where the summons charges an assault "occasioning actual bodily harm," as that is a separate offence punishable on indictment (per Andrews, J., in Ex parte Clarke, (1890) 26 L.R.I. 1, at p. 10). If a defendant be charged with simple assault, he may be convicted of an aggravated assault under this section (Holden v. King, (1876) 35 L.T. 479), which merely gives power to inflict increased punishment if the assault be one of an aggravated character (Crocker v. Raymond, (1886) 3 T.L.R. 181). An aggravated assault means one aggravated in respect of violence, and does not include an indecent assault (R. v. Baker, (1883) 48 J.P. 666).

"In case the justices shall find the assault or battery complained of to have been accompanied by any attempt to commit felony,<sup>1</sup> or shall be of opinion that the same is, from any other circumstance, a fit subject for a prosecution by indictment, they shall abstain from any adjudication thereupon, and shall deal with the case in all respects in the same manner as if they had no authority finally to hear and determine the same: Provided also that nothing herein contained shall authorize any justice to hear and determine any case of assault or battery in which any question shall arise as to the title to any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any interest therein or accruing therefrom, or as to any bankruptcy or insolvency, or any execution under the process of any court of justice" (Offences against the Person Act, 1861, s. 46). As to when the jurisdiction is ousted by a question of title, see p. 206.

Ouster of jurisdiction.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 46.

"Whosoever shall . . . assault, resist, or wilfully obstruct any peace officer in the due execution of his duty, or any person acting in aid of such officer, or shall assault any person with intent to resist or prevent the lawful apprehension or detainer of himself or of any other person for any offence"—Misdemeanour, imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour—(Offences against the Person Act, 1861, s. 38).

Assault on peace officers.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 38.

Apparently the offence is committed, even though the peace officer is in plain clothes while on duty, and the defendant does not know he is a peace officer (R. v. Forbes, (1865) 10 Cox, 362; R. v. Maxwell & Clanchy, (1909) 73 J.P. 176; cf. Sherras v. De Rutzen, (1895) 1 Q.B. 918, noted under "INTOXICATING LIQUORS").

Such assaults are also punishable (in the same manner as assaults under s. 42 of the Offences against the Person Act, supra) before two justices, if they shall consider the offence so trivial as not to require to be dealt with by a superior tribunal (Summary Jurisdiction (Ireland) Act, 1862, s. 10).

25 & 26 Vict. c. 50, s. 10.

The summary jurisdiction conferred by the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 50, s. 10, only applies to the offences of assault mentioned in the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 38, and therefore justices have no jurisdiction to deal summarily with a charge of resisting or wilfully obstructing a peace officer in the discharge of his duty (R. v. Kilkenny JJ., (1871) I.R. 5 C.L. 394).

"Where any person is convicted of an assault on any constable when in the execution of his duty, such person shall be guilty of an offence against this Act"—Penalty, not exceeding £20, and in default imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding six months, or imprisonment not exceeding six months, or if such person has been convicted of a similar assault, within two years, not exceeding nine months, with or without hard labour (Prevention of Crime Act, 1871, s. 12).

34 & 35 Vict. c. 112, s. 12.

The offence is to be prosecuted in the Dublin metropolitan police district before a divisional justice, and elsewhere in Ireland before a stipendiary magistrate sitting alone or with others, or any two or more justices of the peace in petty sessions (ib., s. 17). A previous conviction may be proved in any legal proceeding by producing a record or extract of such conviction, and by giving proof of identity of the person in the record with the person against whom the conviction is sought to be proved (ib., s. 18).

Whoever shall beat or use any violence or threat of violence to any person with intent to deter or hinder him from buying, selling, or otherwise disposing of, or to compel him to buy, sell, or otherwise dispose of, any wheat or other grain, flour, meal, malt, or potatoes in any market or other place, or shall beat or use any such violence or threat to any person having the care or charge of any wheat or other grain, etc., whilst on the way to or from any city, market town, or other place, with intent to stop the conveyance of the same—Penalty, imprisonment with hard labour not exceeding three months (Offences against the Person Act, 1861, s. 39).

24 & 25 Vict.

Assault by “Whosoever shall unlawfully and with force hinder or prevent any seaman, keelman, or caster from working at or exercising his lawful trade, business, or occupation, or shall beat or use any violence to any such person with intent to hinder or prevent him from working at or exercising the same”—Penalty, imprisonment not exceeding three months (Offences against the Person Act, 1861, s. 40).

Effect of dismissal or conviction.

Setting on dog to attack or worry any person, horse, or other animal—Penalty, not exceeding 10s. (Summary Jurisdiction (Ir.) Act, 1851, s. 10 (10)).

24 & 25 Vict.
c. 100, s. 44.

“If the justices upon the hearing of any such case of assault or battery upon the merits, where the complaint was preferred by or on behalf of the party aggrieved, under either of the last two preceding sections,<sup>1</sup> shall deem the offence not to be proved, or shall find the assault or battery to have been justified, or so trifling as not to merit any punishment, and shall accordingly dismiss the complaint; they shall forthwith make out a certificate under their hands stating the fact of such dismissal, and shall deliver such certificate to the party against whom the complaint was preferred” (Offences against the Person Act, 1861, s. 44).

“If any person, against whom any such complaint as in either of the last three preceding sections<sup>2</sup> mentioned shall have been preferred by or on behalf of the party aggrieved, shall have obtained such certificate, or, having been convicted, shall have paid the whole amount adjudged to be paid, or shall have suffered the imprisonment or imprisonment with hard labour awarded, in every such case, he shall be released from all further or other proceedings, civil or criminal, for the same cause” (s. 45).

The justices are bound to grant this certificate if their decision warrants same (Hancock v. Somes, (1859) 1 El. & El. 795). The word “forthwith” means “forthwith upon application,” so that the certificate need not be drawn up until applied for (Ostar v. Hetherington, (1859) 1 El. & El. 802). Where a prosecutor gave notice to the defendant that he would not attend or offer evidence, but the person charged attended and obtained from the magistrate a certificate of dismissal under the section, it was held (1) that there had been no “hearing upon the merits,”<sup>3</sup> and (2) that, in subsequent civil proceedings, the county court judge had jurisdiction to inquire as to the circumstances under which the magistrate’s certificate had been obtained (Reed v. Nutt, (1890) 24 Q.B.D. 669). The order “dismissed” simply is a bad order and a mere nullity (see p. 100); and therefore is not a bar to subsequent civil proceedings (Donnelly v. Ingram, Cir. C. : Palles, C.B., (1897) 31 I.L.T.R. 139). The conviction for assault of a servant does not operate to release the master from civil liability for the assault (Dyer v. Munday, (1895) 1 Q.B. 742). An order merely binding to the peace is no bar to an action for assault (Hartley v. Hindmarsh, (1866) L.R. 1 C.P. 553; cf. R. v. Miles, (1890) 24 Q.B.D. 423).

Procedure.

25 & 26 Vict.
c. 50.

Offences under the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, are punishable before a single justice in petty sessions, or before two justices out of petty sessions, when the offender shall be unable to procure bail for his appearance at petty sessions, or before a Dublin divisional justice (Summary Jurisdiction Amendment Act, 1862, s. 2); the proceedings as to compelling appearance are regulated by the Petty Sessions Act, 1857, (ib., s. 3).

Persons in authority, such as parents, schoolmasters, etc., have a right to inflict moderate chastisement upon those in their charge (Re Basingstoke School, (1877) 41 J.P. 118). The ordinary authority to punish school children extends not to the head teacher only, but to the responsible teachers who have charge of classes; and it is a good defence if a teacher is able to prove that the punishment which he administered was moderate, that it was not dictated by any bad motive, and was such as is usual in the school, and such as the parent of the child might expect that the child would receive if he did wrong (Mansell v. Griffin, (1908) 1 K.B. 160).

Right of chastisement by person in authority.

The right to inflict reasonable personal chastisement is not limited to punishment for offences committed in school, but may extend to offences committed by the pupil on the way to or from school (Cleary v. Booth, (1893) 1 Q.B. 465). A master is entitled to reasonably chastise his apprentice for misconduct (Walter v. Everard, (1891) 2 Q.B. 369, at p. 376, per Fry, L.J.). It is probable that a master has no right of chastising a hired servant of full age for dereliction of duty. (See Smith's "Master and Servant," 6th ed., p. 96, but the matter is not free from doubt (9 Halsbury, p. 608)). It has been held that the master of a ship has such a right, for the preservation of order (Watson v. Christie, (1800) 2 B. & P. 224; Lamb v. Burnett, (1831) 1 Cr. & J. 291). The master can also restrain and arrest a passenger for the same purpose (Noden v. Johnson, (1850) 16 Q.B. 218).

With regard to assaults on fishermen and water bailiffs see title, FISHERIES, post. There are also special provisions as to assaults on certain officers, as Public Health Officers, Food and Drugs Inspectors, &c., as to which see the appropriate titles.

It has been held that the justices are not bound to allow a complainant to withdraw his summons for assault, and the jurisdiction of the justices attaches once the information is laid (Ex parte Bryant, (1863) 27 J.P. 277).

AUCTIONEERS.

	PAGE		PAGE
Carrying on business without a licence,	a 383	Placard to be exhibited at auction,	384
		Sale of excisable commodities,	384

Every person carrying on the business of an auctioneer, or acting in that capacity at any sale or roup, or selling or offering for sale any goods, lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any interest therein at any sale or roup where the sale is by competition, must take out an auctioneer's licence, to be renewed annually on every 5th July, ten days at least before its expiration. Acting as aforesaid without a licence — Penalty, £100 (Auctioneers Act, 1845, s. 4).

Carrying on business of auctioneer without a licence.

8 & 9 Vict. c. 15.

A licence is not required to sell by auction goods taken under a distress for non-payment of rent to less amount than £20 (s. 5). Where a member of the constabulary or of the metropolitan police force is empowered to distrain any goods under a warrant, such goods may be sold by him without a licence (14 & 15 Vict. c. 93, s. 32 (4)). The undersheriff or any of his bailiffs are empowered to sell without a licence goods taken in execution by him or by the sheriff or any bailiff (Civil Bill Courts (Ireland) Act, 1864, 27 & 28 Vict. c. 99, s. 30); and this extends to a special bailiff nominated at the risk of the party (Civil Bill Courts (Ireland) Act, 1871, 34 & 35 Vict. c. 99, s. 5). A licence is not necessary to sell fish by auction by the sea-shore where such fish shall have been first landed (33 & 34 Vict. c. 32, s. 5).

Placard to be exhibited at auction.

Before beginning auction, the auctioneer must have suspended in a conspicuous position a ticket or board containing his Christian and surname, and residence, printed or written in large legible characters, and such ticket or board must remain throughout the auction—Penalty, on breach, £20 (s. 7).

The auctioneer at the time of the sale must produce on demand by officer of excise, or customs, or of stamps and taxes, his licence, or else deposit £10—Penalty, not exceeding one month's imprisonment (s. 8). If the £10 be deposited, and licence be shown to the proper officer within one week of the date of the sale, the £10 shall be returned (ib.).

Sale of excisable commodities:

An auctioneer is not authorized by his licence to sell any commodities for the dealing in or selling of which an excise licence is required, except upon premises of which the owner of such commodities is duly licensed for the sale of such commodities; but an auctioneer may sell by auction, by sample, in any town or place any such commodities, if the owner be duly licensed for the sale of such commodities in the same town or place; and an auctioneer may be authorized by Commissioners of Inland Revenue to sell excisable liquors belonging to private persons; breach of section punishable as for selling such commodities without the excise licence required by law (Revenue (No. 2) Act, 1864, s. 14).

27 & 28 Vict.
c. 56 s. 14.

It should be noted that all the above penalties are excise penalties, and recoverable as such. See EXCISE OFFENCES, p. 78.

Where bathing illegal, . . .	384	Bye-law by Town Commissioners, . . .	385
Bathing in waterworks, . . .	384	Kingstown, . . . . .	385

When bathing illegal.

At common law the public have no rights of bathing in the sea, or of crossing the seashore on foot, or with bathing-machines (Blundell v. Catterall, (1821) 5 B. and Ald. 268), whether the foreshore is the property of the Crown or of a private owner (Brinckman v. Matley, (1904) 2 Ch. 313; see also judgment of Cozens Hardy, J., in Llandudno Urban Council v. Woods, (1899) 2 Ch., at p. 709). Such right, however, may be gained by prescription or custom (Blundell v. Catterall, supra), but must be subject to the restrictions imposed by decency. It is a misdemeanour to undress and bathe from a beach which is visible from houses situate close by (R. v. Crunden, (1809) 2 Camp. 89), or to bathe so close to a public footway as to be distinctly seen by passers-by (R. v. Reed, (1871) 12 Cox 1).

Bathing in Waterworks,

"Every person who shall bathe in any stream, reservoir, aqueduct, or other waterworks belonging to the undertakers, or wash, throw or cause to enter therein any dog or other animal"—Penalty, not exceeding £5 (Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, s. 61).

10 & 11 Vict.
c. 17.

"Where any part of the seashore or strand of any river used as a public bathing-place is within the town,<sup>1</sup> the commissioners may make bye-laws for the following purposes, that is to say:—for fixing the stands of bathing-machines on the seashore or strand, and the limits within which persons of each sex shall be set down for bathing, and within which persons shall bathe; for regulating the occupation of such stands of bathing-machines, and apportioning the same temporarily among the owners of such machines for the time; for preventing any indecent exposure of the persons of the bathers; for regulating the manner in which, and the times at which, the bathing-machines shall be used, and the charges to be made for the same; for ensuring that the bathing-machines shall be kept in a proper state of repair; for regulating the distance at which boats and vessels let to hire for the purpose of sailing or rowing for pleasure shall be kept from persons bathing within such prescribed limits" (Towns Improvement Act, 1854, s. 77).—Penalties, not exceeding 40s., may be imposed for breach of a bye-law (Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, 10 & 11 Vict. c. 34, s. 201, incorporated with the Act of 1854 by section 57 of that Act). These powers do not enable the Commissioners to authorize persons to place bathing-machines on part of the foreshore which is private property (Mace v. Philcox, (1864) 15 C.B.N.S. 600); see also Public Health Act, 1907, 7 Ed. 7, c. 53, s. 92, noted under PUBLIC HEALTH.

BEGGING.

"Every person wandering abroad and begging, or placing himself in any public place, street, highway, court, or passage to beg or gather alms, or causing or procuring or encouraging any child or children so to do, and every person who, having been resident in any union in Ireland, shall go from such union to some other union, or from one electoral or relief district to another electoral or relief district in Ireland, for the purpose of obtaining relief in such last-mentioned union or district"—Penalty, imprisonment with hard labour not exceeding one calendar month (Vagrancy (Ir.) Act, 1847, s. 3).

BOILER EXPLOSION.

45 & 46 Vict.
c. 22.

"On the occurrence of an explosion from any boiler to which this Act applies, notice thereof shall, within twenty-four hours thereafter, be sent to the Board of Trade by the owner or user, or by the person acting on behalf of the owner or user"—Penalty, not exceeding £20 (Boiler Explosions Act, 1882, s. 5), recoverable in Dublin according to the Dublin Police Acts, elsewhere, the Petty Sessions Act (s. 8).

53 & 54 Vict.
c. 35.

"Boiler" means any closed vessel used for generating steam or for heating water or for heating other liquids, or into which steam is admitted for heating, steaming, boiling, or other similar purposes (s. 3); but does not include a boiler used exclusively for domestic purposes or a boiler used in the service of His Majesty (s. 4); the Act applies to an explosion on board a British ship; and where the explosion occurs at sea, the notice is to be sent by the owner or master (Boiler Explosions Act, 1890).

A boiler used to heat offices or business premises upon which the owner does not reside, and also to supply warm water for the purpose of cleaning the offices and for the household purposes of a resident caretaker, is within the exemption (Smith v. Müller, (1894) 1 Q.B. 192).

BOUNDARY SURVEY.

17 & 18 Vict.
c. 17.

"If any person shall fill up any trench, or take away, remove, or displace or alter the situation of any boundary stone, post, or mark which shall be set up and placed for the purposes of this Act, or shall wilfully deface, mutilate, break, or destroy any such boundary stone, post, or mark"—Penalty, not exceeding £10, or less than £2 (Boundary Survey (Ireland) Act, 1854, s. 7), recoverable under the provisions of the Petty Sessions Act, 1851 (s. 8).

BREAD, SALE OF.

Adulteration, . . . .	386	Weighing implements to be provided, . . . .	388
Sale by weight, . . . .	387	Sale of bread on Sunday, . . . .	388

Adulteration.

1 & 2 Vict.
c. 28.

Bakers may sell bread made from wheat, barley, rye, oats, buckwheat, Indian corn, peas, beans, rice, or other grain, or of potatoes, or any of them: such ingredients being mixed with any common salt, pure water, eggs, milk, barm, leaven, potato, or other yeast, butter, seeds, or sugar in such proportions as they shall think fit, and with no other ingredient or matter whatsoever (Bread (Ir.) Act, 1838, s. 2).

No baker or other person who shall make bread for sale in Ireland, nor any journeyman or other servant of any such baker or other person, shall, at any time or times, in the making of bread for sale in Ireland use any mixture or ingredient other than and except as herein-before mentioned—Penalty, not exceeding £5 nor less than 50s.; name and address of offender may be ordered to be published in a newspaper printed or published in or near the place where offence committed (s. 7.)

In Core v. James, (1871) L.R. 7 Q.B. 185,<sup>1</sup> the respondent purchased a loaf in the appellant's shop which was proved to contain a proportion of alum. The appellant's baker proved that the bread had been made from flour purchased by appellant, and that no alum had been put into it by the appellant or his workman. The justices did not find that the appellant knew that alum was used in the bread—Held, that the user mentioned in the section was “a guilty user, a use by a baker who knows that he is using such an ingredient as is forbidden by the Act,” and that the conviction should be quashed.

Mixing at any time with any corn, meal, or flour which shall be ground, cleaned, bolted, or manufactured in Ireland, any ingredient or mixture whatsoever not being the real and genuine produce of the corn or grain which shall be so ground, or knowingly selling, or offering, or exposing for sale, either separately or mixed, any corn, meal, or flour not equal to sample, or using any fraud to increase the weight of such corn, meal, or flour; for every such offence, penalty not exceeding £10, or less than 40s. and forfeiture of all such corn, meal, or flour (s. 8). See also 1 & 2 Vict. c. 28. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 92, s. 7, APPENDIX OF STATUTES.

Bread for sale, made of peas or beans or potatoes, or of any sort of corn or grain other than wheat, must be marked with a large Roman M.—Penalty for not so marking, for every pound of bread, and so in proportion for any less quantity, a sum not exceeding 10s. Provided that bread made from the meal or flour of wheat only, and in which potato yeast is employed, need not be so marked (Bread (Ir.) Act, 1838, s. 9).

1 & 2 Vict.
c. 28.

Section 10 gives power to magistrates, on sworn information, and constables, under warrant, to enter and search premises belonging to any miller, mealman, flour factor, or baker, and examine ingredients used in making bread: any meal, &c., found to be adulterated, and any ingredient found intended to be used for adulteration can be carried away, and if found to be adulterated by a magistrate or justice, the latter shall order same to be disposed of as he thinks fit. Every miller, &c., on whose premises any ingredients for adulteration are found is liable to a penalty for every such offence not exceeding £10, nor less than 40s. for first offence; second offence, £5; subsequent offence, £10; and names and places of abode may be published (s. 11). Obstructing search or seizure, penalty not exceeding £10 (s. 12).

Compensation may be awarded to master where offence is occasioned by act, neglect, or default of servant or apprentice (s. 12).

Bakers may make bread of any weight or size (s. 3). All bread must be sold by weight: selling bread other than by weight, penalty not exceeding 40s. But French or fancy bread or rolls may be sold without previously having been weighed (s. 4). The sale must be by avoirdupois weight; penalty not exceeding 40s. nor less than 10s. (s. 5).

Sale by weight.

The bread itself must be weighed; it is not a compliance with the Act to weigh the dough and to allow a certain weight of the dough for each loaf (Slater v. Brewsters, Ltd., (1905) 2 I.R. 258; Hill v. Browning, (1870) L.R. 5 Q.B. 453; Jones v. Huxtable, (1867) L.R. 2 Q.B. 460). To sell without weighing is an offence, even if the purchaser does not ask for a loaf of a specific weight (London C. C. v. Read, (1900) 1 Q.B. 288). The weighing need not be done at the moment of sale, but must be done with reference to the sale. Where bread was weighed twelve hours before sale and in the interim had lost 1½ oz., thereby bringing it under weight, it was held the seller should be convicted (Mattinson v. Bindley, (1908) 2 K.B. 534). The respondent, on being asked by a purchaser for a half quartern loaf, served him with a loaf and two rolls, which he placed in the scales in the purchaser's presence. The bread did not weigh down the 2-lb. weight placed in the opposite pan of the scales, and nothing concerning the weight was ascertained at the sale beyond the fact that the bread did not weigh 2 lb. Held, that there was no sale by weight within the statute (Cox v. Bleines, (1902) 1 K.B. 670). The respondent weighed all his loaves against weights amounting to  $1\frac{3}{4}$  lb., and those which were over that weight he passed for sale, but did not ascertain the precise weight of any particular loaf, and sold his loaves as weighing  $1\frac{3}{4}$  lb. Held, that the respondent was not guilty of an offence (Bridge v. Passman, (1903) 47 S. J 420). The respondent sold a loaf, of the size and appearance of a 2-lb. loaf, to a purchaser, for 3d. When weighed the loaf was found to be half an ounce short of 2 lb. in weight. It was the practice of the respondent to weigh loaves after baking them, three at a time, and it was proved that the loaf in question had been weighed that morning with two others, and that the three together had weighed 6 lb. Held, that the respondent had sold bread otherwise than by weight (Welch v. Cutler, (1905) 20 Cox, 809).

If a customer asks for bread by weight, the baker is bound to sell by weight whether the bread be fancy bread or not (R. v. Kennett, (1869) L.R. 4 Q. B. 565). In order that bread sold shall come under the exemption of "fancy" bread, it must be bread which to the eye is distinctly different from and not liable to be confounded with ordinary household bread (Aerated Bread Co. v. Gregg, (1873) L. R. 8 Q. B. 355, cf. R. v. Wood, (1869) L. R. 4 Q. B. 559). "In order to make it fancy bread, the bread in question must be something which to the eye is so distinct from ordinary household bread, that it is not liable to be confounded with it by those who did not know the intricacies of the trade" (per Wills, J., in V. V. Bread Co. v. Stubbs, (1896) 74 L. T. 704). Thus, bread made like ordinary half quartern loaves, but of superior yeast, is not "fancy" bread, and must be sold by weight (ib.). But bread may be "fancy" bread, even though of the same quality as ordinary household bread, if it is not made similar to household bread in size, shape, and appearance, but of a fancy shape (Bailey v. Barsby, (1909) 2 K. B. 610).

Weighing implements to be provided.

Every seller of bread must have in a conspicuous part of his shop beams, scales, and weights to weigh bread if a customer so desires—Penalty for not having such beams and scales and proper weights, or having or using any incorrect or false beam or scales or balance or any false weight not being the weight it purports to be, or refusing to weigh bread when requested by a purchaser, not exceeding £5 (Bread (Ir.) Act, 1838, s. 6).

Sale of bread on Sunday.

No person exercising the trade of a baker shall make or bake any bread, rolls, or cake, of any sort, on the Lord's Day, or shall on any other part of the said day than between the hours of nine a.m. and one p.m., sell or expose for sale, or permit or suffer to be sold, delivered, or exposed for sale, any bread, rolls, or cake, or bake or deliver any meat, pudding, pie, tart, or victuals, or in any other manner exercise the trade of a baker, save so far as is necessary in setting and superintending the sponge to prepare the bread or dough for the following day: Provided, however, that a baker may deliver to customers on such day baked dishes, meat, or puddings (but not bread) up to 1.30 p.m.—Penalty, on conviction within ten days of offence under the section:<sup>1</sup> first offence 10s., second offence 20s., subsequent offence 40s., and costs<sup>2</sup> (Bread (Ir.) Act, 1838, s. 13). No person concerned in the business of miller, mealman, flour-factor, or baker, shall be capable of acting or be allowed to act as a magistrate or justice under this Act, or in putting in execution any of the powers of the Act—Penalty, £100 and costs recoverable by action or information (s. 14). No person shall resist or make forcible opposition to persons employed in due execution of the Act—Penalty, not exceeding £5 (s. 15).

BRIBERY AND CORRUPTION.

As to Bribery, see CATALOGUE OF INDICTABLE OFFENCES.

"(1) If any agent corruptly accepts or obtains, or agrees to accept or attempts to obtain, from any person, for himself or for any other person, any gift or consideration as an inducement or reward for doing or forbearing to do, or for having after the passing of this Act done or forborne to do, any act in relation to his principal's affairs or business, or for showing or forbearing to show favour or disfavour to any person in relation to his principal's affairs or business; or

If any person corruptly gives or agrees to give or offers any gift or consideration to any agent as an inducement or reward for doing or forbearing to do, or for having after the passing of this Act done or forborne to do, any act in relation to his principal's affairs or business, or for showing or forbearing to show favour or disfavour to any person in relation to his principal's affairs or business; or

If any person knowingly gives to any agent, or if any agent knowingly uses with intent to deceive his principal, any receipt, account, or other document in respect of which the principal is interested, and which contains any statement which is false or erroneous or defective in any material particular, and which to his knowledge is intended to mislead the principal, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and shall be liable on conviction on indictment to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a term not exceeding two years, or to a fine not exceeding £500, or to both such imprisonment and such fine, or on summary conviction to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a term not exceeding four months, or to a fine not exceeding £50, or to both such imprisonment and such fine. (2) For the purposes of this Act the expression "consideration" includes valuable consideration of any kind; the expression "agent" includes any person employed by or acting for another;<sup>1</sup> and the expression "principal" includes an employer. (3) A person serving under the Crown or under any corporation or any municipal, borough, county, or district council, or any board of guardians, is an agent within the meaning of this Act" (Prevention of Corruption Act, 1906, s. 1).

The offence is not triable at quarter sessions (s. 2 (5)). There is an appeal in every case by a party aggrieved<sup>2</sup> (s. 2 (6)).

BRICKS.

By the 11 Geo. 3, c. 6 (Ir.),<sup>3</sup> the making or burning of bricks within two measured miles from the public lamps of the city of Dublin is forbidden on pain of forfeiting the bricks and ten shillings for every one thousand bricks made or burned. Summary proceedings against brothel-keeper, &c.

"Any person who (1) keeps, or manages, or acts, or assists in the management of a brothel; or (2) being the tenant, lessee, or occupier of any premises knowingly permits such premises, or any part thereof, to be used as a brothel, or for the purposes of habitual prostitution; or (3) being the lessor or landlord of any premises, or the agent of such lessor or landlord, lets the same or any part thereof, with the knowledge that such premises, or some part thereof, are, or is, to be used as a brothel, or is wilfully a party to the continued use of such premises, or any part thereof, as a brothel, shall, on summary conviction in manner provided by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, be liable—(1) to a penalty not exceeding £20, or in the discretion of the Court to imprisonment for any term not exceeding three months with or without hard labour; and (2) on a second or subsequent conviction, to a penalty not exceeding £40, or in the discretion of the Court to imprisonment for any term not exceeding four months with or without hard labour; and, in case of a third or subsequent conviction, such person may, in addition to such penalty or imprisonment as last aforesaid, be required by the Court to enter into a recognizance, with or without sureties as to the Court seems meet, to be of good behaviour for any period not exceeding twelve months, and in default of entering into such recognizance, with or without sureties (as the case may be), such person may be imprisoned for any period not exceeding three months in addition to any such term of imprisonment as aforesaid."—(Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, s. 13).

48 & 49 Vict.
c. 69, s. 13.

A brothel is a place resorted to by persons of both sexes for the purpose of prostitution (per Wills, J., Singleton v. Ellison, (1895) 1 Q.B., at p. 608). Where a woman occupied a house frequented by men for the purpose of committing fornication with her, but no other woman lived in the house, or frequented it: Held, that she had not committed the offence of keeping a brothel (ib.). A block of flats inhabited by different women in the habit of bringing men there for immoral purposes may be a brothel (Durose v. Wilson, (1907) 21 Cox. 421). To convict a person of "keeping" a brothel, there must be evidence of something like habitual keeping; an isolated instance of permitting prostitution would not support a charge under the statute. The circumstances attending the permitting of prostitution on one occasion may afford evidence that the premises are used as a brothel (R. v. Holland J.J., (1882) 46 J.P. 312; cf. Martin v. Benjamin, (1907) 1 K.B. 64). The porter who looked after the block of flats in Durose v. Wilson (supra) was held to have been rightly convicted of having been wilfully a party to such user.

Evidence.

The defendant and the husband or wife of the defendant are competent but not compellable witnesses at every stage of the proceedings except an inquiry before a grand jury (s. 20).

Appeal.

Any person on being summarily convicted may appeal to a Court of general quarter sessions against such conviction (Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, s. 13).

Harbouring thieves, etc.

"Every person who occupies or keeps a brothel, and knowingly lodges or knowingly harbours thieves or reputed thieves, or knowingly permits or knowingly suffers them to meet or assemble therein, or knowingly allows the deposit of goods therein, having reasonable cause for believing them to be stolen, shall be guilty of an offence against this Act, and be liable to a penalty not exceeding £10, and in default of payment to be imprisoned for a period not exceeding four months, with or without hard labour, and the court before which he is brought may, if it think fit, in addition to or in lieu of any penalty, require him to enter into recognizances, with or without sureties, as in this Act described" (Prevention of Crime Act, 1871, s. 11). As to procedure, see PREVENTION OF CRIME.

As to permitting licensed premises to be used as a brothel, see INTOXICATING LIQUOR; as to offences regarding children and young persons, see CHILDREN ACT, 1908.

BUTTER.

The sale of butter is regulated in Ireland by the Butter Trade (Ireland) Acts, 1812, 1827, and 1829.

The Act of 1812 provides for the appointment of public weighmasters and tasters of butter in the city of Dublin and in every city<sup>1</sup> and town corporate in Ireland, and in every seaport or place of export from whence butter is commonly shipped for exportation from Ireland, and in every market town wherein butter is bought or sold or exposed for sale (s. 2). Any weighmaster or taster neglecting or refusing to attend at his weighhouse on the appointed days and hours shall forfeit £5,<sup>2</sup> recoverable before two justices of the peace or by civil bill (52 Geo. 3, c. 134, s. 12). Any person selling or exposing to sale any cask for packing butter within such city, town corporate, seaport, or place of export, not being of the weight required, liable to penalty of 10s.<sup>2</sup> for every cask (s. 14). Any person making up or packing any butter to be exposed for sale or for export not being of the requisite weight—Penalty, 10s.<sup>2</sup> for every 56 lb. of butter, and so in proportion for every less quantity (s. 14). Any person bringing any cask to a public weighhouse not bearing the name of the cooper who made the cask branded on same in a legible manner—Penalty, cask to be forfeited and fine 5s.<sup>2</sup> for every 56 lb. of butter in such cask (ib.). Weighmasters weighing and branding any cask not being of the requisite weight, or not branded with the name of the cooper, or marking or branding falsely any cask as containing more or less than the true weight, shall, on conviction, forfeit 5s.<sup>2</sup> for every cask not branded, or branded not being of the requisite weight, and for every cask branded falsely, 10s.<sup>2</sup> (s. 14). Weighmaster must weigh merchantable butter, and mark on each cask the gross weight in figures and not in numerical letters, under penalty of 5s.<sup>2</sup> for every cask (s. 15). Packing or mixing old butter with new, or mixing bay-salt instead of white in packing, or greater quantities of salt than what melts in working it up, entails forfeiture of such butter (s. 16). Persons shall not buy or sell casks of butter at any greater or less tare than sanctioned by the Act, or buy or sell by hand and not by weight—Penalty, 10s.<sup>2</sup> for every cask (s. 19). No weighmaster or person employed in a weighhouse can buy, sell, contract, or treat for any cask of butter—Penalty, forfeiture of butter or value thereof: but may purchase one cask not exceeding 84 lb. gross at a time for family use (s. 21). The Act forbids any person having in his possession any brand for branding casks other than with the name of the cooper who made such cask—Penalty, £5<sup>2</sup> (s. 22). Branding or marking a cask with any name other than that of the cooper who made such cask—Penalty, 10s.<sup>2</sup> for every cask (s. 22).

Provisions as to sale of butter, 10 Geo. 4, c. 61.

Casks found not to be of the requisite weight when brought to be weighed to be sawed in two (s. 23). Persons are not compellable to have empty casks branded, or to bring casks of butter to be weighed, &c., before they are exposed for sale or export (Act of 1829, s. 1).

The Act of 1812 does not apply to Cork (47 & 48 Vict. c. cxix). The office of butter-taster is but a function of the office of weighmaster (Kelly v. Molony, (1854) 4 I.C.L.R. 413). Evidence of acting in the office of weighmaster is evidence to go to a jury of title to that office, though the title is in issue and the appointment must be under seal (Dexter v. Hayes, (1860), 11 I.C.L.R. 106; 13 Ir.C.L.R. 22). "Place of export" means a place of shipment, and does not include an inland town from which butter is sent direct to a foreign market (Dexter v. Hayes, supra). An action lies for disturbance of a weighmaster in his office, and exemplary damages may be given (Dexter v. Cust, (1862) 7 Ir.J.N.S. 156).

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 61.

Altering, counterfeiting, or erasing marks or brands on casks of butter—Penalty, not exceeding £10, or less than £5 (Butter Trade (Ir.) Act, 1827, s. 3).

The Act of 1812 does not apply to Cork (47 & 48 Vict. c. cxix). As to Acts of 1827 and 1829, quære, see 47 & 48 Vict. c. cxix.

25 & 26 Vict. c. 76.

The Weights and Measures (Ireland) Amendment Act, 1862, enacts a penalty not exceeding £5 for counterfeiting brands, &c. (s. 14), and not exceeding 40s. for wilfully packing up or mixing, or causing to be packed up or mixed, with or in any butter contained in any firkin or cask, any salt, pickle or other substance, with intent to increase the weight of such butter, or for bringing or sending any such butter to any market for sale (s. 15).

CATTLE STRAYING OR TRESPASSING.

Cattle straying on public road.

Cattle<sup>1</sup> found at large in any street<sup>2</sup> of a town under the Towns Improvement Act, 1854,<sup>3</sup> without any person having the charge thereof, may be seized, impounded, and detained, by constable, officer of constabulary, or resident, until the owner pay the Town Commissioners a penalty not exceeding twenty shillings, besides the reasonable expense of impounding and keeping such cattle; and if penalty and expenses are not paid within three days, may be sold after three days' notice as prescribed by the section (Towns Improvement Act, 1854, s. 71).

17 & 18 Vict. c. 103, s. 71.

"Any person who shall in any public road or street of a town turn loose any horse or cattle . . . or who by negligence or ill usage in driving cattle shall in any public road or any street of a town cause any mischief to be done by such cattle"—Penalty, not exceeding 10s. (Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1851, s. 10 (1)). "Turn loose" means to allow cattle to be on the thoroughfare without any control at all, and does not apply to cattle turned out in the care of a boy (Sherborne v. Wells (1863), 3 B. & S. 784).

14 & 15 Vict. c. 92, s. 10 1.

"Any person who shall allow any swine or other beast to wander upon any public road, or about the streets or passages of any town, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding 22s.; and in case the owner shall not be known, it shall be lawful for any person by whom any such swine or other beast shall be found wandering upon any such road, street, or passage to impound the same, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained as to the impounding of distresses"<sup>1</sup> (Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1851, s. 10 (11)).

 Horses grazing on the side of a road, with a man in charge and control of them, were held not liable to be impounded as "wandering, straying, or lying" about the road (Morris v. Jeffries, (1866) L.R. 1 Q.B. 261; cf. Laurence v. King, (1868) L.R. 3 Q.B. 345).

As to trespassing on land, where the owner<sup>2</sup> of the cattle is known, the occupier or person finding the cattle should either deliver up the cattle to the owner or his servant, or show them in the act of trespassing and allow them to be taken away; and is then entitled to the rates of trespass mentioned in the section. But if the owner is not known, the animals may be impounded in the prescribed manner. Justices at petty sessions are empowered by the section to determine disputes as to rates of trespass (including the right to withhold the whole or part of such rates where the trespass was caused by any neglectful conduct on the part of the occupier of the land, or there were other justifying circumstances), to award the amount of actual damage done, and to order repair of fences. Justices may appoint arbitrators as to damages (Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1851, s. 20).

14 & 15 Vict.
c. 92, s. 10(11).

Trespass of cattle upon lands.

14 & 15 Vict.,
c. 9, s. 20.

Where a summons was brought alleging eight trespasses on several days, and the justice imposed fines in respect of each trespass and made up eight distinct orders, with 5s. costs in each, the orders were set aside on the ground that there should have been only one order, with costs not exceeding 20s., the limit allowed by section 22 of the Petty Sessions Act (R. (Daly) v. Cork J.J., (1898) 2 I.R. 695; see also R. v. Rawson, (1909) 2 K.B. 748).

Persons wrongfully impounding, or failing to give prescribed notice to poundkeeper, or poundkeeper wrongfully detaining animals, or to pay over amount received by him—Penalty, not exceeding £5 (Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1851, s. 20). See further, POUND.

CENSUS.

Under the Census (Ir.) Act, 1910, a census is directed to be taken in the year 1911, as therein directed, the census day to be Sunday, the second day of April in that year (s. 1). "(1) If any enumerator makes wilful default in the performance of any of his duties under this Act, he shall for each offence be liable on conviction under the Summary Jurisdiction (Ireland) Acts to a fine not exceeding £5. (2) If any person refuses to answer or wilfully gives a false answer to any question necessary for obtaining the information required to be obtained under this Act, he shall for each offence be liable on conviction under the Summary Jurisdiction (Ireland) Acts to a fine not exceeding £5: Provided that no person shall be subject to any such penalty for refusing to state his religious profession. (3) If any person employed in taking the census communicates without lawful authority any information acquired in the course of his employment, he shall be guilty of a breach of official trust within the meaning of the Official Secrets Act, 1889, and that Act shall apply accordingly" (s. 7).

<sup>2</sup> In the case of cattle sent for agistment, the late Mr. Molloy seems to have thought that the agister is the "owner" within the section (see Molloy, p. 605 n. (g)); but there is no authority for the statement, and the writer does not agree with it.

census taken under the Act, of any county, borough, town, district, or area to which it refers, and the Registrar-General shall be bound, if possible, to deliver such certificate to any person on payment of a fee of 1s. (s. 8).

CENSUS OF PRODUCTION.

6 Ed. 7, c. 49. The Census of Production Act, 1906, provides for the taking of a census of production in the year 1908, and subsequently at such intervals as may be determined by an order made by the Board of Trade as soon as practicable after the taking of the first census, and laid before Parliament. The following is a list of persons required to make returns under the Act:—(a) the occupier of every factory or workshop within the meaning of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901; (b) the owner, agent, or manager of every mine and quarry; (c) every builder, that is to say, a person who by way of trade or business undertakes the construction or alteration of a building, or any part thereof; (d) every person who by way of trade or business executes works of construction, alteration, or repair of railroads, tramroads, harbours, docks, canals, sewers, roads, embankments, reservoirs, or wells, or of laying or altering gas or water pipes, or telegraphic, telephonic, or electric lines or works, or any other prescribed works; (e) every person who by way of trade or business gives out work to be done elsewhere than on his own premises; (f) every person carrying on any other trade or business which may be prescribed.

Offences under the Act are—publishing individual returns; misdemeanour (s. 6): any person required to make a return, wilfully refusing or without lawful excuse neglecting to fill up the form, or wilfully making, &c., false return, or refusing to answer, or wilfully giving a false answer to any question necessary for obtaining information required to be furnished under the Act—Penalty, on summary conviction, not exceeding £10; in case of a continued offence, not exceeding £5 for each day (s. 12).

CHAFF-CUTTING MACHINES.

60 & 61 Vict.
c. 60. See Chaff-Cutting Machines (Accidents) Act, 1897, APPENDIX OF STATUTES.

CHARITABLE LOAN SOCIETIES.

6 & 7 Vict.
c. 91. Officer of charitable loan society, refusing to account either with the society, or with Loan Fund Board, and pay over moneys in his hands—Penalty, sum equal to amount retained, and further sum not exceeding £5 (Charitable Loan Societies (Ir.) Act, 1843, s. 23). Business of loan society not to be transacted at public house—Penalty, not exceeding £10 (s. 38). Accounts of loan societies to be kept in manner directed by Loan Fund Board, and all books, &c., to be produced for inspection to officer of Loan Fund Board on demand—Penalty, for breach, not exceeding £5 (s. 39). Clerk or servant of loan society not to receive present from borrower or surety—Penalty, not exceeding £20 (s. 43). Societies not certified under the Act, and their members and officers prohibited from acting as loan society—Penalty, not exceeding £20 (s. 53). Penalties may be recovered in a summary way (s. 55). Trustee or other unpaid officer, or member of society, not to be precluded from adjudicating (s. 58), except as regards proceedings under the Charitable Loan Societies (Ir.) Act, 1900 (Charitable Loan Societies (Ir.) Act, 1900,<sup>1</sup> s. 5).

CHEMISTS.

Chemists and druggists and registered druggists, . . . . .	395	Registers to be evidence, . . . . .	396

As distinguished from an apothecary, "a chemist is one who sells medicines which are asked for" (per Cresswell, J., Apothecaries' Company v. Lotinga, (1813) 2 Moo. & R. 500); "a chemist may prepare and vend, but not prescribe or administer, medicine" (per Best, C.J., Allison v. Haydon, (1828) 4 Bing. 621; see also Apothecaries' Company v. Greenough, (1841) 1 Q.B. 800).

Distinction between apothecary and chemist

An apothecary prescribes drugs, and prepares and sells drugs that he himself has prescribed,<sup>2</sup> and also prepares and sells drugs prescribed by others (Rose v. College of Physicians, (1703) 5 Bro. P.C. 553; Woodward v. Ball, (1834) 6 C. & P. 577).

By the statute 31 Geo. 3, c. 34 (Ir.), s. 22,<sup>3</sup> it is enacted that no person can carry on business as an apothecary<sup>4</sup> unless he be a licentiate of Apothecaries' Hall; but no penalty is provided for breaches of this enactment, and such breaches, if not such as to be punishable under the Medical Acts or under the Acts that are mentioned further on in this article, are punishable only on indictment as common law misdemeanours.

31 Geo. 3,
c. 34 (Ir.),
s. 22.

The Pharmacy Act (Ireland), 1875, created the Pharmaceutical Society of Ireland. By s. 22 of that Act and s. 10 of the Pharmacy Act (Ireland) Amendment Act, 1890, it is provided that, subject to the conditions contained in those Acts respectively, certain persons shall be registered as pharmaceutical chemists.

"Pharmaceutical chemists";
"chemists and druggists"; and
"registered druggists."
53 & 54 Vict.
c. 48.

Under s. 6 of the Act of 1890 certain persons are entitled to be registered as "chemists and druggists," and under ss. 7 and 8 of the same Act certain other persons are entitled to be registered as "registered druggists."

A regulation, made by the Pharmaceutical Society pursuant to s. 17 of the Act of 1875, requiring that a candidate for a qualifying examination should have been an apprentice or assistant for four years in the sole employ of a pharmaceutical chemist, or a firm of fully qualified pharmaceutical chemists, is a valid regulation (R. (Conyngham) v. Pharmaceutical Society of Ireland, (1899) 2 I.R. 132). A limited company carrying on business as pharmaceutical chemists, of which company all the members are, and under its articles of association are required to be, registered 38 & 39 Vict.

c. 57.

<sup>3</sup> So much of the section as prohibits the keeping of open shop within the meaning of the Act by any person other than a licentiate of Apothecaries' Hall is repealed by 38 & 39 Vict. c. 57, s. 30: a chemist, for instance, can keep open shop subject to the statutory restrictions.

pharmaceutical chemists, is "a firm of fully qualified pharmaceutical chemists" within the regulation (ib.); but it is otherwise where some only of the members of such a limited company are duly registered pharmaceutical chemists (R. (Clelland) v. Pharmaceutical Society of Ireland, (1896) 2 I.R. 368).

Wrongfully using title.

"It shall be unlawful for any person . . . to assume or use the title of pharmaceutical chemist, or pharmaceutist, or pharmacist, or dispensing chemist, or the title of chemist and druggist, in any part of Ireland, unless such person shall be registered as a pharmaceutical chemist or as a chemist and druggist respectively under this Act"; penalty, £5; nothing in the section to affect a licentiate of Apothecaries' Hall, or a person registered as a legally qualified medical practitioner before the passing of the Act, or who shall be registered as a legally qualified practitioner after the passing of the Act, and who, in order to obtain his diploma, has passed an examination in pharmacy (Pharmacy (Ir.) Act, 1875, s. 30).

Where a person not registered as a pharmaceutical chemist sold medicines in a shop over which was his name followed by the words "The Pharmacy," and the medicine bore the same words, it was held that he committed no offence against s. 12 of the Pharmacy (E.) Act, 1852, which provides that no person shall unless registered as a pharmaceutical chemist under that Act assume or use the title of pharmaceutical chemist or pharmaceutist . . . or assume, use, or exhibit any name, title, or sign implying that he is so registered or is a member of the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain (Pharmaceutical Society v. Mercer, (1910) 1 K.B. 74).

Other offences.

As to offences relating to sale of poisons, compounding prescriptions, &c., see POISONS, post.

Continuation of business in case of death.

Pursuant to s. 32 of the Act of 1875 the representatives of a deceased registered pharmaceutical chemist, who was actually in business at the time of his death, may have the business of the deceased carried on by an assistant who is himself registered as a pharmaceutical chemist under either the Act of 1875 or the Act of 1890. There is no analogous provision regarding the business of an apothecary, or the business of a "chemist and druggist" or of a "registered druggist."

Registers and extracts therefrom to be evidence.

Section 27 of the Act of 1875, and s. 5 of the Act of 1890,<sup>1</sup> read together, provides that the registrar of the Pharmaceutical Society is to keep a register of "pharmaceutical chemists," a register of "chemists and druggists," and a register of "registered druggists in Ireland," and copies thereof, purporting to be printed and published in compliance with those sections, or any extract therefrom, or from the original registers,<sup>2</sup> certified under the hand of the registrar and countersigned by the president or two members of the council of the society, shall be evidence that the person specified therein is legally registered; and the absence of any name from the printed copy above referred to shall be evidence, until the contrary is proved, that no person of that name is legally registered.

<sup>2</sup> Such printed copies of the registers as are provided for by the sections in question do not require to be certified and countersigned in like manner as extracts (Barrett v. Henry, (1905) 5 N.I.J.R. 8).

Assaults upon children, see ASSAULT, ante.

"Any person who shall cause any child under the age of fourteen years to take part in any public exhibition or performance whereby, in the opinion of a court of summary jurisdiction, the life or limbs of such child shall be endangered, and the parent or guardian, or any person having the custody of such child, who shall aid or abet the same, shall severally be guilty of an offence against this Act, and shall on summary conviction be liable for each offence to a penalty not exceeding £10" (Children's Dangerous Performances Act, 1879, s. 3).

If an accident is caused to a child in the course of a public performance which in its nature is dangerous to life or limb, the employer may be indicted for assault, and the Court may on conviction award compensation not exceeding £20 (ib.). Where the child is apparently of the age alleged by the informant, the burthen is on the defendant of proving the contrary (s. 4). The provisions of the Act now apply to males under sixteen and females under eighteen (Dangerous Performances Act, 1897, s. 1). Except where an accident causing actual bodily harm occurs to any child or young person, no prosecution shall be instituted without the consent in writing of the chief officer of police of the area in which the offence is committed, i.e., in Dublin, the police commissioners, elsewhere, a district inspector of the R. I. C. (ib., s. 2).

The provisions of ss. 19-21 (arrest of offender, and provision for safety for children), 24 (warrant to search), 26, 32 (power as to habitual drunkards), of the Children Act, 1908, apply to offences against the Dangerous Performances Acts, 1879 and 1897. See these sections, APPENDIX OF STATUTES.

ment.
Bye-laws
generally.

"Any local authority<sup>1</sup> may make bye-laws<sup>2</sup>—(i) prescribing for all children,<sup>3</sup> or for boys and girls separately, and with respect to all occupations or to any specified occupation (a) the age below which employment<sup>4</sup> is illegal; and (b) the hours between which employment is illegal; and (c) the number of daily and weekly hours beyond which employment is illegal: (ii) prohibiting absolutely, or permitting, subject to conditions, the employment of children in any specified occupation"

3 Ed 7, c. 45. (Employment of Children Act, 1903, s. 1).

Bye-laws as to street trading.

"Any local authority<sup>1</sup> may make bye-laws<sup>2</sup> with respect to street trading<sup>5</sup> by persons under the age of sixteen, and may by such bye-laws—(a) prohibit such street trading, except subject to such conditions as to age, sex, or otherwise, as may be specified in the bye-law, or subject to the holding of a licence to trade to be granted by the local authority; (b) regulate the conditions on which such licences may be granted, suspended, and revoked; (c) determine the days and hours during which, and the places at which, such street trading may be carried on; (d) require such street traders to wear badges; (e) regulate generally the conduct of such street traders: Provided as follows:—(1) The grant of a licence of the right to trade shall not be made subject to any conditions having reference to the poverty or general bad character of the person applying for a licence or claiming to trade; (2) the local authority,<sup>1</sup> in making bye-laws under this section, shall have special regard to the desirability of preventing the employment of girls under sixteen in streets or public places" (s. 2).

General restrictions.

"(1) A child<sup>3</sup> shall not be employed between the hours of nine in the evening and six in the morning: Provided that any local authority<sup>1</sup> may, by bye-law, vary these hours either generally or for any specified occupation. (2) A child under the age of eleven years shall not be employed in street trading. (3) No child who is employed half-time under the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, shall be employed in any other occupation. (4) A child shall not be employed to lift, carry, or move anything so heavy as to be likely to cause injury to the child. (5) A child shall not be employed in any occupation likely to be injurious to his life, limb, health, or education, regard being had to his physical condition. (6) If the local authority send to the employer of any child a certificate signed by a registered medical practitioner that the lifting, carrying, or moving of any specified weight is likely to cause injury to the child, or that any specified occupation is likely to be injurious to the life, limb, health, or education of the child, the certificate shall be admissible as evidence in any subsequent proceedings against the employer in respect of the employment of the child" (s. 3).

<sup>1</sup> "Local authority" means, in the case of an urban district with a population, according to the census of 1901, of over 5,000, the district council, and elsewhere the county council (s. 16).

<sup>2</sup> Bye-laws require to be confirmed by the Lord Lieutenant, after at least thirty days' prior publication in manner required by the Lord Lieutenant, who shall consider any objections and may direct a local inquiry: bye-laws may apply either to the whole or a part only of the area of the local authority: bye-laws made by a county council shall not have effect within any borough or urban district the council of which is constituted a local authority under the Act (ss. 4, 16). Bye-laws do not apply to child over twelve employed in pursuance of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, or the Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872, or the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, so far as regards that employment (s. 9).

<sup>4</sup> "Employ" and "employment" include employment in any labour exercised by way of trade or for the purposes of gain, whether the gain be to the child or to any other person (s. 13).

<sup>5</sup> "Street trading" includes the hawking of newspapers, matches, flowers, and other articles; playing, singing, or performing for profit, shoe-blackening; and any other like occupation carried on in streets or public places (s. 13).

(1) "If any person employs a child<sup>1</sup> or other person under the age of sixteen in contravention of this Act, or of any bye-law under this Act, he shall be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding 40s., or, in case of a second or subsequent offence, not exceeding £5. (2) If any parent or guardian<sup>2</sup> of a child or other person under the age of sixteen has conducted to the commission of the alleged offence by wilful default, or by habitually neglecting to exercise due care, he shall be liable on summary conviction to the like fine. (3) If any person under the age of sixteen contravenes the provisions of any bye-law as to street trading made under this Act, he shall be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding 20s., and in case of a second or subsequent offence, if a child, to be sent to an industrial school, and, if not a child, to a fine not exceeding £5. (4) In lieu of ordering a child to be sent under this section to an industrial school, a court of summary jurisdiction may order the child to be taken out of the charge or control of the person who actually has the charge or control of the child, and to be committed to the charge and control of some fit person who is willing to undertake the same until such child reaches the age of sixteen years. And the provisions of sections<sup>3</sup> [7 and 8 of the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1894] shall, with the necessary modifications, apply to any order for the disposal of a child made under this sub-section" (s. 5).

Offences and penalties.
3 Ed. 7, c. 45.

"(1) Where the offence of taking a child into employment in contravention of this Act is in fact committed by an agent or workman of the employer, such agent or workman shall be liable to a penalty as if he were the employer. (2) Where a child is taken into employment in contravention of this Act on the production, by or with the privity of the parent, of a false or forged certificate, or on the false representation of his parent that the child is of an age at which such employment is not in contravention of this Act, that parent shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding forty shillings. (3) Where an employer is charged with any offence under this Act he shall be entitled, upon information duly laid by him, to have any other person whom he charges as the actual offender brought before the court at the time appointed for hearing the charge; and if, after the commission of the offence has been proved, the court is satisfied that the employer had used due diligence to comply with the provisions of the Act, and that the other person had committed the offence in question without the employer's knowledge, consent, or connivance, the other person shall be summarily convicted of the offence, and the employer shall be exempt from any fine. (4) When it is made to appear, to the satisfaction of an inspector or other officer charged with the enforcement of this Act, at the time of discovering the offence, that the employer had used all due diligence to enforce compliance with this Act, and also by what person the offence had been committed, and also that it had been committed without the knowledge, consent, or connivance of the employer, and in contravention of his order, then the inspector or officer workmen, and by parents.

<sup>3</sup> For the words enclosed in square brackets the words "22 & 23 of the Children Act, 1908," are now to be substituted. This is the effect of the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904, 2nd Sch., and ss. 7 and 8; the Children Act, 1908, Sch. III., and ss. 22, 23; and the Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 38 (1). shall proceed against the person whom he believes to be the actual offender in the first instance, without first proceeding against the employer" (s. 6).

A vanman in the employment of the respondent, a baker, employed for his own convenience and benefit a child to deliver bread to the respondent's customers during hours forbidden by the bye-law. The child was actually engaged and his wages paid by the vanman, and his engagement was a voluntary and gratuitous act on the part of the vanman, and formed no part of any arrangement between him and the respondent. The respondent had no knowledge that the child was so employed except during permitted hours. The respondent was charged with having unlawfully employed the child during prohibited hours contrary to the bye-law. Held (1), that the mere fact that the respondent was charged with the offence did not, in the absence of any evidence of a contract of employment of the child during prohibited hours by or on behalf of the respondent, make it incumbent upon him, under s. 6 (3) of the Act, in order to claim exemption from a fine, to charge the vanman as the actual offender; (2) that as there was no evidence of any unlawful employment of the child by the respondent, either directly or by an agent purporting to employ the child on his behalf, no offence by the respondent had been proved (Robinson v. Hill, (1910) 1 K. B. 94).

officer of local authority to enter place of employment.

"If it appear to any justice of the peace, on the complaint of an officer of the local authority acting under this Act, that there is reasonable cause to believe that a child is employed in contravention of this Act in any place, whether a building or not, such justice may by order under his hand empower an officer of the local authority to enter such place at any reasonable time, within forty-eight hours from the date of the order, and examine such place, and any person therein, touching the employment of any child therein. Any person refusing admission to an officer authorized by an order under this section, or obstructing him in the discharge of his duty, shall for each offence be liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding £20" (s. 8).

Saving for industrial and other schools.

"Nothing in this Act, or in any bye-law made thereunder, shall apply to the exercise of manual labour by any child under order of detention in a certified industrial or reformatory school, or by any child while receiving instruction in manual labour in any school" (s. 10).

Procedure
under 3 Ed.
7, c. 45.

The information shall be laid within three months after the commission of the offence (s. 7). Proceedings under the Act may be brought by or in the name of any officer of the local authority, or by an officer of a school attendance committee, or by a constable (s. 16 (3)).

4 Ed. 7, c. 15.
Employment in public places.

Where the child appears to be under the age charged, such child shall for the purposes of the Employment of Children Act, 1903, be deemed to be under such age unless the contrary is proved (Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904, s. 17).

"If any person . . . (b) causes or procures any child, being a boy under the age of fourteen years, or being a girl under the age of sixteen years, or, having the custody, charge, or care of any such child, allows that child, to be in any street,<sup>1</sup> or in any premises licensed for the sale of any intoxicating liquor,<sup>2</sup> other than premises licensed according to law for public entertainments, for the purpose of singing, playing, or performing, or being exhibited for profit, or offering anything for sale, between nine p.m. and six a.m.; or (c) causes or procures any child under the places.

And (2) any local authority<sup>2</sup> may, if they think it necessary or desirable so to do, from time to time by bye-law<sup>3</sup> extend or restrict the hours mentioned in paragraph (b) of this section, either on every day or on any specified day or days of the week, and either as to the whole of their district or as to any specified area therein. And (3) paragraphs (c) and (d) of this section shall not apply in any case in respect of which a licence granted under this Act is in force, so far as that licence extends”<sup>3</sup> (Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904, s. 2).

“(1) A petty sessional court may, notwithstanding anything in this Act, or in the Employment of Children Act, 1903, or any bye-law made thereunder, grant a licence for such time and during such hours of the day, and subject to such restrictions and conditions as the court think fit, for any child exceeding ten years of age—(a) To take part in any entertainment or series of entertainments to take place in premises licensed according to law for public entertainments, or in any circus or <sup>1</sup> Any person who is the parent of a child shall be presumed to have the custody of the child, and any person to whose charge a child is committed by its parent shall be presumed to have charge of the child; and any other person having actual possession or control of a child shall be presumed to have the care of the child (s. 23 (3)). The provisions of the Act relating to the parent of a child shall apply to the step-parent of the child, and to any person cohabiting with the parent of the child, and the expression “parent” when used in relation to a child includes guardian and every person who is by law liable to maintain the child (s. 23 (1)). The expression “parent” was held not to include the father of an illegitimate child in respect of whom no affiliation order had been made (Butler v. Gregory, (1902) 18 T.L.R. 370). The explanation of the qualification in this case, “in respect of whom no affiliation order had been made,” is that, apart from such order, the law imposes no duty on a father towards his illegitimate child. As to liability to maintain a child see p. 403, post. See also s. 38 of the Children Act, 1908, APPENDIX OF STATUTES. A father cannot, by leaving his home and living elsewhere, divest himself of the custody of his children so as to free himself from his liability to maintain them (R. v. Connor, (1908) 2 K.B. 26).

other place of public amusement as aforesaid: or (b) to be trained as aforesaid; or (c) for both purposes; if satisfied of the fitness of the child for the purpose, and if it is shown to their satisfaction that proper provision has been made to secure the health and kind treatment of the children taking part in the entertainment or series of entertainments or being trained as aforesaid, and the court may, upon sufficient cause, vary, add to, or rescind any such licence. Any such licence shall be sufficient protection to all persons acting under or in accordance with the same. (2) It shall be the duty of inspectors and other officers charged with the execution of the Employment of Children Act, 1903, to see whether the restrictions and conditions of any licence under this section are duly complied with, and any such inspector or officer shall have the same power to enter, inspect, and examine any place of public entertainment at which the employment of a child is for the time being licensed under this section, as an inspector appointed under the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901,<sup>1</sup> has to enter, inspect, and examine a factory or workshop under s. 119 of that Act, and that section shall apply accordingly. (3) Where any person applies for a licence under this section he shall, at least seven days before making the application, give notice thereof to the chief officer of police for the district in which the licence is to take effect, and that officer may appear or instruct some person to appear before the authority hearing the application, and show cause why the licence should not be granted; and the authority to whom the application is made shall not grant the same unless they are satisfied that notice has been properly so given. (4) Where a licence is granted under this section to any person, that person shall forthwith cause a copy thereof to be sent to the local authority for the district in which the licence is to take effect, and if he fails to cause such copy to be sent shall be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding £5" (s. 3).

Procedure
under 4 Ed. 7,
c. 15.

A constable may arrest without warrant any person offending against the Act in his view, where the name and residence of the offender are unknown to, and cannot be ascertained by, such constable; the station inspector or constable may release such persons on entering into recognizances (s. 4). The accused and the husband and wife of accused are competent, but not compellable witnesses (s. 12). The evidence of a child of tender years may be admitted, though not on oath, in the cases mentioned in chapter on EVIDENCE, p. 260, but corroboration of such evidence is necessary (s. 15). Where the child appears to the court to be under the age, the burthen of proof to the contrary lies on the defendant (s. 17). The same information or summons may charge an offence in respect of several children, but there shall not be a separate penalty unless upon separate informations (s. 18). A person shall not be summarily convicted unless the information is laid within six months; but evidence may be taken of acts constituting or contributing to constitute the offence, and committed at any previous time; in the case of a continuous offence the date of the acts constituting the offence need not be stated (s. 18); but if the dates on which the offence is charged to have been committed are set out in the summons, then evidence as to the commission of the offence on other dates is not admissible (see R. v. Miller, (1901) 65 J.P. 313).

There is an appeal to quarter sessions in case of any conviction where the defendant does not plead guilty (s. 19); this section does not apply the appeal provisions of the Dublin Police Acts (see R. (Harty) v. Dublin JJ., (1899) 2 I.R. 310).<sup>2</sup> In any proceedings under the Act, a copy of an entry in the wages-book of any employer of labour, or, if no wages-book be kept, a written statement signed by such employer, or by his foreman, shall be prima facie evidence that the wages therein entered, or stated as having been paid to any person, have in fact been so paid: provided that such copy or statement has been signed by such employer, or his foreman, and that the signature of such employer, or foreman, has been witnessed by the person producing the said copy or statement (s. 24).

“For the purposes of this Act every husband shall be liable to maintain his wife, and every child under the age of fifteen, whether legitimate or illegitimate, which she may have had at the time of her marriage with such husband, and every father shall be liable to maintain his child, and every widow to maintain her child, and the mother of every bastard child to maintain such bastard child, until every such child respectively shall attain the age of fifteen years: provided always, and be it declared, that nothing herein contained shall be taken to remove or lessen the obligations to which any husband or parent is by law liable<sup>1</sup> in regard to the maintenance of his wife or children, legitimate or illegitimate respectively, independently of this Act” (Poor Relief (Ir.) Act, 1838, s. 53). Warrant may be issued for the arrest of the offender (s. 60).

Liability of parent to support child.

1 & 2 Vict. c. 56.

Under the Married Woman's Property Act, 1882, a married woman having separate property is liable for the cost of poor law relief given to her husband (s. 20), and is also (s. 21) subject to all such liability for the maintenance of her children and grandchildren as the husband is by law subject to for the maintenance of his children and grandchildren,<sup>2</sup> provided that nothing in the Act shall relieve her husband from any liability to maintain her children or grandchildren.

45 & 46 Vict. c. 75.

An order under the Children Act, 1908, to contribute to the support of a young person or child shall include his step-parent, and if the court having cognizance of the case thinks fit, a person cohabiting with his mother, whether or not the person so cohabiting is his putative father, and in the case of illegitimacy his putative father (s. 125).

8 Ed. 7. c. 67.

“Every person who shall desert or wilfully neglect to maintain his wife or any child whom he may be liable to maintain,” so that such wife or

10 & 11 Vict. c. 84, s. 2.

<sup>1</sup> The proviso is superfluous, as there seems to be no common law obligation on a parent to support his child, unless the neglect to do so should bring the case within the criminal law: per Cockburn, C.J., in Buzeley v. Forder, (1868) L.R. 3 Q.B. 559. For decisions upon this section, see HUSBAND AND WIFE, post.

<sup>2</sup> In Ireland a person is not liable to maintain his grandchildren. In England a grandfather and grandmother are each liable to maintain a poor grandchild (43 Eliz. 2, c. 7). The above section, therefore, imposes no obligation on a grandmother in Ireland having separate property to support her grandchild.

<sup>3</sup> As to the recovery of the cost of maintenance in a workhouse of an illegitimate child, the Bastardy (Ireland) Act, 1863, 26 & 27 Vict. c. 21, s. 2, enacts that “it shall be lawful for the board of guardians of any union to recover, by civil bill process at their own suit, the cost of the maintenance of any illegitimate child during the time that such child, while under the age of fourteen years, has been or shall be in receipt of relief from the poor rates, from the putative father of such child. Provided always that no person shall be sued by the said board of guardians as aforesaid, save such person only as the mother of such illegitimate child shall have stated to be the father of such child in an affidavit in the form to this Act annexed, or to the like effect sworn to by her before one or more justice or justices of the peace in petty sessions, or if made in the police district of Dublin metropolis before one or more divisional justices within the said district, which affidavit the said justice or justices are hereby authorized to take on the application of the guardians.” The following is the form of affidavit given in the schedule:—Petty Sessions District of _____, County of _____, The information of _____, residing at _____ Workhouse, in the County of _____, who saith on oath that she is the mother of an illegitimate child, called or known by the name of _____, and that the said child was born at _____ on or about the _____ day of _____, 19____, and that one _____, of _____, in the County of _____ is the father of such child, and that within ten months previous to the birth of such child she was residing at _____, in the County of _____ as a servant with _____ Sworn, &c. The mother's statement must be supported by corroborative evidence before a decree can be made (s. 3): letters written by the mother to defendant are not corroboration in themselves (South Dublin Guardians v. Egan, (1903) 4 N.I.J. 4).

child shall become destitute and be relieved in or out of the workhouse of any union in Ireland"—Penalty, imprisonment with hard labour not exceeding three calendar months (Vagrancy (Ireland) Act, 1847, s. 2). A warrant may be issued for the apprehension of the offender (s. 4).

The fact of the wife's adultery was held by a majority of the King's Bench Division to afford a defence to a charge of wife desertion (Phillips v. Guardians of South Dublin Union, (1902) 2 I.R. 112, 1 N.I.J.R. 3). The word "wilfully" implies ability on the part of the defendant to contribute to the support (ib.); and the burthen of proving such ability rests upon the complainants (Guardians of Drogheda Union v. McCann, (1905) 39 I.L.T.R. 210, 5 N.I.J.R. 216). In a prosecution under the section, the guardians are persons aggrieved, and not merely common informers (R. (Ferris) v. Londonderry J.J., (1903) 3 N.I.J.R. 298).

Liability of
port parent.

"Where any poor person shall, through old age, infirmity, or defect, be unable to support himself, every child of such poor person shall be liable, according to his ability, to support or contribute to support such poor person; and in case relief shall be given under this Act to any poor person whose child shall be liable to support him or contribute to his support, it shall be lawful for any two justices of the peace of the jurisdiction within which such child may dwell, on the application of the guardians of the union in which such relief shall have been given, by their order to direct what sum, not exceeding the cost price of such relief, shall be paid by such child to such guardians in respect of the relief which shall have been so given, and also what weekly or other periodical payments shall be made by such child to such guardians in respect of such relief as shall subsequently be given to such poor person, and the sum so directed to be paid, and also such weekly or other periodical payments, when and as they shall become due, shall be recoverable by such guardians in the same manner as any penalties are recoverable under this Act" (Poor Relief (Ireland) Act, 1838, s. 57).

(1) Betting.

"(1.) If anyone, for the purpose of earning commission, reward, or other profit, sends or causes to be sent to a person whom he knows to be an infant any circular, notice, advertisement, letter, telegram, or other document which invites or may reasonably be implied to invite the person receiving it to make any bet or wager, or to enter into or take any share or interest in any betting or wagering transaction, or to apply to any person or at any place, with a view to obtaining information or advice for the purpose of any bet or wager, or for information as to any race, fight, game, sport, or other contingency upon which betting or wagering is generally carried on, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and shall be liable, if convicted on indictment, to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a term not exceeding three months, or to a fine, not exceeding one hundred pounds, or to both imprisonment and fine, and if convicted on summary conviction, to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a term not exceeding one month, or to a fine not exceeding twenty pounds, or to both imprisonment and fine.

"(2.) If any such circular, notice, advertisement, letter, telegram, or other document as in this section mentioned, names or refers to anyone as a person to whom any payment may be made, or from whom information may be obtained, for the purpose of or in relation to betting or wagering, the person so named or referred to shall be deemed to have Soliciting infant to make an affidavit or statutory declaration for the purpose of or in connection with loan—Penalty, on summary conviction, imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding one month, a fine not exceeding £20, or both imprisonment and fine; if convicted on indictment, imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding three months or fine not exceeding £100 (s. 4).

"(1.) If anyone for the purpose of earning interest, commission, reward, or other profit, sends or causes to be sent to a person whom he knows to be an infant any circular, notice, advertisement, letter, telegram, or other document which invites or may reasonably be implied to invite the person receiving it to borrow money, or to enter into any transaction involving the borrowing of money, or to apply to any person or at any place with a view to obtaining information or advice as to borrowing money, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and shall be liable, if convicted on indictment, to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a term not exceeding three months, or to a fine not exceeding one hundred pounds, or to both imprisonment and fine, and if convicted on summary conviction, to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a term not exceeding one month, or to a fine not exceeding twenty pounds, or to both imprisonment and fine. (2) Borrowing.

"(2.) If any such document as above in this section mentioned sent to an infant purports to issue from any address named therein, or indicates any address as the place at which application is to be made with reference to the subject-matter of the document, and at that place there is carried on any business connected with loans, whether making or procuring loans or otherwise, every person who attends at such place for the purpose of taking part in or who takes part in or assists in the carrying on of such business shall be deemed to have sent or caused to be sent such document as aforesaid, unless he proves that he was not in any way a party to and was wholly ignorant of the sending of such document" (Betting and Loans (Infants) Act, 1892, s. 2).

In proceedings under section 2, if it is proved that the person to whom such a document was sent was an infant, the party charged is deemed to have known that the person to whom the document was sent was an infant, unless he proves that he had reasonable ground for believing the infant to be of full age (Moneylenders Act, 1900, 62 & 63 Vict. c. 51, s. 5).

Knowledge of the infancy is presumed where such document is sent to any person at any university, college, school, or other place of education (Betting and Loans (Infants) Act, 1892, s. 3). The sender of a betting circular to an infant undergraduate is deemed to have knowledge that the addressee is an infant only where the address to which the circular is sent shows that it is at a University. Where, therefore, a betting circular was sent to an infant undergraduate who resided at licensed lodgings within the precincts of a University, but there was nothing in the mere address to indicate that it was a lodging licensed by the University authorities or that it was at the University, held, that the sender could not, under s. 3 of the Betting and Loans (Infants) Act, 1892, be deemed to have had knowledge that the addressee was a person at a University (Milton v. Studd, (1910) 2 K.B. 118). (3) Evidence, &c.

The person charged, or wife or husband of such person, is a competent witness (s. 6).

The Children Act, 1908, is printed verbatim, APPENDIX OF STATUTES, and reference should be made thereto. The statute consists of 134 sections, divided into—PART I., ss. 1–11 (infant life protection); PART II., Children Act, 1908,
8 Ed. 7, c. 67.

Children Act, 1908. ss. 12-38 (prevention of cruelty to children and young persons); PART III., ss. 39-43 (juvenile smoking); PART IV., ss. 44-93 (reformatory and industrial schools); PART V., ss. 94-113 (juvenile offenders); PART VI., ss. 114-134 (miscellaneous and general).

The procedure is regulated by ss. 27-34. The reference to the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, in s. 27, does not apply to Ireland; but a defendant, or wife or husband of a defendant, charged under Part II. of the Act is a competent but not compellable witness (s. 133 (28)) Provisions as to juvenile courts are contained in ss. 111-112. Where any person is convicted under Part II., or in the case of any application to a court of summary jurisdiction for an order committing a child or young person to the care of any person, or for an order for contribution to the maintenance of a child or young person, any party aggrieved thereby may appeal to quarter sessions (s. 33). The Vexatious Indictments Act applies to every misdemeanour under the Act (s. 35).

The information must be laid within six months from the time when the offence was wholly or partly committed, but evidence may be taken of acts constituting or contributing to constitute the offence, though committed at any previous time (s. 32 (3)). Where the offence charged is a continuing offence, it shall not be necessary to specify in the summons, information, or indictment, the date of the acts constituting the offence (s. 32 (4)); but where dates are given evidence as to other dates is inadmissible (R. v. Miller, (1901) 65 J.P. 313). Offences may be charged in respect of several children in the same information, but there shall not be a separate penalty for each child except on separate information (s. 32 (1)). Several offences may be charged in the same summons, but when so charged there shall not be a separate penalty for each (s. 32 (2)). The statutory rules are printed at the end of the Act.

Offences by children.

A table showing the punishments to which children and young persons are liable, if convicted upon indictment, will be found under INDICTABLE OFFENCES. As to procedure in charges against children, an punishment when convicted summarily, see Summary Jurisdiction over Children Act (Ir.) Act, 1884, 47 & 48 Vict. c. 19, noted ante, p. 74, and printed verbatim, APPENDIX OF STATUTES; and Children Act, 1908, verbatim, APPENDIX OF STATUTES.

CLERK OF PETTY SESSIONS, OFFENCES BY.

Clerk of Petty Sessions neglecting or refusing to enter any summons in the order required<sup>1</sup>—penalty, not exceeding 40s. (Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 35); demanding or receiving greater fees than legally payable—penalty, not exceeding £5 (ib.); engaging in the business forbidden by s. 35, post—penalty, not exceeding £20 (ib.); wilfully neglecting to perform duty—penalty, not exceeding £5; any person improperly retaining books, etc., of clerk—penalty, not exceeding £10 (ib.); any person hindering search under justice's warrant for such books, etc., penalty, not exceeding £5 (ib.). The above penalties may be awarded by the justices (ib.). 14 & 15 Vict. c. 93, ss. 35, 5.

If guilty of wilful default or neglect in preparing or transmitting informations, examinations, or recognizances, or improperly divulging the contents of such informations or examinations, a petty sessions clerk is liable, by order of judge of assize, or justices at quarter sessions, as the case may be, to penalty, not exceeding £20, and in default three months' imprisonment (s. 5).

As to appointment, &c., see Part I, CLERKS OF PETTY SESSIONS, ante.

<sup>2</sup> That is in the order in which the summonses shall be issued at petty sessions, or if issued out of petty sessions, then in the order in which the application shall be made to him by the complainant or his agent to enter the same (Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 5 (5)).

COINAGE OFFENCES.

For offences in relation to coin, see INDICTABLE OFFENCES.

The following offences are punishable summarily under the Coinage Offences Act, 1861, and the Coinage Act, 1870:—

Uttering defaced coin.

“No tender of payment in money made in any gold, silver, or copper coin so defaced by stamping as in the last preceding section mentioned<sup>1</sup> shall be allowed to be a legal tender; and whosoever shall tender, utter, or put off any coin so defaced shall, on conviction thereof [before two justices], be liable to forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding forty shillings”—(Act of 1861, s. 17). One justice at petty sessions is now sufficient (25 & 26 Vict. c. 50, s. 2). No proceedings to be taken without consent of the Attorney-General (ib.).

24 & 25 Vict. c. 99.

Possession of more than five pieces of counterfeit foreign coin.

“Whosoever, without lawful authority or excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the party accused), shall have in his custody or possession any greater number of pieces than five pieces of false or counterfeit coin resembling, or apparently intended to resemble or pass for, any gold or silver coin of any foreign prince, state, or country, or any such copper or other coin as in the last preceding section mentioned”<sup>2</sup>—Penalty, forfeiture of coin, fine not less than ten shillings or more than forty shillings for each coin; in default three months’ imprisonment with hard labour (s. 23).

Making coins and tokens.

“No piece of gold, silver, copper, or bronze, or of any metal or mixed metal, of any value whatever, shall be made or issued, except by the mint, as a coin or token for money, or as purporting that the holder thereof is entitled to demand any value denoted thereon”—Penalty, on summary conviction, not exceeding £20 (Coinage Act, 1870, s. 5).

33 & 34 Vict. c. 10, s. 5.

COMMON.

Damaging surface of common.

Skinning or destroying surface of common—Penalty, not exceeding £5 (Irish currency), nor less than 5s. (Irish currency), for every square yard skinned or destroyed (29 Geo. 3, c. 30 (Ir.), s. 1; 31 Geo. 3, c. 38 (Ir.), s. 1). Not to be construed to extend to prohibit the cutting and carrying away the surface of heathy, mountainous, or moory ground, heretofore used as fuel (29 Geo. 3, c. 30, s. 4).

COMPANIES.

8 Ed. 7. c. 69. A great number of offences by or in respect of companies are made punishable by the Companies Consolidation Act, 1908. The following is an enumeration of offences punishable summarily under the Act.

Offences by company, its officers and others.

Making default in sending copy memorandum and articles to a member on payment of prescribed fee, not exceeding 1s. (s. 18); failing to keep register, and director or manager knowingly and wilfully authorizing or permitting such default (s. 25); company having share capital failing to make annual list and summary, and to forward copy to registrar of companies, and every director and manager knowingly and wilfully authorizing or permitting default (s. 26); company refusing inspection of register of members gratis to members, and by other persons on payment of prescribed sum, not exceeding 1s., or to furnish copies of register or list and summary, or of any part thereof, on payment of prescribed mortgages, and every director and manager authorizing or knowingly and wilfully permitting refusal (s. 101); refusal to allow inspection of register of debenture-holders, or to supply copy of trust deed (s. 102); limited banking company, insurance company, deposit, provident, or benefit society, failing to publish statement in schedule, and director and manager knowingly and wilfully authorizing or permitting default (s. 108); officer or agent refusing to produce any book or document to inspectors of Board of Trade, or to answer questions relating to affairs of company (s. 109); like as to inspectors appointed by company (s. 110); company issuing unsigned copy of balance sheet, and every officer knowingly a party to default (s. 113); any person without reasonable excuse making default in complying with requirements of section 147 as to furnishing statement of company's affairs to official receiver; liquidator not reporting to registrar order of court dissolving company (s. 172); liquidator not filing with registrar notice of his appointment (s. 187); liquidator not making to registrar return of final meeting on voluntary winding up (s. 195); person on whose application order of court deferring date of dissolution of company made, not filing office copy of order with registrar (s. 195); person obtaining order declaring dissolution of company void not filing with registrar (s. 223); company incorporated outside of United Kingdom, and having a place of business within the United Kingdom failing to file certain documents with registrar, &c. (s. 274); any person in return. report, &c., required for the purposes mentioned in the fifth schedule, wilfully making false statement (s. 281); any person using term "limited," unless duly incorporated as limited company (s. 282).

Procedure.

All offences under the Act made punishable by fine may be prosecuted under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts (s. 276). As to service on company, see p. 49; as to making company amenable summarily, see p. 49; and on indictment, p. 20. As to offences punishable on indictment, see INDICTABLE OFFENCES.

Indictable offences.

Assurance Companies.
9 Ed. 7. c. 49.

The Assurance Companies Act, 1909, provides (s. 4) for the preparation by assurance companies of an annual statement of accounts and balance sheet in the forms prescribed in the schedules; for (s. 7) the deposit of every account, &c., with the Board of Trade; and that (s. 8) a copy shall be forwarded to any shareholder or policy-holder on application (s. 8). Default in compliance with the Act is punishable by fine of £100, or in case of a continuing default, £50 a day, and every officer or agent who is knowingly a party to the default is liable to the like penalty (s. 23). Falsifying accounts, &c.—Penalty, fine and imprisonment on conviction on indictment; on summary conviction, not exceeding £50 (s. 24). Penalties are recovered in the same manner as penalties under the Companies Consolidation Act, 1908 (s. 25).

The Act applies to all persons or bodies of persons, whether corporate or unincorporate, not being registered under the Acts relating to friendly societies or trade unions, whether established before or after the Act, and whether established within or without the United Kingdom, who carry on life insurance, fire insurance, accident insurance, employers' liability insurance, or bond investment business (s. 1).

CONSTABLES.

As to offences by and relating to constables, see POLICE, OFFENCES BY AND RELATING TO.

CONTEMPT OF COURT.

Wilfully insulting justices, or committing any other contempt of court—Penalty, imprisonment not exceeding seven days, or fine not exceeding 40s. (Petty Sessions (Ir.) Act, 1851, s. 9). See also p. 72, ante.

“It shall not be lawful for any person, not being the proprietor of the copyright,<sup>1</sup> or some person authorized by him, to import into any part of the United Kingdom, or into any other part of the British dominions, for sale or hire, any printed book<sup>2</sup> first composed or written, or printed and published in any part of the said United Kingdom, wherein there shall be copyright, and re-printed in any country or place whatsoever out of the British dominions”—Penalty, for above, or for knowingly selling, publishing or exposing to sale or letting to hire, or having in possession for sale or hire, such book; forfeiture of book, which may be seized by customs officer, and penalty, conviction before two justices for the county or place in which such book shall be found, £10 for each offence, and double value of every copy, £5 of the penalty to go to customs officer, and remainder to proprietor of copyright (Copyright Act, 1842, s. 17). Copyright of books.
5 & 6 Vict.
c. 45, s. 17.

Save the above, there is no remedy, save by civil process, for infringement of copyright in books.<sup>3</sup>

“A court of summary jurisdiction, upon the application of the owner of the copyright<sup>4</sup> in any musical work, may act as follows: if satisfied by evidence that there is reasonable ground for believing that pirated copies of such musical work<sup>5</sup> are being hawked, carried about, sold, or offered for Copyright of music.
Seizure of pirated copies.

<sup>1</sup> The copyright of a book published in the lifetime of the author endures for his lifetime and seven years after his death, or for forty-two years, whichever is the longer term; if the work is first published after his death, the copyright endures for forty-two years from the date of first publication (s. 3). The validity of a copyright does not depend upon registration; but registration is a condition precedent to bringing proceedings for infringement whether by action or summary proceeding (s. 24).

<sup>2</sup> Including every volume, part, or division of a volume, pamphlet, sheet of letter-press, sheet of music, map, chart, or plan separately published (s. 2). A perforated music roll is not a “sheet of music” within the meaning of s. 2 (Boosey v. Wright, (1900) 1 Ch. 122).

<sup>3</sup> Copyright in lectures, sermons, &c., may be secured by taking advantage of the Lectures Copyright Act, 1835, 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 65, s. 5, but the sole remedy for infringement is by action.

<sup>4</sup> “Musical copyright” means the exclusive right of the owner of such copyright, under the Copyright Acts in force for the time being, to do, or to authorize another person to do, all or any of the following things in respect of a musical work: (1) to make copies by writing or otherwise of such musical work; (2) to abridge such musical work; (3) to make any new adaptation, arrangement, or setting of such musical work, or of the melody thereof, in any notation or system (s. 3). A musical composition is a “book” within the Copyright Act, 1842, and therefore the duration of musical copyright is the same as that of a book.

<sup>5</sup> “Musical work” means any combination of melody and harmony, or either of them, printed, reduced to writing, or otherwise graphically produced or reproduced. “Pirated musical work” means any musical work written, printed, or otherwise reproduced, without the consent lawfully given by the owner of the copyright in such musical work (s. 3). A perforated music roll, being merely a mechanical contrivance for producing musical notes, is not a pirated “copy” of a musical work (Mabe v. Connor, (1909) 1 K.B. 515; and see 6 Ed. 7, c. 36, s. 3, noted p. 412, infra).

sale, may, by order, authorize a constable to seize such copies without warrant and to bring them before the court; and the court, on proof that the copies are pirated, may order them to be destroyed or to be delivered up to the owner of the copyright, if he makes application for that delivery" (Musical (Summary Proceedings) Copyright Act, 1902, s. 1).

An order may be made under the section even though the sale of the music takes place at a private house (Ex parte Francis, Day, and Hunter (No. 2), (1903) 88 L.T. 806).

Power to seize copies on hawkers.

"If any person shall hawk, carry about, sell, or offer for sale any pirated copy of any musical work, every such pirated copy may be seized by any constable without warrant, on the request in writing of the apparent owner of the copyright in such work, or of his agent thereto authorized in writing, and at the risk of such owner. On seizure of any such copies, they shall be conveyed by such constable before a court of summary jurisdiction, and, on proof that they are infringements of copyright, shall be forfeited or destroyed, or otherwise dealt with as the court may think fit" (s. 2).

Procedure
under 2 Ed. 7.
c. 15.

A summons or notice must be served upon the person from whom the "copies" have been seized, giving him an opportunity to show cause why an order under the Act should not be made (Ex parte Francis, Day, and Hunter, (1903) 1 K.B. 275). There is no provision making the Summary Jurisdiction Acts applicable or giving any appeal in respect of an order under this Act, and it is to be noted that there is no provision in this Act or in the Act of 1906, section 1 of which provides for an appeal, that said Acts should be construed as one Act. Proceedings under the Act are not criminal in their nature, so that an appeal lies from the judgment of the King's Bench Division (Mabe v. Connor, (1909) 1 K.B. 515, 522).

Possession of pirated music.

"(1) Every person who prints, reproduces, or sells, or exposes, offers, or has in his possession for sale, any pirated copies<sup>1</sup> of any musical work,<sup>2</sup> or has in his possession any plates<sup>3</sup> for the purpose of printing or reproducing pirated copies of any musical work, shall (unless he proves that he acted innocently) be guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction, and shall be liable to a fine not exceeding £5, and on a second or subsequent conviction to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a term not exceeding two months, or to a fine not exceeding £10: Provided that a person convicted of an offence under this Act who has not previously been convicted of such an offence, and who proves that the copies of the musical work in respect of which the offence was committed had printed on the title-page thereof a name and address purporting to be that of the printer or publisher, shall not be liable to any penalty under this Act unless it is proved that the copies were to his knowledge pirated copies. (2) Any constable may take into custody without warrant any person who in any street or public place sells or exposes, offers, or has in his possession for sale any pirated copies of any such musical work as may be specified in any general written authority addressed to

<sup>2</sup> Meaning a musical work in which there is a subsisting copyright, and which has been registered in accordance with the provisions of the Copyright Act, 1842, or of the International Copyright Act, 1844, which registration may be effected notwithstanding anything in the International Copyright Act, 1836 (s. 3). Registration of a musical piece may be effected under the Copyright Act, 1842, s. 11, and a certified copy of the entry in the register is evidence of ownership of the copyright (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 11).

<sup>3</sup> The expression "plates" includes any stereotype or other plates, stones, matrices, transfers, or negatives used, or intended to be used, for printing or reproducing copies of any musical work: Provided that the expressions "pirated copies" and "plates" shall not, for the purposes of this Act, be deemed to include perforated music rolls used for playing mechanical instruments, or records used for the reproduction of sound-waves, or the matrices or other appliances by which such rolls or records respectively are made (s. 3).

the chief officer of police,<sup>1</sup> and signed by the apparent owner of the copyright in such work, or his agent thereto authorized in writing, requesting the arrest, at the risk of such owner, of all persons found committing offences under this section in respect to such work, or who offers for sale any pirated copies of any such specified musical work by personal canvass or by personally delivering advertisements or circulars. (3) A copy of every written authority addressed to a chief officer of police under this section shall be open to inspection at all reasonable hours by any person without payment of any fee, and any person may take copies of or make extracts from any such authority. (4) Any person aggrieved by a summary conviction under this section may in England or Ireland appeal to a court of quarter sessions, and in Scotland under and in terms of the Summary Prosecutions Appeals (Scotland) Act, 1875" Copyright of music. Possession of pirated music. 6 Ed. 7, c. 36.

Fraudulent productions, e.g. by affixing on a work of art the name of a person who did not execute same—Penalty not exceeding £10, payable to the party aggrieved, or a sum not exceeding double the full sale price, with forfeiture of the works (s. 7). All pecuniary penalties may be recovered by the person empowered to recover the same either by action or by summary proceedings before two justices of the peace (s. 8). The court are not obliged to award the full penalty for each offence, but may give any sum, even though less than a farthing, for each offence (*Hildersheimer v. ## CRABS AND LOBSTERS.

Sale of edible crabs under a certain size.

"A person shall not take, have in his possession, sell, expose for sale, consign for sale, or buy for sale: (1) any edible crab which measures less than four inches and a quarter across the broadest part of the back; or (2) any edible crab carrying any spawn attached to the tail or other exterior part of the crab, whether known as 'berried crab,' 'seed crab,' 'spawn crab,' or 'ran crab,' or by any other name; or (3) any edible crab which has recently cast its shell, whether known as 'castor,' 'white crab,' 'white-footed crab,' 'white-livered crab,' 'soft crab,' 'glass crab,' or by any other name"—Penalty, not exceeding, first offence, £2, subsequent offence £10, and forfeiture of the crabs.—(Fisheries (Oyster, <sup>1</sup> Crab, and Lobster) Act, 1877, s. 8.)

40 & 41 Vict.
c. 42.

A person shall not be convicted if he satisfies the court that the crabs were intended for bait for fishing (ib.).

Sale of lobsters under certain size.

"A person shall not take, have in his possession, sell, expose for sale, consign for sale, or buy for sale, any lobster which measures less than eight inches from the tip of the beak to the end of the tail when spread as far as possible flat"—Penalty, not exceeding, first offence, £2, subsequent offence, £10, and forfeiture of the lobsters.—(Fisheries (Oyster, Crab, and Lobster) Act, 1877, s. 9.)

Search and seizure of such crabs and lobsters.

All such crabs and lobsters may be searched for, seized, condemned, destroyed, and disposed of by any authority lawfully acting, under any Act, charter or bye-law, or by any persons appointed by that authority, or in Ireland by the inspectors of Irish fisheries,<sup>2</sup> with the approval of the Lord Lieutenant, in like manner as if such crabs and lobsters respectively were found to be diseased, unsound, unwholesome, corrupt, unfit to be sold, or unfit for the food of man (s. 12).<sup>3</sup>

Order of Department restricting the taking of crabs and lobsters in certain areas.

Under section 10, the inspectors of Irish fisheries,<sup>2</sup> after such public inquiry and notice as they think expedient, were authorized to make orders restricting or prohibiting the fishing for and taking of edible crabs or lobsters within the area named in such order, and for such period as mentioned therein, and to provide for the enforcement of the order by fines not exceeding £20. By section 8 of the Mussels, Periwinkles, and Cockles (Ireland) Act, 1898, 61 & 62 Vict. c. 28, s. 8, any such order shall be enforced by the persons appointed by the inspectors of Irish Fisheries, with the approval of the Lord Lieutenant, under section 12 of the Act. The powers and duties of the inspectors of Irish fisheries are now vested in the Department of Agriculture (Agriculture and Technical Instruction (Ireland) Act, 1899, 62 & 63 Vict. c. 50, s. 2 (1) i).

The procedure is regulated by the Summary Jurisdiction Act, the Procedure. offence being cognizable either in the place where it was committed or in any place in which the offender may for the time being be found (s. 11). The court must be constituted of at least two justices or a divisional justice (s. 13 (4) (a)). There is no special provision as to appeal (see p. 131, ante).

"dentist," . . . . .	415

The Dentists Act, 1878, provides for the keeping of a register of all persons qualified to practise dentistry (s. 11). The following are entitled to be registered: any person who (a) is a licentiate in dental surgery or dentistry of any of the medical authorities;<sup>1</sup> or (b) is entitled as therein-after mentioned to be registered as a foreign or colonial dentist; or (c) was at the passing of the Act bona fide engaged in the practice of dentistry or dental surgery, either separately or in conjunction with the practice of medicine, surgery, or pharmacy (s. 6). Ss. 8 to 10 provide for the registration of colonial or foreign dentists with recognized certificates. Powers are given to the General Council to erase from the register the name of any practitioner convicted of a crime, or guilty of any infamous or disgraceful conduct in a professional respect<sup>2</sup> (s. 13).

Register of dentists.
41 & 42 Vict.
c. 33.

"A person shall not be entitled to take or use the name or title of 'dentist' (either alone or in combination with any other word or words) or of 'dental practitioner,' or any name, title, addition, or description,<sup>3</sup> implying that he is registered under this Act, or that he is a person specially qualified to practise dentistry, unless he is registered under this Act. Any person who, not being registered under this Act, takes or uses any such name, title, addition, or description, as aforesaid, shall be liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding £20; provided that nothing in this section shall apply to legally qualified medical practitioners" (s. 3).

Unqualified person using title of "dentist."

"A person . . . shall not be guilty of an offence under this Act (a) if he shows that he is not ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom, and that he holds a qualification which entitles him to practise dentistry or dental surgery in a British possession or foreign country, and that he did not represent himself to be registered under this Act; or (b) if he shows that

<sup>1</sup> Under section 18 the governing body of the Royal College of Surgeons in Edinburgh, and of the Faculty of Physicians and Surgeons in Glasgow, and of the Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland, and of any University, have power to hold examinations in dentistry and dental surgery.

<sup>2</sup> The publication of an advertisement that, among other advantages, the instruments were always sterilized before use, and that a trained lady nurse was always present at operations so as to prevent any possibility of scandal between an operator and a lady patient, amounts to professional misconduct (Clifford v. Timms, (1908) A.C. 12).

<sup>3</sup> The words "title, addition, or description," as used in this section, include any title, addition to a name, designation, or description whether expressed in words or by letters, or partly in one way and partly in the other (Medical Act, 1886, 49 & 50 Vict. c. 48, s. 26).

Unqualified person using title of "dentist."

he has been registered and continues to be entitled to be registered under this Act, but that his name has been erased on the ground only that he has ceased to practise. If any person takes or uses the designation of any qualification or certificate in relation to dentistry or dental surgery which he does not possess"—Penalty, not exceeding £20 (s. 4).

The word "person" in the statute does not refer to a corporation (O'Duffy v. Jaffe, (1904) 2 I.R. 27, 37 I.L.T.R. 236). But an unregistered person calling himself "the West Central Dental Institute, Ltd." and not using his own name, was held rightly convicted because this was the same thing as if he put "dentist" on his own door (Panhaus v. Browne, (1904) 68 J.P. 435). The Registrar of Joint Stock Companies was held to be entitled to refuse to register a company which was formed for the purpose of deceiving the public by the name "A. B., Dentists, Ltd."; neither A. B. nor any of the signatories to the Memorandum of Association being registered (R. (Rowell) v. Registrar of Joint Stock Companies for Ireland, (1904) 2 I.R. 634; see also A.-G. v. Myddletons, Ltd., (1907) 1 I.R. 471; A.-G. v. George C. Smith, Ltd., (1909) 2 Ch. 524).

The words "specially qualified" in section 3 gave rise to contrary decisions of the King's Bench Divisions in England and Ireland. In Barnes v. Brown, (1909) 1 K.B. 38, it was held that an advertisement in the following terms:—"H. J. Barnes. Finest artificial teeth at moderate prices. Extractions, advice free. Hours 10-7. English and American teeth, advice free. Painless extractions"—constituted an offence under the Act. But in Byrne v. Rogers, (1910) 2 I.R. 220, it was held that the words refer to a description of the person himself, implying that he has a "qualification" in the nature of a degree, diploma, &c., and do not include the case of a description implying mere personal skill or accomplishment; and that therefore an advertisement, "Mr. Byrne, the world's expert adapter of teeth. Extraction 1s. by my own special system," was not within the section. The House of Lords held that the view of the King's Bench Division in Ireland was correct, and expressly approved of the judgment of Lord O'Brien, L.C.J., in that case (Bellerby v. Heyworth, (1910) A.C. 377).

An unregistered person may recover the price of material, e.g., the price of a set of teeth, as distinguished from the price of the work of fitting them in (Herman v. Duckworth, (1904) 20 T.L.R. 436; Seymour v. Pickett, (1905) 1 K.B. 715).

Procedure.

49 & 50 Vict.
c. 48.

A prosecution for an offence may now be instituted by a private person without the consent of the General Medical Council or a branch thereof (Medical Act, 1886, s. 26). A copy of the register of dentists, purporting to be printed and published in pursuance of the Act of 1878 (Dentists Act, 1878, s. 11 (8)), shall be prima facie evidence of registration or non-registration (s. 29). Penalties may be recovered pursuant to the Petty Sessions Act or Dublin Police Act (s. 40). Two justices are required in a petty sessions district (ib.).

Other offences.

Wilful falsification of register, indictable misdemeanour, imprisonment not exceeding twelve months (Dentists Act, 1878, s. 34); obtaining registration by false representations—indictable misdemeanour, imprisonment not exceeding twelve months (s. 35).

DESTRUCTIVE INSECTS AND PESTS.

40 & 41 Vict.
c. 68.

The Department of Agriculture in Ireland<sup>1</sup> has power to make orders for the purpose of preventing the introduction and spreading of the Colorado Beetle (Destructive Insects Act, 1877) and any insect, fungus, or other pest destructive of agricultural or horticultural crops, or to trees or bushes (Destructive Insects and Pests Act, 1907). These Acts confer power to make orders<sup>1</sup> prohibiting or regulating the landing of any vegetable substance or other articles likely to introduce the said pests, and the destruction of same if landed; person offending against the order to be liable as for importing goods prohibited by the Customs Acts (Act of 1877, s. 1); orders directing or authorizing the removal or destruction of crops on which the said pests are found, or by means of which such pests may be likely to spread, with penalties not exceeding £10 for any offence against such order (s. 2); compensation for crops (Act of 1877, s. 3; Act of 1907, s. 1). Penalties, other than the penalties recoverable under the Customs Acts, to be recoverable in a summary manner, and to be applied according to the provisions of the Fines Act, 1851 (Act of 1877, s. 7 (4)). Two justices requisite in prosecutions under s. 2 of the Act of 1877.

As to Bee Pest, see Bee Pest Prevention (Ir.) Act, 1908, APPENDIX OF STATUTES. 8 Ed. 7, c. 34.

On complaint by party aggrieved, a person taking higher charges in connection with distress for rent, rates, or taxes than allowed by the Act, may be ordered by justices in petty sessions to pay treble the amount of the moneys unlawfully taken to the party aggrieved, together with full costs,<sup>2</sup> same to be leviable by distress, and if no sufficient distress, the offender may be committed to prison (Ejectment and Distress (I.) Act, 1846, s. 16); no judgment to be given against any landlord unless he personally levies the distress (s. 18); parties aggrieved not to be barred from other legal remedies, but determination of justices to be a bar to other proceedings (ib.). Excessive charges for distress, &c. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 111, s. 16.

Sheriff, under-sheriff, or bailiff, or assistant of sheriff, under-sheriff, or bailiff, or keeper demanding or receiving in respect of the execution of any decree, any money or gratuity other than poundage fees legally payable, or having, permitting, or suffering anyone on his behalf to receive the same—Penalty, £20, recoverable by civil bill (Civil Bill Courts (Ir.) Act, 1864, s. 17). Bailiff or assistant extorting money—misdemeanour punishable by fine not exceeding £20,<sup>3</sup> or imprisonment not exceeding twelve months, with or without hard labour, or by fine and imprisonment (s. 18). 27 & 28 Vict. c. 99.

vested in the Department by order of the Lord Lieutenant, dated the 24th March, 1900, made pursuant to the Agricultural and Technical Instruction (Ireland) Act, 1899. As regards local authorities, county councils are substituted for boards of guardians by the Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898, s. 6, and "administrative county" is substituted for poor law union by Article 42 of the Adaptation of Enactments (Ireland) Order, 1899.

Article 5 of the Black Scab in Potatoes (Ireland) Order, 1908, dated 1st Oct., 1908.

Bailiff to give copy charges 9 & 10 Vict. c. 111, s. 20. Broker, bailiff, or other person making any distress shall, on demand, give copies of their charges to the person distrained—Penalty, on default, not exceeding 40s. (Ejectment and Distress (I.) Act, 1846, s. 20). The court may give costs to either party under s. 22 (9) of the Petty Sessions Act, not exceeding 20s.

Exemptions from distress for rent and small debts. 51 & 52 Vict. c. 47. Wearing apparel, bedding, tools, and implements of trade not exceeding in the whole the value of £5, are exempt from distress for rent, or execution of the Dublin Court of Conscience or the Court of Conscience of any other municipal borough, and from execution under the small debts jurisdiction of the Dublin divisional justices or justices in petty sessions; (Law of Distress and Small Debts (Ir.) Act, 1888, s. 5).

Offences by Dublin bailiffs 5 & 6 Vict. c. 24. Bailiff in Dublin, guilty of misconduct or illegality—Penalty not exceeding £10, or three months' imprisonment with or without hard labour, and certificate may be withdrawn or suspended (s. 13); guilty of extortion or acting without authority, misdemeanour punishable by fine not exceeding £20, or imprisonment not exceeding twelve months, with or without hard labour, or offender may be proceeded against summarily—Penalty on conviction, not exceeding £10, or six months' imprisonment with or without hard labour (s. 12). Summary proceedings and the right of appeal are governed by the Dublin Police Acts; and such proceedings shall be in addition to and not in substitution for remedies existing before the Act (s. 14), as to which see the Dublin Police Act, 1842, s. 67, printed in APPENDIX OF STATUTES.

Divisional justices' jurisdiction as to goods seized. The Dublin divisional justices have power to determine summarily disputes as to goods seized under the Act (Law of Distress and Small Debts (Ir.) Act, 1888, s. 13).

What may be taken under justice's warrant. Growing crops, trees, shrubs, plants, or vegetable matters not severed from the soil cannot be taken in execution under a justice's warrant (Seizure of Crops (I.) Act, 1863, 26 & 27 Vict. c. 62); but, with this exception and the exception noted ante as regards small debts jurisdiction, all chattels of the defendant which might be taken under a writ of fiery facias at common law may be taken.<sup>1</sup>

DISTURBANCE IN CHURCHES, &c.

Disturbances in churches, &c. 23 & 24 Vict. c. 32. "Any person who shall be guilty of riotous, violent, or indecent behaviour, in England or Ireland, in any cathedral, church, parish or district church, or chapel of the Church of England and Ireland,<sup>2</sup> or in any chapel of any religious denomination, . . . whether during the celebration of divine service, or at any other time, or in any churchyard or burial ground, or who shall molest, let, disturb, vex, or trouble, or by any other unlawful means disquiet or misuse any preacher duly authorized to preach therein, or any clergyman in Holy Orders ministering or celebrating any sacrament or any divine service, rite, or office in any cathedral, church, or chapel, or in any churchyard or burial ground"—Penalty, on conviction before two justices, not exceeding £5, or imprisonment not exceeding two months (Ecclesiastical Courts Jurisdiction Act, 1860, s. 2). An appeal lies from any conviction to the quarter sessions next held not less than twelve days after such conviction (s. 4).

<sup>1</sup> Under a fiery facias at common law the sheriff could seize every chattel belonging to the defendant (including chattels real in which defendant had a legal title), except his necessary wearing apparel; bank-notes, bills, bonds, deeds, writings could not be seized, and it was doubtful if money could (Nun & Walsh, 1st ed., p. 66).

<sup>2</sup> As regards Ireland, the words in italics are now to be read as "Church of Ireland" (Irish Church Act, 1869, 32 & 33 Vict. c. 42, s. 69).

The word "person" is not limited to laymen, and the Act applies to a clergyman who is guilty of violent and indecent behaviour in the churchyard of his own parish church (Vallancey v. Fletcher, (1897) 1 Q.B. 265). To persist in reading an objection to the service, after request to desist, is an offence within the section (Kensit v. St. Paul's Dean and Chapter, (1905) 2 K.B. 249, 255). Churchwardens of a Church of England church with free seats have authority to direct, for the maintenance of order and decorum, in which of those seats certain classes of the congregation may, and others may not, sit (Asher v. Calcroft, (1887) 18 Q.B.D. 607), but have no right forcibly to prevent an inhabitant of a parish or district from entering the church for the purpose of attending service, even though they are of opinion that he cannot be conveniently accommodated (Taylor v. Timson, (1888) 20 K.B.D. 671). The occupation of a pew in a Roman Catholic church is merely by revocable licence from the parish priest; and no property or estate therein vests in a parishioner (Linehan v. Hartnett, (1897) 31 I.L.T. and S.J. 429, Cir. Cas., Palles, C.B.).

"Any person having in his possession or custody any dog or dogs, shall on or before the the thirty-first day of March in each year, take out a licence for such dog or dogs in the petty sessions district in which he shall reside; and the petty sessions clerk, upon payment by such person of the proper licence duty, shall deliver such licence to such person, which shall entitle such person to keep such dog or dogs for one year from and after the date of such licence: Provided always, that where the owner of a dog or dogs has given the custody of such dog or dogs to another person who shall not reside in the same petty sessions district as the owner, the licence for such dog or dogs shall be taken out by the person having the custody of such dog or dogs, and not by the owner" (Dogs Regulation (Ir.) Act, 1865, s. 6).

"The occupier of any house or premises where any dog or dogs are kept or permitted to live or remain shall be liable to pay the licence duty for such dog or dogs, and in default of such payment shall be liable to the penalties incurred by persons keeping unlicensed dogs, unless the said occupier can prove to the satisfaction of the justice or justices that he is not the owner, or has not the custody of such dog or dogs, and that such dog or dogs were kept or permitted to live or remain in the said house or premises without his sanction or knowledge: Provided always, that where there are more occupiers than one in any house or premises let in separate apartments or lodgings, or otherwise, the occupier of that particular part of the premises in which such dog or dogs shall have been kept or permitted to live and remain shall be liable to pay the licence duty for such dog or dogs" (s. 7).

Licences for dogs.*Licence duty.

The licence duty is for each dog two shillings (Schedule A), to which has to be added sixpence for the stamp on the certificate of registration (s. 8). The clerk of petty sessions is to make entries of licences in books to be kept for the purpose, which shall be open for inspection, and shall certify at the foot or on the back of every licence that the same has been duly registered (s. 8).

Sale of dog.

Where a dog shall be transferred by sale or gift of its owner to any other person, it shall not be necessary for such other person to take out a new licence for such dog, if such dog shall be licensed for the year, but such person shall obtain from the petty sessions clerk a certificate (Schedule D), and cause same to be registered in the registry of dogs licence book. In default such person shall be liable to the penalties incurred by persons keeping unlicensed dogs (s. 9).

Keeping of unlicensed dog.

"Any person who shall, from and after the thirty-first day of March in each year, have in his possession or custody any dog or dogs not duly licensed in accordance with the provisions of this Act, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding two pounds; and the justice or justices shall further order such persons forthwith to take out a licence for such dog or dogs; and the petty sessions clerk shall thereupon issue such licence, upon payment of the proper licence duty by such person, and such licence shall be held to be valid to the thirty-first day of March next following the date of such licence; and if after such order such person shall continue to keep any dog or dogs without having obtained a licence, he shall, in addition to the penalty imposed for the second and any subsequent offence, pay a sum not exceeding one shilling for each day he shall have kept a dog without a licence" (s. 20).

The words "each year" in the section mean each calendar year; and, therefore, to charge possession of an unlicensed dog on the 17th February discloses no offence, for the defendant has between the 1st of January and the 31st of March to take out a licence, and could not be prosecuted before the 31st March (McElroy v. Freeman, (1905) 2 I.R. 367). But if a person acquires possession of an unlicensed dog after the 31st March, and before the following 1st January, he is liable to the penalty (ib.). The Act is not limited, as is the English Act, to dogs over six months old, but the word "dog" means an animal so matured as to be capable of doing injury to property (ib., per Madden, J.).

Neglect not wilful.

"No penalty shall be exacted in any case where it shall appear to the satisfaction of the justice or justices that the person failing to comply with the provisions of this Act has not wilfully been guilty of such failure, but that such failure has been occasioned by accident: Provided always that such justice or justices shall forthwith order such person to take out a licence for the dog or dogs in his possession or custody, or otherwise comply with the provisions of this Act, and that such person shall forthwith comply with such order" (Dogs Regulation (Ir.) Act, 1865, s. 23).

Production of licence.

"Every person having in his possession or custody any dog or dogs shall produce the licence for such dog or dogs whenever so required by a justice of the peace, officer, head or other constable of constabulary, or of the Dublin metropolitan or other local police force; and in case of refusal he shall, if licensed, be liable to a penalty not exceeding five shillings" (s. 21).

Procedure.

Penalties under the Dogs Regulation (Ir.) Act, 1865, are recoverable in Dublin under the Dublin Police Acts, elsewhere under the Petty Sessions Act, 1851 (s. 22).

Dangerous dogs.
14 & 15 Vict.
c. 92.

"Any person who shall keep or suffer to be at large within fifty yards of any public road any dog without having such dog muzzled, or without having a block of wood fastened to the neck of such dog, of sufficient weight to prevent such dog from being dangerous, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding ten shillings; and it shall be lawful for the justices of the petty sessions district to issue a warrant to any sub-inspector, head or other<sup>1</sup> constable, directing him to seize or kill any dangerous dog which shall be so kept near any public road contrary to the provisions of this Act, and such sub-inspector, head or other constable,<sup>1</sup> may, accordingly, seize or kill any such dog" (Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1851, s. 10 (7)).

"Any court of summary jurisdiction may take cognizance of a complaint that a dog is dangerous, and not kept under proper control, and if it appears to the court having cognizance of such complaint that such dog is dangerous, the court may make an order in a summary way directing the dog to be kept by the owner under proper control or destroyed, and any person failing to comply with such order shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding twenty shillings for every day during which he fails to comply with such order" (Dogs Act, 1871, s. 2).

"The local authority may, if a mad dog, or a dog suspected of being mad, is found within their jurisdiction, make, and when made vary or revoke, an order placing such restrictions as they think expedient on all dogs not being under the control of any person during such period as may be prescribed in such order throughout the whole of their jurisdiction, or such part thereof as may be prescribed in such order. Any person who acts in contravention of any order made in pursuance of this section shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding twenty shillings" (Dogs Act, 1871, s. 3).

"Due notice of such order shall be published at the expense of the local rate. The provisions in this Act contained as to the detention and sale or destruction of dogs found straying on the highway shall apply to dogs found at large in contravention of any order made in pursuance of this section" (ib.).

Penalties under this Act are recoverable in manner provided by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts (s. 4).

The local authority is:—in Dublin, and towns corporate, the corporation; in towns having commissioners, the commissioners; elsewhere, the justices for the petty sessions of the district (s. 5, sch.). Dangerous is not confined to "dangerous to mankind," so that the fact that a dog has attacked and killed sheep is evidence of its being "dangerous" within the section (Williams v. Richards, (1907) 2 K.B. 88). An order for destruction may be made without giving the owner the option of keeping the dog under control (R. v. Dymock, (1901) 17 T.L.R. 593). It is probable that an order to keep the dog under control should be in general terms, and should not specify the manner of control (see R. v. Owen, (1907) 52 S.J. 132). A dog having bitten a person, was sent by the owner, before the issuing of the information, out of the jurisdiction of the police court of the district, and was out of said jurisdiction at the hearing of the information. The justices found that the dog was the property of the defendant, that there had been no bona fide disposal of it, and made an order for its destruction. Held, that the fact that the dog was sent out of the jurisdiction of the particular court did not prevent the justices from making the order (Lockett v. Withey, (1909) 25 T.L.R. 16). A dog ran out of defendant's house and barked at two foals which were being driven along the road in charge of a man who held each of them by a halter. The foals broke loose and injured themselves. Held, that the defendant was not responsible under the section (Campbell v. Wilkinson, (1909) 43 I.L.T.R. 237, Cir. Cas., Wright, J.).

Where a dog is proved to have injured cattle or chased sheep, it may be dealt with under section 2 of the Dogs Act, 1871, as a dangerous dog (Dogs Act, 1871, s. 2 (4)).

Dangerous Dogs.

Towns Improvement Act, 1854, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 103.

Under the Towns Improvement Act, 1854, s. 72,<sup>1</sup> every person who suffers to be at large any unmuzzled ferocious dog, or sets on or urges any dog or other animal to attack, worry, or put in fear any person or animal, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding 10s.; every owner of any dog who suffers such dog to be at large, knowing or having reasonable ground for believing it to be in a rabid state, or to have been bitten by any dog or other animal in a rabid state, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding 10s.; every person who, after public notice given that dogs are to be confined, suffers any dog to be at large during the time specified in such notice, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding 10s. As to procedure see TOWNS IMPROVEMENT, post.

Stray dogs.

“(1) Where a police officer has reason to believe that any dog found in a highway or place of public resort is a stray dog, he may seize the dog and may detain it until the owner has claimed it and paid all expenses incurred by reason of its detention. (2) Where any dog so seized wears a collar having inscribed thereon or attached thereto the address of any person, or the owner of the dog is known, the chief officer of police, or any person authorized by him in that behalf, shall serve on the person whose address is given on the collar, or on the owner, a notice in writing stating that the dog has been so seized, and will be liable to be sold or destroyed if not claimed within seven clear days after the service of the notice. (3) A notice under this section may be served either—(a) by delivering it to the person on whom it is to be served; or (b) by leaving it at that person's usual or last-known place of abode, or at the address given on the collar; or (c) by forwarding it by post in a prepaid letter addressed to that person at his usual or last-known place of abode, or at the address given on the collar. (4) Where any dog so seized has been detained for seven clear days after the seizure, or, in the case of such a notice as aforesaid having been served with respect to the dog, then for seven clear days after the service of the notice, and the owner has not claimed the dog and paid all expenses incurred by reason of its detention, the chief officer of police, or any person authorized by him in that behalf, may cause the dog to be sold or destroyed in a manner to cause as little pain as possible. (5) No dog so seized shall be given or sold for the purposes of vivisection. (6) The chief officer of police of a police area shall keep, or cause to be kept, one or more registers of all dogs seized under this section in that area which are not transferred to an establishment for the reception of stray dogs. The register shall contain a brief description of the dog, the date of seizure, and particulars as to the manner in which the dog is disposed of, and every such register shall be open to inspection at all reasonable times by any member of the public on payment of a fee of 1s. (7) The police shall not dispose of any dog seized under this section by transferring it to an establishment for the reception of stray dogs, unless a register is kept for that establishment containing such particulars as to dogs received in the establishment as are above mentioned, and such register is open to inspection by the public on payment of a fee not exceeding 1s. (8) The police officer or other person having charge of any dog detained under this section shall cause the dog to be properly fed and maintained” (Dogs Act, 1906, s. 3).

6 Ed. 7, c. 32.

The expressions “chief officer of police,” and “police area,” respectively mean, as regards the Dublin metropolitan police district, the said district, and either of the commissioners of police thereof, and elsewhere the district inspector Royal Irish constabulary, and the district over which he is appointed (s. 9 (b)).

"Any person who takes possession of a stray dog shall forthwith either return the dog to its owner or give notice in writing to the chief officer of police of the district where the dog was found, containing a description of the dog, and stating the place where the dog was found, and the place where the dog is being detained, and any person failing to comply with the provisions of this section shall be liable, on conviction under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, to a fine not exceeding 40s." (s. 4).

Stray Dogs.

"Any person who shall in any public road or street of a town set on or urge any dog or other animal to attack or worry any person, horse, or other animal"—Penalty, not exceeding 10s. (Summary Jurisdiction (Ir.) Act, 1851, s. 10 (1)). Like provisions in Towns Improvement Act, 1854, s. 72, see p. 492, ante.

Setting on dog.

Any person who shall knowingly and without reasonable excuse permit the carcase of any head of cattle (including horses, mules, asses, sheep, goats, and swine, see s. 7) belonging to him to remain unburied in a field or other place to which dogs can gain access shall be liable on conviction under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts to a fine not exceeding 40s. (Dogs Act, 1906, s. 6).

Burying carcase.

The Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland may make orders under the Diseases of Animals Act, 1894, s. 22, for the following purposes:—for prescribing the seizure, detention, and disposal (including the slaughter) of stray dogs, and of dogs not muzzled, and dogs not kept under control, and the recovery from the owners of the expenses incurred in respect of their detention; for prescribing and regulating the wearing by dogs, while in a highway or place of public resort, of a collar with the name and address of the owner inscribed on the collar, or on a plate or badge attached thereto, with a view to the prevention of worrying of cattle, for preventing any dogs or any class of dogs from straying during all or any of the hours between sunset and sunrise, as if that section included such purposes.<sup>1</sup>

Orders by Department of Agriculture. 57 &amp; 58 Vict. c. 57.

Such orders may provide that any dog in respect of which an offence is committed against the orders may be seized and treated as a stray dog (Dogs Act, 1906, ss. 22, 9 (a)). As to penalties for breach of such orders and procedure, see ANIMALS, DISEASES OF, ante.

A regulation made under the section provided that dogs should wear a collar, but exempted any pack of hounds or any dog while being used for sporting purposes. A farmer walked a foxhound puppy for a certain hunt, the dog having the initial letter of the hunt and the number of the litter marked on its ear. The dog was found on the highway without a collar. The dog belonged to the hunt, and was registered as one of the pack of hounds. Held, that as the dog belonged to the pack of hounds, the regulation did not apply (Burton v. Atkinson, (1908) 21 Cox 575; see also Rasdall v. Coleman, (1909) 25 T.L.R. 638).

As to the civil jurisdiction of justices under s. 1 of this Act to award compensation in respect of damages to cattle by dogs, see p. 167.

<sup>1</sup> Such orders, each applying to a particular county, have been made as regards several counties. For an example of such an order see the Irish Law Times, 1907, Appendix of Rules, p. 10.

Opening drains, &c.
5 & 6 Vict.
c. 89, s. 132.

"If any person, other than such persons as are authorized by virtue of this Act, shall at any time draw or open any of the cloughs, sluices, or canals, which shall be made under the authority of this Act, or shall wilfully or maliciously let off the water of any of the said reservoirs, rivers, canals, or drains"—Penalty, not exceeding £20 (Drainage (Ir.) Act, 1842, s. 132).

Obstructing rivers, &c.
s. 134.

"If any person shall throw or deposit any ballast, gravel, or other matter or thing, so as to interrupt or obstruct the free passage of water through, or the navigation of any of the rivers, streams, watercourses, or any of the cuts, sluices, or canals, which shall have been improved by the said commissioners under this Act, or shall, without the consent of the said commissioners, lay any ballast, gravel, stones, dirt, rubbish, lime, timbers, or clay, on any of the banks, locks, or trackways of any of the rivers, drains, canals, or side-cuts aforesaid, or if any person shall maliciously open any lock, sluice, dam, gate, or watercourse, belonging to the said navigation or drainage, or shall so leave any of the same open after any boat has passed, or otherwise maliciously mis-spend or waste the water of the said navigation, or shall raise any wall, building, or other obstruction in said drains, canals, rivers, or streams, without the consent in writing of the commissioners"—Penalty, not exceeding £10; obstructions may be forthwith removed by commissioners, and materials sold to defray cost of removal (s. 134).

19 & 20 Vict.
c. 62

"If any person shall throw or deposit any ballast, gravel, or other matter or thing, so as to interrupt or obstruct the free passage of water or vessels into, through, or in any of the said navigations, or any of the cuts, sluices, or canals, or any of the off-branches, or shall, without the consent of the said trustees, lay any ballast, gravel, stones, dirt, rubbish, lime, timbers, or clay on any of the banks, locks, or trackways of any of the navigations aforesaid, or do any other damage to the said navigations, or any of them, or if any person shall maliciously open any lock, sluice, dam, gate, or watercourse, belonging to any of the said navigations, or shall so leave any of the same open after any boat has passed, or otherwise mis-spend or waste the water of any of the said navigations, every such person on summary conviction of any of the offences aforesaid shall be subject to a penalty not exceeding £10" (Drainage (Ir.) Act, 1856, s. 34).

Under the Drainage (Ireland) Act, 1856, trustees have power to make bye-laws for regulating the management, &c., of the works, &c., under their control, and to impose fines for offences against bye-laws (s. 32); the production of a written or printed copy of the bye-laws authenticated by the seal of the trustees to be evidence (s. 33); if any offence be continued after notice, it shall be considered a new offence, subject to a penalty not exceeding £5 a day (s. 35); penalty on persons assaulting trustees, officers, &c., in execution of the Act, not exceeding £5 (s. 36).

"If any person shall wilfully throw or place any stones, gravel, or other material in any stream, river, or watercourse, and thereby, or by any other means, create any obstruction in the free discharge of the waters therein, whereby the lands of any other person or persons may be flooded, or in any manner injured"—Penalty, not exceeding £5, to be paid to person aggrieved in case of injury to private property; justices may direct removal of obstruction and include the expense of removal in their order as to costs; the section not to extend to a case where the person complained of acted under a fair reasonable supposition that he had a right to do the act complained of (Drainage (Ir.) Act, 1842, s. 152).

"Any person who wilfully obstructs any person making any drains or improvements in drains, in pursuance of this Act, and any person who wilfully dams up, obstructs, or in any way injures any drains or improvements in drains so opened or made, shall for each offence incur a penalty not exceeding £10, to be recovered in a summary manner before two or more justices at petty sessions" (Land Drainage (I.) Act, 1863, s. 13).

For procedure under this statute as to compulsory powers to enter lands for the purpose of the Act, see CIVIL JURISDICTION, p. 181, ante.

Assaulting commissioners or their servants, or wilfully destroying tools, &c.—Penalty not exceeding £5 (Drainage Act, 1842, s. 135).

17 & 18 Vict. c. 103, s. 72 (30).

<sup>1</sup> A justice of the peace, district-inspector, or constable thereto authorized by justice, may enter and arrest persons found drunk in licensed premises during prohibited hours (6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 38, s. 6). As to refusal to leave when required, see INTOXICATING LIQUOR.

<sup>2</sup> This section does not affect the power of a constable to bring such person before a justice under s. 12 of the Act of Wm. 4, supra, and a constable in practice does so bring a person whose name and address he does not know, or who is not likely to appear on summons.

within the Act) is liable to a penalty not exceeding 40s., or imprisonment not exceeding seven days (Towns Improvement (Ireland) Act, 1854, s. 72). Half of the penalty shall go to the informer, and the other half to the commissioners (s. 92). A constable can prosecute under this section without obtaining the consent of the Attorney-General, and, on conviction, is entitled to half the penalty, the other half going to the town commissioners (Coulter v. Martin, (1887) I.R. 11 C.L. 477).

Drunkenness
cognizable out of session.

A charge of simple drunkenness can be heard out of petty sessions (Petty Sessions Act, 1851, s. 8 (2)). As to Dublin, see DUBLIN METROPOLITAN POLICE DISTRICT.

Drunkenness on licensed premises.

As regards drunkenness on licensed premises, a customer, not being an inmate or lodger, who is drunk in a public-house after closing hour can be convicted under section 12 of the Licensing Act, 1872 (R. v. Pelly, (1897) 2 Q.B. 33). If a licensed person is drunk on his own premises while they are closed, he cannot be convicted under the section; but he can be convicted if drunk while the premises are open (Lester v. Torrens, (1877) 2 Q.B.D. 403). See also INTOXICATING LIQUOR.

Other offences
8 Ed. 7. c. 24.

Drunkenness while in charge of any person or animal or vehicle, or in possession of any loaded firearm or dangerous instrument, tool, or article—Penalty, not exceeding 40s., or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding one month (Summary Jurisdiction (Ireland) Act, 1908, s. 7). Owner or manager of any premises may require constable on duty to arrest and remove from such premises any person in his employment who is found drunk thereon (s. 8). Person found drunk in any place, whether a building or not, to which the public have access, whether on payment or not, or on any licensed premises, while in charge of a child, apparently under the age of seven years, may be apprehended, and shall, if the child is under that age, be liable to fine not exceeding 40s., or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding one month (s. 9). If the child appears to the Court to be under seven, the onus of proving that it is over seven lies on the accused (ib.).

Probation of offenders.
7 Ed. 7.
c. 17.

The Probation of Offenders Act, 1907 (verbatim, APPENDIX OF STATUTES), authorizes a court of summary jurisdiction before whom an offence is proved to have been committed to (inter alia) release the offender conditionally on his entering into recognizances, with or without sureties, to be of good behaviour, and to appear for judgment when called on at such time, not exceeding three years, as may be specified in the order (s. 1). Such recognizance may contain certain additional conditions, including a condition as to abstention from intoxicating liquor, where the offence was drunkenness or an offence committed under the influence of drink (s. 2).

There is no power under the Act to order defendant to enter into a recognizance to abstain from intoxicating liquor unless the offence is one of drunkenness, or is committed under the influence of drink (R. v. Davies, (1909) 1 K.B. 892).

Habitual drunkards.

The Acts governing the compulsory education of children in Ireland are the Irish Education Act, 1892, and the Irish Education Act, 1893, the latter being merely an amending Act. The two Acts are to be construed as one (s. 3 of the Act of 1893).

The first fourteen sections of the Act of 1892 apply to every place which is a municipal borough, for which place the council or commissioners are the local authority for the purposes of the Act (Irish Education Act, 1892, s. 15 (1)).

Any county council may by resolution,<sup>1</sup> and shall on application made by any rural district council with reference to their rural district, or any part thereof, apply the first fourteen sections of the Act to any part of their county, and thereupon the county council shall be, for the purposes of the Act, the local authority of the place to which it is so applied (ib., s. 15 (2); Local Government (Ir.) Act, 1898, s. 74 (1)).

The Commissioners of National Education may, with such consent as is specified in s. 15 (3), apply the first fourteen sections of the Act to any area adjoining, but outside, a municipal borough, or town, or township under commissioners, whereupon they shall be carried out by the local authority and school attendance committee (see post) of the borough, town, or township that such area adjoins, until applied to such area by resolution of a council, as if such area were within such borough, town, or township (s. 15 (3)). A copy of the Dublin Gazette shall be conclusive evidence that such order was duly made and published in accordance with that subsection, and of the date and contents of such order (s. 15 (4)).

The first fourteen sections, so far as justices are concerned with them, are as follows :—

“(1) In every place to which this section applies, the parent<sup>2</sup> of every child not less than six nor more than fourteen years of age shall cause the child to attend school during such number of days in the year and for such time on each day of attendance as are prescribed in the first Schedule<sup>3</sup> to this Act unless there is a reasonable excuse for non-attendance. (2) Provided that a child over eleven years of age shall not be required to attend school if the child has received such certificate of his proficiency in reading, writing, and elementary arithmetic as is prescribed in the

Duty of parent to send child to school.

<sup>3</sup> This schedule is as follows :—“The number of attendances for the purposes of the first section of this Act shall be seventy-five complete attendances in each half year ending respectively the thirtieth day of June and the thirty-first day of December at any national or other efficient school.” No definition of the term “efficient school” is given. The question as to whether any school, other than a national school, that has been attended is or is not an efficient school, is a question of fact for the justices in each case.

second schedule<sup>1</sup> to this Act. (3) Any of the following reasons shall be a reasonable excuse for non-attendance of a child: namely—(a) That there is not within two miles, measured according to the nearest road, from the residence of the child, any national school or other efficient school at which the child can attend, and to which the parent of the child does not object, on religious grounds, to send the child; (b) That the child has been prevented from attending school by sickness, domestic necessity, or by reason of being engaged in necessary operations of husbandry and the in-gathering of crops, or giving assistance in the fisheries, or other work requiring to be done at a particular time or season, or other unavoidable or reasonable cause; (c) That the child, being under seven years of age, lives at too great a distance from any national school, or other efficient school which he can attend, even though that distance is less than two miles; (d) That the child is receiving suitable elementary education in some other manner” (s. 1).

Truancy is apparently not an answer to an application under this section; but may afford a defence if it is sought to punish the parent under s. 4 (see London County Council v. Hearn, (1909) 73 J.P. 211, noted infra).

School attendance
committee.

Attendance order, and enforcement thereof.

The appointment of a school attendance committee for every place to which the Act applies is provided for by s. 3.

“(1) If any parent who is required by this Act to cause his child to attend school makes default without reasonable excuse in so doing, the school attendance committee shall, after due warning<sup>2</sup> to the parent, make a complaint to a court of summary jurisdiction, unless they think that it is inexpedient to take such proceedings; and the court, if satisfied of the truth of the complaint, may make an order<sup>3</sup> (in this Act called an attendance order) that the child do attend, in accordance with the requirements of this Act, some national school or other efficient school, and, subject to the provisions of section 1 of this Act, the child shall attend some such school in such regular manner as is specified in the order. (2) If the school attendance committee have reason to believe that an attendance order<sup>4</sup> has not been complied with, and that there is not any reasonable excuse, within the meaning of this Act, for non-compliance therewith, they may make a further complaint to a court of summary jurisdiction, and thereupon, if the parent does not satisfy the court that the order has been complied with, or that he has used all reasonable efforts to comply therewith, the court may impose on him a fine not exceeding, including costs, 5s. (3) A complaint under this section with respect to a continuing non-compliance with an attendance-order shall not be repeated by the school attendance committee at any less interval than two months” (s. 4).

In Belper School Attendance Committee v. Bailey, (1882) 9 Q.B.D. 259, it was held, on the construction of a bye-law,<sup>5</sup> that there might be other reasonable excuses than those enumerated in the bye-law, and that truancy which the parent had used reasonable efforts to prevent was a “reasonable excuse.” In Hewett v. Thompson, (1889) 60 L.T. 268, <sup>1</sup> This schedule is as follows:—“(2) A certificate of proficiency for the purposes of this Act shall be a certificate issued by the principal teacher of the school which the child has last attended of such proficiency in reading, writing, and elementary arithmetic as is now prescribed for the fourth class in the programme of instruction of the Commissioners, or such higher proficiency as may hereafter be prescribed by them.” The term “Commissioners” means Commissioners of National Education (56 & 57 Vict. c. 41, s. 2).

<sup>5</sup> Providing that a parent should, under a penalty, send his child to school, unless there was a “reasonable excuse” for non-attendance, and then enumerating “reasonable excuses.”

decided on the construction of the English Elementary Education Act, 1876, 39 & 40 Vict. c. 79,<sup>1</sup> it was held that, to give the magistrate jurisdiction to order a boy to be sent to an industrial school under s. 12 of that Act, truancy was not a "reasonable excuse" within s. 11, "reasonable excuses" being limited to those specified in s. 11. In London County Council v. Hearn, (1909) 73 J.P. 211, the magistrate found that the irregular attendance of the child was not owing in any way to neglect on the part of the parent, but was due to truancy on the part of the child, and dismissed an application for an attendance order against the parent. Held, that the magistrate was wrong, and that the order should have been made. "I think the order ought to be made, mainly upon the ground that the object of the attendance order is to give control over the matter, so that if necessary in a proper case the parent may be fined, or that in a proper case where the parent is not at fault the child may be dealt with . . . I express no opinion as to what may be a proper or sufficient answer by the parent when there is a summons issued under s. 12, asking that he should be fined, and he desires to prove to the court that he has used all reasonable efforts to enforce compliance with the order. In my judgment, when a child is absent from the school so as to show that there is an habitual neglect to provide efficient elementary instruction under s. 11, construed as I have construed it, the magistrate ought to make an order for attendance . . . There may be the necessity for an attendance order being made in consequence of the child in fact not attending school, although it may be quite possible that if the parent is afterwards summoned under s. 12, he will have a good answer in so far as the personal punishment of himself is concerned" (ib., per Lord Alverstone, C.J.). "It seems to me that if the parent appears and shows that he has done all that he reasonably could, having regard to all the circumstances, to get the child to go to school, then he could not be fined under s. 12, and if he does satisfy the court that, in the circumstances, the child is practically uncontrollable, and that he cannot prevent the truancy, then the section provides what is to be done" (ib., per Walton, J.).

Attendance order and enforcement thereof.

There is no power to award costs under s. 4 (1), in respect of obtaining an attendance order (Glasgow v. Henry, (1907) 41 I.L.T.R. 245).

"(1) A person shall not, except as in this Act mentioned, take into his employment in any place to which this section applies, any child, except for the setting or planting potatoes, haymaking, or harvesting, (i) who is under the age of eleven years; or (ii) who, being of the age of eleven years or upwards, and less than fourteen years of age, has not obtained such certificate of his proficiency in reading, writing, and elementary arithmetic, as is prescribed in the second schedule<sup>2</sup> to this Act, unless the child is employed and is attending school in accordance with the [Factory and Workshop Acts, 1878 to 1891<sup>3</sup>], but no employer shall compel a child to attend a school to which its parent objects on Prohibition of employment of children required to attend school.

<sup>2</sup> That is, a certificate issued by the principal teacher of the school which the child has last attended, of such proficiency in reading, writing, and elementary arithmetic, as is now prescribed for the fourth class in the programme of the Commissioners, or such higher proficiency as may hereafter be prescribed by them (schedule 2).

<sup>3</sup> These Acts have been repealed by the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Ed. 7, c. 22), s. 161, except as regards certain sections of the Act of 1891 which did not deal with the attendance at school of children. But the provisions of the Factory and Workshop Acts, 1878 to 1891, as to the attendance at school of children have been, by force of the Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 38 (1), replaced (see p. 334, ante) by the provisions as to the attendance at school of children contained in ss. 68 & 69 (for which see APPENDIX OF STATUTES) of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901. Consequently the words "Factory and Workshop Act, 1901," must now be read instead of the words "Factory and Workshop Acts, 1878 to 1891."

religious grounds. (2) If any person acts in contravention of this section, he shall be liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding 40s." (Irish Education Act, 1892, s. 2).

Exceptions to prohibition of employment of children.

"A person shall not be deemed to have taken a child into his employment in contravention of this Act, if it is proved to the satisfaction of the court having cognizance of the case either—(1) that during the employment there is not within two miles, measured according to the nearest road, from the residence of the child, any national school or other efficient school which the child can attend, subject to the provisions of section one of this Act; or (2) that the employment, by reason of being during the school holidays, or during the hours during which the school is not open, or otherwise, does not interfere with the efficient elementary instruction of the child, and that the child obtains such instruction by attendance, in accordance with the requirements of this Act, at a national school, or in some other equally efficient manner" (s. 5).

Exemptions.

"(1) Where the offence of taking a child into employment in contravention of this Act is in fact committed by an agent or workman of the employer, that agent or workman shall be liable to a fine as if he were the employer. (2) Where a child is taken into employment in contravention of this Act on the production by or with the privity of the parent of a false or forged certificate, or on the false representation of his parent that the child is of an age at which the employment is not in contravention of this Act, that parent shall be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding 40s. (3) Where an employer, charged with taking a child into his employment in contravention of this Act, proves that he has used due diligence to enforce the observance of this Act, and either that some agent or workman of his employed the child without his knowledge or consent or that the child was employed either on the production of a forged or false certificate and under the belief in good faith in the genuineness and truth of the certificate, or on the representation by his parent that the child was of an age at which his employment would not be in contravention of this Act, and under the belief in good faith in the representation, the employer shall be exempt from any fine. (4) Where an employer satisfies the person about to institute a prosecution that he is exempt under this section by reason of some agent, workman, or parent being guilty, and gives all facilities in his power for proceeding against and convicting that agent, workman, or parent, proceedings shall be instituted against that agent, workman, or parent, and not against the employer" (s. 6).

Authority to prosecute.

"No legal proceedings for non-attendance or irregular attendance at school shall be commenced in a court of summary jurisdiction by any person on behalf of a school attendance committee, except by the direction of not less than three members of the said committee" (s. 8).

Register.

The keeping of registers by school attendance committees and national school teachers is provided for (s. 9).

Meaning of "parent."

"For the purposes of this Act the expression 'parent' shall include the guardian of a child, and every person who is liable to maintain or has the actual custody of the child" (s. 13).

A parent cannot evade his liability under the Act by allowing the child to live with some other person (London School Board v. Jackson, (1881) 7 Q.B.D. 502). The extension of the term "parent" to include "guardian" is intended to meet cases where there is no parent, and possibly cases where the child permanently resides away from its parent (ib., per Pollock, B.).

Forgery, false entries, and false information.

"If any person forges or counterfeits any certificate which is by this Act made evidence of any matter, or gives or signs any such certificate which is, to his knowledge, false in any material particular, or knowing any such certificate to be forged or counterfeit, makes use thereof, or makes or knowingly uses any false entry in any register kept in pursuance of this Act, he shall be liable on summary conviction to imprisonment for a period not exceeding three months, with or without hard labour" (s. 14).

"(1) For the purposes of this Act a court of summary jurisdiction shall be constituted of not less than two justices of the peace, or of a divisional justice of Dublin metropolis, and every judgment of such court imposing a penalty shall be subject to appeal. (2) Any justice of the peace may by summons require any parent of a child required under this Act to attend school to produce the child before a court of summary jurisdiction; and any person failing without reasonable excuse to the satisfaction of the court to comply with such a summons shall be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding 20s. (3) A certificate purporting to be under the hand of the principal teacher of a national school, or other efficient school, stating that a child is or is not attending the school or stating the particulars of the attendance of a child at the school, shall be conclusive evidence of the facts stated in the certificate. (4) A certificate purporting to be under the hand of the dispensary medical officer of any district, stating that a child is ill, or that there is illness in the family of the child, or where the child resides, shall be conclusive evidence of the facts. (5) When a child is apparently of the age alleged by the complainant in the course of any proceedings under this Act, it shall lie on the defendant to prove that the child is not of that age. (6) Any person may appear in any proceedings under this Act by any member of his family or any other person authorized by him in this behalf. (7) A school attendance committee may appear in any such proceedings by any person appointed by them in that behalf" (s. 7).

Section 3 (5) provides that the expenses of the committee shall be defrayed out of the local rate, "but any revenue from penalties in the place or district shall be applied in relief of the local rate." These words do not authorize the justices to award the school attendance committee as complainants the entire of the penalty, but only such portion as can be awarded to them under section 13 of the Fines Act (Ireland), 1851, or the Petty Sessions (Ireland) Act, 1851, s. 22 (8), that is to say, a sum not exceeding one-third of the fine, the remainder being payable to the Crown (R. (Co. Council of Dublin) v. Keating, (1908) 2 I.R. 375).

ELECTION OFFENCES.

Illegal practices<sup>1</sup> at Parliamentary elections are punishable on summary conviction—Penalty, not exceeding £100, and the offender is incapacitated for five years from being registered or voting as an elector within the county or borough in which the illegal practice was committed (Corrupt and Illegal Practices (Prevention) Act, 1883, s. 10). Any person charged with a corrupt practice may, if the circumstances warrant such finding, be found guilty of an illegal practice (which offence shall for that Illegal practices at parliamentary elections. 46 & 47 Vict. c. 51.

<sup>1</sup> As regards elections, sections 7, 8, 9, 18, 21 (2), 28 (2), and 29 (2) (4) declare certain things to be "illegal practices"; sections 13, 15, and 16 declare certain payments to be "illegal payments"; sections 14 and 20 declare certain hirings to be "illegal hirings," and s. 17 declares certain forms of employment to be "illegal employments." Corrupt practices include bribery, treating, undue influence, personation, false declaration as to election expenses (s. 3). Corrupt intention is of the essence of a corrupt practice. A corrupt practice is a thing the mind goes with. An illegal practice is a thing the legislature is determined to prevent, whether it is done honestly or dishonestly (Barrow-in-Furness, (1886) 4 O'M. & H. 77, per Field, J.). Corrupt practices are not triable summarily.

The offences of illegal payment, illegal employment, and illegal hiring are also punishable summarily by fine, not exceeding £100 (s. 21 (1)).

Prosecutions under the Act must be instituted within one year after the commission of the offence, or within three months after the report of the election commissioners, whichever last expires, so that in any event it be commenced within two years after the commission of the offence (s. 51 (1)). The Summary Jurisdiction Acts<sup>1</sup> are applicable, and a person aggrieved by any conviction may appeal (s. 54).

Like penalties, recoverable on summary conviction, with the like right of appeal, are enacted in respect of the like offences by the Municipal Election (Corrupt and Illegal Practices) Act, 1884, ss. 7, 17, 30 (as applied by various orders under the Local Government (Ir.) Act, 1898).

The Explosives Act, 1875, and Orders in Council and Home Office orders made thereunder contain numerous provisions with regard to the manufacture, storing, conveyance, and sale of gunpowder and other explosives. The following are included in the term “explosives”:—gunpowder, nitro-glycerine, dynamite, gun-cotton, blasting-powders, fulminate of mercury, or of other metals, coloured fires, and every other substance, whether similar to those above mentioned or not, used or manufactured with a view to produce a practical effect by explosion or a pyrotechnic effect, including fog-signals, fireworks, fuses, rockets, percussion-caps, detonators, cartridges, ammunition of all descriptions, and every adaptation or preparation of an explosive as above defined (s. 3); to which are added, by orders made in pursuance of s. 104 of the Act, picric-acid, picrates, and acetylene. Section 104 authorizes the extension, by Order in Council, of the definition of explosive to other explosives, and s. 106 the definition and classification, by order in Council, of explosives. No objection can be made to the legality of any order in Council, or order of Secretary of State, purporting to be made in pursuance of the Act (s. 83). Bye-laws, notices, and documents shall, save where otherwise provided, be published in the places affected by advertisement, or by placards or handbills, as the Secretary of State may direct (s. 84).

To be manufactured only at factory lawfully existing, or factory licensed under the Act (s. 4); application for licence, with sanction of Secretary of State, to local authority (ss. 6–8); rules and regulations of factories and magazines (ss. 9–11); supplemental (ss. 12, 13); existing factories (s. 14).

Gunpowder, except for private use, to be kept only in (a) factory; (b) magazine or store, either lawfully existing or licensed under the Act; or (c) premises registered under the Act for keeping gunpowder. This section not to apply to a person keeping for private use an amount not exceeding 30lb.; or the keeping of gunpowder by a carrier or other person for the purpose of conveyance in accordance with the provisions as to conveyance. Penalty—forfeiture of gunpowder, and fine not exceeding 2s. for every pound of gunpowder illegally stored (s. 5).

A licence for storing may be granted in accordance with the provisions of Order in Council made in pursuance of Act (s. 15). General rules for stores, store licences, and for workmen (ss. 17, 19). Form and renewal of store licence, not to be transferable (s. 18). Application to existing stores (s. 20).

Premises to be registered with local authority (s. 21), and to be subject to certain rules (s. 22); precautions against fire (s. 23); explanation as to quantities of gunpowder allowable (ss. 24, 25, 27); fees for licences (s. 26); register of store licences and registered premises to be kept by local authority (s. 28); provision in case of death of occupier (s. 29).

“Gunpowder shall not be hawked, sold, or exposed for sale upon any highway, street, public thoroughfare, or public place”—Penalty, not exceeding 40s. and forfeiture (s. 30). Gunpowder shall not be sold to any

"All gunpowder exceeding 11lb. in weight, when publicly exposed for sale or sold, shall be in a substantial case, bag, canister, or other receptacle, made and closed so as to prevent the gunpowder from escaping, and (except when the same is sold to any person employed by or on the property occupied by the vendor for immediate use in the service of the vendor or on such property), the outermost receptacle containing such gunpowder shall have affixed the word 'Gunpowder' in conspicuous characters, by means of a brand, or securely attached label, or other mark"—Penalty, not exceeding 40s., and forfeiture of gunpowder (s. 32).

No gunpowder shall be sold within a town<sup>1</sup> by candle or other artificial light—Penalty, not exceeding £1. No person shall keep at any time more than 10lb. of gunpowder, except by special permission of the commissioners, signed by the chairman and two commissioners, and subject to regulations—Penalty, for first offence, not exceeding £1; for second offence, not exceeding £3; for the third, or any subsequent offence, not exceeding £5, besides the forfeiture of the gunpowder (Towns Improvement Act, 1854, s. 56).

17 & 18 Vict.
c. 103.

Conveyance of gunpowder.

General rules as to packing of gunpowder for conveyance (Explosives Act, 1875, s. 33); bye-laws by harbour authority (s. 34); bye-laws by railway and canal company (s. 35); bye-laws as to wharves (s. 36); bye-laws by Secretary of State as to conveyance by road or otherwise, or loading of gunpowder (s. 37); confirmation and publication of bye-laws (s. 38).

Other explosives.
Administration of law.

Part I of the Explosives Act of 1875 is applied to other explosives, with certain modifications (ss. 39-51).

Inspectors may be appointed by Secretary of State (s. 53), who shall have power to enter and inspect factories, registered premises, and to require samples—penalty, not exceeding £100 (s. 55); and serve notice to remedy dangerous matters—penalty, not exceeding £20 a day for non-compliance; with arbitration clause (s. 56); other provisions as to powers and duties of government inspectors (ss. 57-62). Notice of accidents to be given by occupier of factory or premises to the Secretary of State—Penalty, not exceeding £20 (s. 63); reconstruction of buildings destroyed by accident (s. 64); duty and power of coroner to adjourn inquest unless inspector, or some person on behalf of the Secretary of State, is present to watch the proceedings, the coroner to send four days' notice of an inquest to Secretary of State (s. 65); special inquiry, by directions of Secretary of State, into explosions, and formal investigation in serious cases (s. 66); undertaking of carriage by harbour authority and canal company (s. 71); provision of magazines by local authority (s. 72); powers of search to government inspector, and constable or officer of local authority when authorized by justices' warrant, or, in case of emergency, by written order from superintending officer or inspector of police (s. 73); seizure and detention of explosives liable to forfeiture (s. 74); inspection of wharf, carriage, boat, &c., with explosives in transit (s. 75); right of inspector to get samples on tender of reasonable sum (s. 76); penalty, not exceeding £5, on, and removal of, trespassers from factories and stores, and penalty, not exceeding £50 on trespasser doing acts likely to cause fire, etc. (s. 77); arrest without warrant of person committing dangerous offence (s. 78); imprisonment for wilful act or neglect endangering life or limb (s. 79); throwing fireworks in thoroughfare—penalty, not exceeding £5 (s. 80); forgery and falsification of documents—penalty, imprisonment with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years (s. 81); defacing notice—penalty, not exceeding £2 (s. 82); provisions as to Orders in Councils and Orders of Secretary of State, publication of bye-laws, notices &c. (ss. 83–86).

Exemption of occupier from penalty upon proof of another being real offender (s. 87); of owner and master of ship where consignee, &c., in default (s. 88); supplemental provisions as to forfeiture of explosive (s. 89); jurisdiction in tidal-waters or boundaries (s. 90). Every offence under the Act may be prosecuted either on indictment or before a court of summary jurisdiction in manner directed by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, provided that the penalty imposed by a court of summary jurisdiction shall not exceed £100, exclusive of costs, and exclusive of any forfeiture, or penalty in lieu of forfeiture, and the term of imprisonment shall not exceed one month (s. 91). A court of summary jurisdiction may prohibit the doing of a thing for which the offender has been twice convicted—Penalty on breach, imprisonment not exceeding six months (ib.). Where the penalty for which the offence charged is liable exceeds £100, the accused may elect to be tried on indictment (s. 92). Right of appeal is given where the sum adjudged to be paid, including costs, and including the value of any forfeiture, exceeds £20, the appeal to be in manner provided in respect of appeals in larceny cases by s. 110 of the Larceny Act, 1861 (s. 93).<sup>1</sup> Court of summary jurisdiction to be constituted of two or more justices of the peace (s. 94).

The Acts relating to summary jurisdiction as to fisheries in Ireland are as follows:—

Acts relating to summary
jurisdiction.

The Fisheries (Ir.) Acts, 1842, 1844, 1845, 1848, and 1850 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 106; 7 & 8 Vict. c. 108; 8 & 9 Vict. c. 108; 11 & 12 Vict. c. 92, and 13 & 14 Vict. c. 88); the Salmon Acts Amendment Act, 1863 (26 Vict. c. 10); the Salmon Fishery (Ir.) Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 114); the Oyster Beds (Ir.) Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 88); the Oyster Fishery (Ir.) Amendment Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 97); the Salmon Fishery (Ir.) Act, 1869 (32 Vict. c. 9); and the Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 92) (all of which Acts are to be construed as one—see s. 20 of the Act of 1869); the Salmon Acts Amendment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 33), which amends the Salmon Fishery (Ir.) Act, 1863; the Pollen Fishing (Ir.) Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 66), which extends the provisions of the Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1869; the Oyster Cultivation (Ir.) Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 48); the Steam Trawling (Ir.) Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 74); the Pollen Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 20), which (see s. 2) is to be construed as one with the Salmon Fishery Acts in force in Ireland at the date of its being passed, that is to say with the Acts above enumerated; the Fishery (Ir.) Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 30), extending the powers of fishery inspectors under s. 91 of the Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1842; the Mussels, Periwinkles, and Cockles (Ir.) Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 28), which, by s. 1, incorporates the procedure sections of the Act of 1842 and the other Acts to be read as one with that Act; the Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1901 (1 Ed. 7, c. 38).<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> The Larceny Act, 1861, also creates certain offences as to poaching; see p. 440, post. The procedure will be regulated by the Petty Sessions Act. See also the Trawling in Prohibited Areas Prevention Act, 1909, noted p. 454, post, which creates a new offence under the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876, and the Whale Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1908, in Procedure.

Generally.
Costs.

The procedure under the above statutes is regulated by the Summary Jurisdiction (Ir.) Acts,<sup>1</sup> with the following variations:—

The justices may award to the successful party the costs, charges, and expenses<sup>2</sup> of and incidental to the proceedings, without limiting themselves to the maximum of 20s. fixed by s. 22 of the Petty Sessions Act (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1842, s. 94; Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1850, s. 54; Hosford v. Devine, (1898) 2 I.R. 28; B. (Coleman) v. Pettit, (1902) 2 I.R. 1).

Appeal.

Besides the ordinary right of appeal given to a defendant under s. 24 of the Petty Sessions Act,<sup>3</sup> the following special rights of appeal are given:—

(a) An unsuccessful complainant can appeal, the appeal to be taken in manner provided by s. 24 of the Petty Sessions Act, and the amount of the recognizance to be such as to the justices shall seem reasonable (County Officers and Courts (Ir.) Act, 1877, s. 74).<sup>4</sup>

(b) Probably the right of appeal to the judge of assize given by the Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1850, s. 51 (read along with the Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1842, s. 99, now repealed, but in force in 1850), to any person aggrieved by any judgment, order, proceeding, or conviction in respect of any fixed net, weir, or engine may still be availed of. Apart from this enactment no right of appeal exists from any order for the abatement or forfeiture of an alleged illegal engine, unless such order imposes a penalty exceeding 20s., or unless it were to be held that an order<sup>5</sup> that the engine should be removed at the expense of the offender was, on the facts of any particular case, an order within the meaning of s. 24 of the Petty Sessions Act “for the doing of anything at a greater expense than 40s.” It has been suggested (see, for instance, the dictum of Gibson, J., in R. (Alton) v. McAuliffe, (1894) 2 I.R. 127) that a judge of assize has not now jurisdiction to hear such an appeal; but in R. (Alton) v. McAuliffe, supra, as well as in Doran v. Cunningham, (1887) 20 L.R.I. 544, and in McAuliffe's Case (Clare Spring Assizes, 1890, before Lord O'Brien, L.C.J.), such appeals, without objection being taken, were heard at assizes.

to adjudicate.

A justice who is also a conservator is not ipso facto disqualified from adjudicating (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1842, s. 11); but if he has been present at the meeting of conservators at which the prosecution was directed, or has taken any active steps in the matter, he should not sit (R. v. Henley, (1892) 1 Q.B. 504, noted, with other cases on bias, at p. 222, ante).

Limits of
jurisdiction.

Where any offence is committed on a lake or river forming the boundary between two petty sessions districts, such offence may be prosecuted in either district (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1850, s. 47). And as regards offences under those Acts that are committed at sea, justices of counties adjoining the sea coast or any of the estuaries thereof have jurisdiction as if such offences were committed on land within the jurisdiction of such justices (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1842, s. 96; Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1901, s. 1 (5)).

Application of penalties.

All fines, penalties, and forfeitures (with the exception of those under the Oyster Cultivation (Ir.) Act, 1884, and the Steam Trawling (Ir.) Act,

<sup>3</sup> As to which see p. 133, ante. It is submitted that the words in said section, “the doing of anything at a greater expense than 40s.,” do not include the forfeiture or destruction of a net, &c., value for more than 40s. (see p. 132, ante).

<sup>4</sup> The Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1850, s. 52, gave a complainant under the Acts in Class I a right of appeal to the judge of assize. The cases provided for by this enactment have been expressly provided for by s. 74 of the County Officers and Courts (Ir.) Act, 1877, supra; no case of such an appeal having been heard at assizes since 1877 has been discovered; and it is probable that such appeals are not now triable at assizes.

1889) are to be applied as follows:—One-third of each fine, &c., “shall be paid to the person who shall be the means of bringing to justice any person committing any offence against any of the provisions” of those Acts (which, it may be argued, does not necessarily mean the informer or person in whose name the prosecution is brought)—such person to be named by the justices in their order (R. (Quinn) v. Tyrone JJ., (1905) 39 I.L.T. & S.J., p. 166; Paley, 8th ed., p. 304), and the remaining two-thirds shall be paid to the conservators of the district where the offence is committed, or their authorized officer, and is to be applied for the purpose of those Acts for such district (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1869, s. 19).

Procedure.

The application of penalties under the Oyster Cultivation (Ir.) Act, 1884, is governed by section 13 of that Act, under which the court may direct that same may be paid or delivered to the grantees of the fishery, to be applied by them for the improvement and cultivation of the fishery. Penalties and the proceeds of forfeitures under the Steam Trawling (Ir.) Act, 1889, as amended by the Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1901, are payable to the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland (Act of 1901, s. 1 (4)).

Excepting offences under the Fisheries (Dynamite) Act, 1877, the Steam Trawling (Ir.) Act, 1889, the Oyster Cultivation (Ir.) Act, 1884, and the Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1901, it is clear that any person can prosecute as a common informer for any offence under the above statutes (R. (Gibson) v. Fermanagh JJ., (1897) 2 I.R. 603; Midleton v. Gale, (1838) 8 A. & E. 155).

Who may prosecute.

It is submitted that a common informer can prosecute for an offence under the Fisheries (Dynamite) Act, 1877; and it is also submitted that, as regards offences under the Steam Trawling (Ir.) Act, 1889, and Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1901, which seem to be of a public nature,<sup>1</sup> a common informer can prosecute notwithstanding that by the Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1901, s. 1 (4), the penalties under these statutes go to the Department of Agriculture. As to offences under the Oyster Cultivation (Ir.) Act, 1884, the matter seems more doubtful; but probably under that Act also a common informer would be held entitled to prosecute.

A person may prosecute as a common informer, though he has not been an eye-witness of the matter alleged in the complaint (M'Cormack v. Carroll, (1911) 45 I.L.T.R. 7, in which case the prosecution was brought by a fishery inspector in respect of an offence committed outside his district, and not in his presence).

The following are the principal offences under the Fishery (Ireland) Acts, triable at petty sessions:—

“If any person shall kill, take, or destroy any . . . fish in or out of any pond, private canal, or reservoir wherein the same are kept, and wherein he has no property, without the consent or licence of the owner of such pond,” etc.—Penalty, not exceeding £10 (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1842, s. 79).

Poaching.

“If any person or persons shall enter upon any lands or premises for the purpose or under the pretence of fishing or angling in any lake, river, stream, pond, or water without authority in writing from the proprietor or occupier”—Penalty, not exceeding £2 (s. 71).

“If any person or persons not being authorized by the owner, lessee, or occupier of a several fishery<sup>2</sup> . . . shall enter into or upon such several fishery for the purpose or under the pretence of killing fish therein or taking fish therefrom, or shall kill fish therein or take fish therefrom"—Penalty, not less than 10s. or more than £5" (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1848, s. 41).

<sup>2</sup> “Several fisheries” shall mean and include all fisheries lawfully possessed and enjoyed as such under any title whatsoever, being a good and valid title at law, exclusively of the public, by any person or persons, whether in navigable waters or in waters not navigable, and whether the soil covered by such waters be vested in such person or persons, or in any other person or persons” (13 & 14 Vict. c. 88, s. 1).

Poaching.

A prosecution was brought under this section, and the justices ordered the defendant's nets to be forfeited, which was not authorized by this section, but might have been ordered had the proceedings been brought under the Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1842, s. 22. The conviction was quashed (R. (O'Sullivan) v. Kerry JJ., (1901) 1 N.I.J.R. 180).

Taking fish in any water situate in land belonging to a dwelling-house.

In a private fishery elsewhere.

"Whosoever shall unlawfully and wilfully take or destroy any fish in any water which shall run through or be in any land adjoining or belonging to the dwelling house of any person being the owner of such water, or having a right of fishery therein, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour; and whosoever shall unlawfully and wilfully take or destroy, or attempt to take or destroy, any fish in any water not being such as hereinbefore mentioned, but which shall be private property, or in which there shall be any private right of fishery, shall, on conviction thereof before a justice of the peace, forfeit and pay, over and above the value of the fish taken or destroyed (if any), such sum of money, not exceeding five pounds, as to the justice shall seem meet: Provided, that nothing hereinbefore contained shall extend to any person angling between the beginning of the last hour before sunrise and the expiration of the first hour after sunset; but whosoever shall by angling between the beginning of the last hour before sunrise and the expiration of the first hour after sunset unlawfully and wilfully take or destroy, or attempt to take or destroy, any fish in any such water as first mentioned, shall, on conviction before a justice of the peace, forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding five pounds, and if in any such water as last mentioned, he shall, on the like conviction, forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding two pounds as to the justice shall seem meet" (Larceny Act, 1861, s. 24).<sup>1</sup>

Seizure of tackle.

"If any person shall at any time be found fishing against the provisions of this Act, the owner of the ground, water, or fishery where such offender shall be so found, his servant, or any person authorized by him, may demand from such offender any rod, line, hook, net, or other implement for taking or destroying fish which shall then be in his possession, and in case such offender shall not immediately deliver up the same, may seize and take the same from him for the use of such owner: Provided, that any person angling<sup>2</sup> against the provisions of this Act, between the beginning of the last hour before sunrise and the expiration of the first hour after sunset, from whom any implement used by anglers shall be taken, or by whom the same shall be so delivered up, shall by the taking or delivering thereof be exempted from the payment of any damages or penalty for such angling;" (ib., s. 25.)

Rating of fisheries.

By the Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1848, ss. 23, 24, 25, 26, and the Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1850, s. 7, all salmon, trout, and eel fisheries rated for the relief of the poor are subject to an annual rate (in addition to the licence duty paid for the engines used in fishing such fishery) equal to the amount of the difference between the sums paid for such licence duty, and ten per cent. on the poor law valuation of the fishery, such rate to be paid by the person using, occupying, or holding such fishery, whether such occupation and holding shall be by lease, demise, agreement, or tenancy at will, or in fee simple, fee tail, or for life, in two equal half-yearly gales on every 1st February and 1st July. The rate may be recovered in a summary way before a justice in like manner as wages

(see 14 & 15 Vict. c. 92, s. 16, p. 156), at the suit of the Department of Agriculture,<sup>1</sup> if no board of conservators of the district shall have been formed, or if such board shall have been formed, then at the suit of the clerk of the said board of conservators (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1848, s. 24).

The following shows the cases in which licences are required (11 & 12 Vict., c. 92, Schedule, as amended by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 114):—

Scale of licence duties for each engine, net, instrument, or device used in salmon, trout, pollen, or eel fisheries:—

(1) single salmon rods, £1; (2) cross-lines and rods, £2; (3) snap-nets, £1 10s.; (4) draft-nets or seines, including (R. (Johnston) v. Coleraine Conservators, (1906) 2 I.R. 219, 244) draft-nets for eels, £3; (5) drift-nets, £3; (6) trammel-nets, or draft-nets for pollen, £1 10s.; (7) pole-nets, £2; (8) other nets, or similar engines not named above—such licence duties as shall be fixed by commissioners<sup>2</sup> or conservators as provided by the Act (that is, by section 21); (9) bag-nets, £10; (10) fly-nets, £5; (11) stake-nets, or stake-weirs (Scotch), £30; (12) head-weir, £6; (13) for every box, cruive, or drum-net in any weir for taking salmon or trout, £10; (14) for every gap, eye, or basket in any weir for taking eels, £1.

The licence is available to the 31st December next after issue (Hosford v. Mackey, (1897) 2 I.R. 292).

“Any persons using or erecting any engine, net, instrument, or device whatsoever, without being duly licensed under the provisions of the before-recited Act of the twelfth year of Her Majesty,<sup>3</sup> or this Act, shall be liable to pay such penalty, not less than double nor more than treble the licence duty which the engine, net, instrument, or device he shall have been so using or erecting would, for the time being, be subject to under the said Act or this Act, in addition to the forfeiture of the engine so used, anything in the said-recited Act to the contrary notwithstanding” (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1850, s. 12).

An owner is not liable for the fishing of an eel-weir, his property, without a licence by his servants, during his absence and contrary to his express instructions (Hosford v. Mackey, (1897) 2 I.R. 292). It has been held that a conviction for “using, fishing, or erecting a draft-net” is not bad as alleging alternative offences (R. (Coyle) v. Tyrone J.J., (1908) 42 I.L.T.R. 26).

Any person fishing with single rod and line, without a licence<sup>4</sup> so to do, shall be subject to the same penalty<sup>5</sup> as is imposed by section 12 of 13 & 14 Vict. c. 88, upon persons using any engine, net, instrument, or device without being duly licensed (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1869, s. 17).

The licence, which costs £1, is required for salmon (11 & 12 Vict. c. 92, sch.), which includes sea-trout (13 & 14 Vict. c. 88, s. 1), and is available throughout Ireland (11 & 12 Vict. c. 92, s. 30), to 31st December next after issue (Hosford v. Mackey, (1897) 2 I.R. 292). A person with one licence using more than one rod at the same time is subject to the penalty (Combridge v. Harrison, (1895) 72 L.T. 592).

“Such licence shall be only good and valid for the year, district,<sup>6</sup> and purpose for which the same shall be issued, and for no other; and . . . any party using or presenting the same for any other year, district, or

purpose, or in any manner altering or fraudulently counterfeiting the same, shall be liable to a penalty, not less than the whole amount of the licence duty for which the same shall have been issued, or which the party so misusing or counterfeiting the same would be liable to under this Act, and not exceeding double the amount of the same, at the discretion of such justice or justices before whom the offence may be tried" (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1848, s. 28).

Not producing licence when required.

"Any person using any such engine, net, instrument, or device, as aforesaid, or having the same erected or in fishing order, or found with the same in his possession in or near any fishing place, or going to or returning from fishing, shall, and is hereby required to, produce to any of the said commissioners or any officer of the said commissioners, or any conservator of the district, or any inspector, water bailiff, or officers, or men of the navy, coast-guard, or constabulary, when demanded, the licence for the same, under and subject to like penalties (in case of failure) as in the last preceding provision mentioned: Provided always, that such parties as shall to the satisfaction of the justices or justice be proved to have them in possession as manufacturers or sellers of the same, and not for the purposes of using the same within the year in which such demand shall be made of them respectively, shall be exempt from any such penalty" (s. 29).

Fishing for salmon with fixed engine without certificate.

"Any person who shall fish with, make use of, or erect any fixed engine for the capture of salmon without having obtained a certificate from the Special Commissioners for Irish Fisheries under the provisions of the Salmon Fishery (Ireland) Act, 1863, or a certificate from the inspectors acting in the execution of this Act in regard to such fixed engine, shall forfeit such fixed engine, and incur a penalty of £50, and a further penalty of £20 for every day during which such fixed engine shall have been erected, used, or fished with; and any person authorized to enforce the provisions of this Act and of the Acts therewith incorporated, may seize and take possession of any such fixed engine: Provided always, that where the Court of Queen's Bench shall on appeal from the decision of the said Commissioners or inspectors have decided that any such fixed engine is legal, the said inspectors shall give a certificate to that effect to the person entitled thereto" (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1869, s. 16).

Bye-laws.

The Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland have power, formerly vested in the inspectors of fisheries, to make bye-laws for the regulation of the fishing of any district, and to impose penalties not exceeding £5 for their breach (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1842, s. 91). A printed copy of any bye-law obtained from the clerk of petty sessions at a price not exceeding one shilling, and certified by him to be correct, is sufficient evidence of the existence of the bye-law and of its due publication (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1842, s. 93).

Every document purporting to be an instrument issued by the Department, and purporting to be sealed with the seal of the Department or signed by the secretary or person authorized to act on his behalf, shall be admissible in evidence, and be deemed to be such instrument without further proof unless the contrary is shown (Agriculture and Technical Instruction (Ir.) Act, 1899, s. 21 (1)).

For a list of bye-laws made under s. 91 of the Act of 1842, see Conner and Farran's Fisheries Acts, App. B and C.

Illegal
methods of taking fish.
Poisoning river.

"No person shall throw, empty, or cause to run or flow into any river or lake any dye stuff, or other deleterious or poisonous liquid, or shall throw into such river or lake any lime, spurge, or other deleterious or poisonous matter, or shall steep in such river or lake any flax or hemp"—Penalty, not exceeding £10 (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1842, s. 80).

In Murphy v. Conservators Ilan River, (1887) 21 I.L.T.R. 20, it was held in the county court that dynamite<sup>1</sup> was deleterious matter under the above section. See also s. 32 of the Malicious Damage Act, 1851, 24 & 25 Vict., c. 97, which makes the putting of lime, &c., into a private fishery an indictable offence, under "MALICIOUS INJURIES TO PROPERTY" in INDEX OF INDICTABLE OFFENCES.

Illegal
taking fish.

"Any person found on the bank of or near any river with any deleterious matter in his possession, under such circumstances as shall satisfy the court before whom he may be tried that such person had employed or was about to employ such deleterious matter for the capture or destruction of fish . . . penalty not less than £5 nor more than £10 for every such offence: and any person found taking fish from any river or lake, where it shall be proved to the satisfaction of any justice or justices that such fish have been wilfully poisoned . . . penalty of not less than 10s. nor more than £5" (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1850, s. 36).

To sustain a conviction it is not necessary to prove that the person taking the fish had poisoned them himself (Stead v. Tillotson, (1900) 16 T.L.R. 170).

"Any person who uses dynamite or other explosive substance to catch or destroy fish in a public<sup>2</sup> fishery"—Penalty, not exceeding £20 or two months' imprisonment with or without hard labour (Fisheries (Dynamite) Act, 1877, s. 2).

Using explosives.

"Any offence committed under this Act on the sea-coast or at sea within one marine league of the coast shall be deemed to be committed in a public fishery, and if beyond the ordinary jurisdiction of any court of summary jurisdiction, shall be deemed either to have been committed on the land abutting on such sea-coast or adjoining such sea, or to have been committed in any place where the offender is found, and may be tried and punished accordingly" (s. 3).

"If any person shall, between sunset and sunrise, have or use any light or fire of any kind, or any spear, gaff, strokeall, or other such instrument, with intent to take salmon or other fish in or on the banks of any lake or river, or if any person shall be found at any time chasing, injuring, or disturbing spawning fish or fish on the spawning beds, or attempting to catch fish in such places (except with rod and flies only, within the lawful period), or damming or teeming or emptying any river or mill-race for the purpose of taking or destroying any salmon or trout, or the fry thereof, every person so offending in any of the cases aforesaid shall forfeit all such instruments, and shall also forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding £10" (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1842, s. 78).

Taking
salmon, trout, &c., at night in inland rivers, &c.

"It shall not be lawful, in any fresh-water river or lake, at any season of the year, to use for the purpose of taking fish any otter, lyster, spear, strokehaul, dree draw, or gaff (except when the latter implement may be used solely as auxiliary to angling with rod and line, or for the purpose of removing fish from any legal weir or box by the owner or occupier thereof), and if any person shall offend against this provision he shall upon conviction thereof forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding £10 nor less than £4, and shall also forfeit such implement and the materials thereof: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to extend to eel spears" (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1850, s. 40).

Otters, spears, gaffs, &c.

The exception mentioned in the section need not be negatived in the summons or conviction (R. (Sheahan) v. Cork JJ., (1907) 2 I.R. 5). An "otter" does not mean the animal so called, but a board to which a line is attached (Alton v. Parker, (1896) 30 I.L.T. & S.J. 87).

<sup>1</sup> The grounds upon which the court so held would have applied equally to any other explosive substance.

taking fish.
Cross-lines.

"It shall not be lawful for any person (save the proprietor of a several fishery, or any person duly authorized by him in writing, within the limits thereof) to take, catch, or fish for any salmon or trout by means of cross-lines in any river"—Penalty, not exceeding, £5 (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1842, s. 70).

Taking salmon or trout in eel-weir.

"If the proprietor or tenant of any eel-weir shall take or suffer to be taken therein any salmon or trout, or salmon or trout fry, or spent salmon, every such proprietor or tenant shall forfeit and pay for each and every such offence any sum not exceeding £10" (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1842, s. 77).

Illegal nets.

"No net or other engine covered with canvas, hide, or other material by which unsizable and young fish may be taken or destroyed shall be used on the sea-coast or within any estuary, except for the purpose of dredging for shell-fish"—Penalty, forfeiture of net or engine and fine not exceeding £10 (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1842, s. 6).

"No net . . . for the taking of salmon or trout in the sea, estuaries, or tideways, or for the taking of any fish in the inland and fresh-water portions of rivers and lakes, shall be used with a mesh of less size than  $1\frac{3}{4}$  inches from knot to knot, to be measured along the side of the square, or 7 inches to be measured all round each such mesh, such measurements being taken in the clear when the net is wet"—Penalty, not exceeding £10 and forfeiture of net (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1845, s. 11). The fishery inspectors may alter the size of mesh required (s. 12).

"No person shall make use of or fish with any such net" [i.e. haul or draft net, or seine] "formed with a false bottom (except nets for the taking of eels), or shall place two or more such nets one behind the other, or use any nets covered with canvas, hide, or other substance, for the purpose of taking small fish, or shall affix or keep up continued nets stretched across any river; and . . . no person shall lay, draw, make use of or fish with any nets within the limits of any several fishery without a licence in writing from the owner or renter of such fishery"—Penalty, forfeiture of net and fine not exceeding £10 (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1842, s. 66).

Nets are "across" a river whenever there is not left open a channel sufficiently wide and sufficiently deep for the passage of salmon (Wilson v. Moy Fishery Coy., (1886) 19 L.R.I. 270, at p. 295). The owner of any land forming the bank of a river is the owner of a several fishery in the water between his bank and the middle thread of the river, unless the several fishery in such water is vested in some other person (Waterford Conservators v. Connolly, (1889) 241, 4 I.L.T.R. 7).

Erecting (save by the proprietor of a several fishery in the whole of an estuary or river) any stake weir, stake net, bag net, fixed net,<sup>1</sup> or contrivance for placing or erecting a net in any part of any estuary or the mouth of or tidal part of any river of which the breadth of the channel at low-water of spring-tides is less than three-quarters of a statute mile. Placing, or erecting, save by the proprietor of a several fishery within the limits thereof, any such weir or net within one statute mile seaward, coastwards, or inwards from or on either side of the mouth<sup>2</sup> or entrance of any river, the inland portion of which is frequented by salmon, if the breadth of the mouth is less than one half statute mile at low water of spring tides—Penalty, not exceeding £30 and forfeiture of net, &c., and <sup>1</sup> Fixed nets shall extend to and include weirs, stake bag, stop and still nets, and all other engines or devices used for the like purposes, of whatsoever construction or material the same may be, or however known or styled, and whether fixed to the soil or held by hand or made stationary in any other way (13 & 14 Vict. c. 88, s. 1). Drift nets are not within the definition (Irish Society v. Fleming, 1910, M.R. as yet unreported).

justice shall order the stakes thereof to be pulled down or destroyed at the expense of the person so offending (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1842, s. 22).

Illegal

Illegal nets.

Erecting or maintaining a stake net or stake weir so that they or the leaders thereof extend further than from high to low water-mark of spring-tides, or so that such weir is capable of taking young or unsizable fish, or so that the meshes are not stretched to their full opening, or so that the netting of the leaders of bag nets cannot be raised and kept out of the waters; or erecting or maintaining stake weirs, stake nets, or other fixed nets so that clear opening cannot be made during the close seasons—Penalty, not exceeding £10 or less than £1 (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1842, s. 26; Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1850, s. 43). See CLOSE SEASON, post.

Placing or continuing a bag net within a river or estuary as defined by the inspectors of fisheries or within three statute miles of the mouth of any river as defined by the inspectors—Penalty not less than £5 or more than £20 for every day placed or allowed to continue, and forfeiture of net and salmon (Salmon Fishery (Ir.) Act, 1863, s. 3). The section is not to apply to bag nets legally erected within three miles of mouth of a river before 28th July, 1863, where the proprietor has the exclusive right of catching salmon in the whole of river and tributaries (ib.).

Using (except by the proprietor of a several fishery within the limits thereof) any net for taking salmon at the mouth of any river opening into the sea, where the breadth of such mouth between the banks does not exceed a quarter of a mile statute measure.

Using (except by the proprietor of a several fishery within the limits thereof) any net for taking salmon within half a mile seaward or half a mile inward or along the coast from the mouth of any river, such mouth to be defined and mapped in case of dispute by the Commissioners.

Using (save by the owner of a several fishery in the whole of a river and its tributaries within the limits of such several fishery) nets in any part of a river prohibited by bye-law—Penalty, fine not exceeding £10 nor less than £1, and also 5s. for every fish taken, and forfeiture of net (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1850, s. 44). The net, even though not seized, may be ordered to be forfeited (Grant v. Corcoran, (1868) I.R. 2 C.L. 317).

Shooting, drawing, or stretching nets entirely across the mouth or across any other part of a river (save by the proprietor of a several fishery in the whole of a river and its tributaries)—Penalty, not exceeding £10 (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1842, s. 27). The word "across" in this section means so far across as to completely obstruct the passage of salmon (Wilson v. Moy Fishery Co., (1886) 19 L.R.I. 295).

"It shall not be lawful to use any net, instrument, or device for taking fish (save and except rods and lines only) within 200 yards of any such weir,<sup>1</sup> either above or below the same"—Penalty, not less than £2 or more than £10, and forfeiture of net, &c. (s. 37). Exemption to owner of several fishery who has exercised right since before 14th August, 1830 (ib.).

Taking fish
near weirs.

It shall not be lawful for any person or persons, although lawfully possessed of a several fishery before 14th August, 1830, "to use any box, crib, cruive, net, instrument, or device for taking fish (save and except rods and lines only) at or within fifty yards, either above or below a mill-dam, unless there is attached to such mill-dam a fish-pass of such form and dimensions as may be approved of by the Fishery Inspectors, nor unless such fish-pass has constantly running through it such a flow of water as will enable salmon to pass up and down it"—Penalty, not exceeding £20, nor less than £5 (Salmon Fishery (Ir.) Act, 1863, s. 16).

It is a statutory misdemeanour under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 106, s. 63, not cognizable by a court of summary jurisdiction, to erect a mill or irrigation dam which has not a fish-pass approved of by the Fishery Inspectors (Kavanagh v. Glorney, (1876) I.R. 10 C.L. 210).

Not closing up waste-gates when mill or factory is not working in dry season, so as to turn supply of water through a fish-pass erected under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 106, s. 63—Penalty, not exceeding £5 (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1842, s. 63).

Not closing sluices of mill-wheel for twenty-four consecutive hours between 6 p.m. Saturday and 6 a.m. Monday—Penalty, not exceeding £5 (ib.).

Taking, destroying, obstructing, or attempting to take, destroy, or obstruct fish in any mill-pool, or mill-dam, or watercourse leading water to or from mill or factory, except by rod and line—Penalty, not exceeding £10, and forfeiture of net or engine (s. 75). In case the person actually committing the offence shall not be known or found, and if the offence shall have been committed by means of shutting down or closing any gate or sluice which is under the exclusive power of the occupier of any mill or factory, or if the offence is committed under such circumstances as appear to the justices to afford reasonable grounds for believing that the offence was committed by some person in the employment or under the control of the owner or occupier of such mill or factory, or that it was committed with the knowledge or connivance of such owner or occupier or the person in charge of such mill or factory, or through the default of reasonable precaution on the part of such owner or occupier to prevent such offence, in such case such owner or occupier of such mill or factory shall be deemed and taken to be liable to and shall incur the penalty and forfeiture aforesaid, as if such offence had been actually committed by him (ib.).

Not fixing a gateway with bars two inches apart at point of divergence and return of all watercourses from and to rivers, and not stretching during March, April, May, and such other periods as the fry of salmon or trout shall be descending the rivers, over the surface of the gateway a wire network of such dimensions as effectually to prevent the passing of salmon fry and other small fish—Penalty, not exceeding £10 (s. 76). This section is not to apply to watercourses for the supply of water for navigation (ib.), or as a moving power for machinery where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Inspectors of Fisheries that such exemption is necessary for the effective working of such machinery (Salmon Fishery (Ir.) Act, 1869, s. 4).

The onus is on the prosecutor to show (1) that there is a constructed watercourse, (2) the point of divergence or return, (3) that the defendant is the occupier, (4) that he has failed to place a grating (R. (Hosford) v. Limerick JJ., (1908) 42 I.L.T.R. 105).

“Where a turbine or similar hydraulic machine which may be injurious to salmon or the young of salmon in their descent to the sea is supplied from a river frequented by salmon, the person owning or using such machine shall, during the time in which such descent to the sea takes place, provide grating or other efficient means to prevent such salmon or young of salmon from passing into such machine”—Penalty, fine not exceeding £50, and not exceeding £5 for each day during which such injury to the fry continues (Salmon Fishery (Ir.) Act, 1869, s. 30).

Queen's Gap.

“In every fishing-weir there shall be a free gap or opening in accordance with the regulations following, under the powers of this Act (that is to say)—(1) The free gap shall be situate in the deepest part of the stream; (2) the sides of the gap shall be in a line with and parallel to the direction of the stream at the weir; (3) the bottom of the gap shall be level with the natural bed of the stream above and below the gap; (4) the width of the gap in its narrowest part shall be not less than one-tenth part of the width of the stream: Provided always, that such gap shall not be required to be wider than 50 feet, and shall not in any case be narrower than 3 feet; and provided also that no existing gap in any weir shall be reduced in width, or a gap of less width substituted in lieu thereof, or any alteration made therein so as to reduce the flow of water through such gap." (Salmon Fishery (Ir.) Act, 1863, s. 9).

Queen's Gap.

"Where a free gap has been made in a weir, but the same is not maintained in accordance with this Act, the owner of such weir shall incur a penalty not exceeding £5 a day for each day he is in default (Salmon Fishery (Ir.) Act, 1863, s. 12 (2)).

"No alteration shall be made in the bed of any river in such manner as to reduce the flow of water through a free gap"—Penalty, not less than £5, and not exceeding £50, and £1 a day till bed of river is restored to its original state (s. 12 (3)). "No person shall place any obstructions, use any contrivance, or do any act whereby fish may be scared, deterred, or in any way prevented from freely entering and passing up and down a free gap at all periods of the year, or shall use any nets or other engines within fifty yards above or below any free gap"—Penalty, first offence not less than £5, nor exceeding £20; subsequent offence not less than £10, nor exceeding £50 (s. 12 (4)).

"No person or persons shall fish with rod and line, or in any other manner in any part of such free gap or Queen's share in any weir, in any river, or hang, fix, set, or use within the space of fifty yards above or below any part of such weir any net, basket, or other engine whatsoever for the taking of fish, or in order to deter or prevent fish from going up or down the same, or place any obstruction, or throw any gravel, clay, stones, or other matter into the same, nor shall beat the water, or place or set any bridge, board, cloth, or any other thing whatsoever in, over, or across the same (save and except a temporary bridge or board during the time only when the persons engaged in the fishing of the said weir shall be passing over the same), nor shall in any manner prevent the free and uninterrupted passage of fish through the same, at all periods of the year"—Penalty, not exceeding £30, and order for removal of obstruction (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1842, s. 57). In any proceedings against any person for the recovery of any penalties incurred by violation of the provisions aforesaid, proof that such person is the owner or occupier of such weir shall be taken as prima facie evidence that such obstructions were placed by him (ib.).

"The following rules shall be observed in relation to the construction of boxes and cribs in fishing-weirs and fishing mill-dams (that is to say):—

- (1) The upper surface of the sill shall be level with the bed of the river.
- (2) The bars or inscales of the heck or upstream side of the box or crib shall not be nearer each other than two inches, and shall be capable of being removed, and shall be placed perpendicularly: The boxes, cribs, or cruives shall not be . . . hidden from public inspection." Failure by the owner of any fishing-weir, or fishing mill-dam, that has attached thereto any box or crib, to comply with the provisions of this section—Penalty, not less than £1, and not exceeding £5 for every day such breach continues (Salmon Fishery (Ir.) Act, 1863, s. 10).

"No fixed net that was not legally erected for catching salmon or trout during the open season of 1862 shall be placed or used for catching salmon or trout in any inland or tidal waters"—Penalty, forfeiture of net and fine of not less than £5, nor exceeding £20 for every day (s. 4). For a full discussion of this section, see Conner and Farran's "Fishery Laws," p. 221.

Re-erecting a fixed net after an order of any court abating same.—Penalty, order by justices for removal at expense of person re-erecting same, and forfeiture and sale of materials, and fine not less than £20, and Unseasonable fish. further fine not less than £2, or greater than £10, for every day erected (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1850, s. 17). "Order of any court" includes order of fishery inspectors (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1869, s. 20).

Unclean fish.

"If any person shall at any time wilfully take, kill, destroy, expose to sale, or have in his possession any red, black, foul, unclean, or unseasonable salmon, or trout"—Penalty, not exceeding £2 for every such fish. But person taking such fish accidentally, and immediately putting it back without injury, not to be liable (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1842, s. 74).

Fry and spawn.

"If any person shall wilfully take, sell, purchase, or have in his possession the spawn, smolts, or fry of salmon or of trout, or of eels, or in any way, or by any device, wilfully obstruct the passage of the said smolts or fry, or injure or disturb any such spawn or fry, or any spawning-bed, bank, or shallow where the same may be"—Penalty, not exceeding £10, and forfeiture of nets or engines used (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1842, s. 73).

Selling under-sized pollen.

"It shall be illegal to take pollen of less size than eight inches in length, measured from the nose to the utmost extent of the tail, and any person wilfully taking, killing, destroying, buying, selling, or exposing for sale, sending, or having in his custody or possession any pollen of less size than that hereinbefore mentioned"—Penalty, one shilling for each such fish, and forfeiture of fish (Pollen Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1891, s. 3). This does not apply where the pollen are taken for scientific purposes, with the written permission of the Inspectors of Fisheries (s. 4).

Close seasons.

The annual close seasons, both as to net and rod and line fishing, vary in each district.<sup>1</sup>

There is also a general weekly close season from six o'clock on Saturday morning to six o'clock on Monday morning, between which hours fishing, except rod and line fishing, is prohibited (Salmon Fishery (Ir.) Act, 1863, s. 20).

Annual close season.

"... No person shall angle for salmon<sup>2</sup> or trout in any lake or river during the close season prescribed . . ."—Penalty, not exceeding £5 (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1842, s. 69).

"If, during the close season for salmon<sup>2</sup> . . . any person shall wilfully take or fish for, or aid or assist in taking or fishing for any salmon or trout"—Penalty, forfeiture of fish and net, &c., and fine not less than 10s., and not exceeding £10 (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1842, s. 36).

"... If any person shall buy, sell, expose to sale, or have in his custody or possession any salmon or trout so caught in such close time as aforesaid, such person shall forfeit each and every such fish, and a sum not exceeding £2, nor less than 10s., for each such fish; and in any proceeding for the last-mentioned penalty proof that such person had the salmon or trout in his custody or possession during such close season shall be prima facie evidence that the said salmon or trout was caught during the close season as aforesaid (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1842, s. 36; Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1848, s. 42). (These sections apply to a part or portion of a salmon or trout" (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1850, s. 35).

It is an offence under section 36 for a person to buy, sell, expose for sale, or have in his custody or possession, salmon or trout caught by net during the close season for net fishing, notwithstanding that at the time of his buying them, &c., angling for them by rod and line is lawful Close seasons.

<sup>1</sup> The annual close season may be varied by bye-law to be made by the Department, with, however, a right of appeal therefrom to the Privy Council by any person who may consider himself aggrieved thereby (see 5 & 6 Vict. c. 106, ss. 34, 35; 58 & 59 Vict. c. 29; 9 Ed. 7, c. 25).

<sup>2</sup> "Salmon" includes grilse, peal, sea-trout, samlets, par, and all other fish of the salmon kind, and the spawn and fry thereof. "Trout" includes pollen or fresh-water herring, and all fish of the trout kind, and the spawn and fry thereof (13 & 14 Vict. c. 88, s. 1).

<sup>3</sup> The section must be read as if the words "or trout" were inserted after the word "salmon" (Devlin v. Hurst, (1897) 2 I.R. 290).

(King v. Russell, (1909) 2 I.R. 25). In that case the defendant had in his possession, on 10th October, salmon only a few hours out of the water, which, from the marks of the meshes of a "set-net" upon them, and from the absence of any mark made by hooks or gaffs, were shown to have been taken by net; and it was proved that no fishery in Ireland was open for net fishing during October.

"... If any person shall place or hang any coghill or eel-nets or baskets... in the eyes, gaps, or sluices of eel or other weirs within the periods prohibited..."—Penalty, not exceeding £10, nor less than 10s., for each net (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1842, s. 36; Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1848, s. 42).

Occupier or owner of fishery failing during close season to remove therefrom any machine, tackling, &c., for the taking of salmon or trout, or any obstruction to the passage of fish, unless prevented by stress of weather—Penalty, not exceeding £50, and £5 a day (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1842, s. 37).

Failing to remove from fixed engines during the annual close season, unless prevented by stress of weather, all devices for taking of salmon or trout, except where such devices shall be formed of wood, iron, copper, or other rigid substance, when a clear opening of four feet wide is to be made and maintained through the pouches, traps, or chambers of such devices, and in the eyes of all head-weirs—Penalty, forfeiture of net or engine and fine not exceeding £50, and £5 a day (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1842, s. 38). These sections do not apply to weirs in the tideway for sea-fish if licensed by the Fishery Inspectors (s. 39).

Not removing from any strand, or the banks of a river, or the vicinity thereof during close season all nets used for capture of salmon—Penalty not exceeding £10, and not less than £2, and forfeiture of nets (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1850, s. 34).

The person or persons who shall be proved to have used any boat, cot, or curragh found on or near waters frequented by salmon or trout, for the capture of salmon or trout during the annual or weekly close season—Penalty, first offence, not exceeding £5; subsequent offence, same fine, and forfeiture of boat: boat not to be forfeited if owner proves its use was without his knowledge or consent (Salmon Fishery (Ir.) Act, 1863, s. 18).

"No person shall place, affix, or attach any nets to any stakes, bridges, sluices, lock-gates of canals, or other such fixed erections, or shall lay, draw, or fish with any nets whatsoever, except nets for the taking of eels as by this Act provided," during the annual or weekly close seasons—Penalty, forfeiture of net, and fine not exceeding £10 (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1842, s. 66; Salmon Fishery (Ir.) Act, 1863, s. 20).

"... No salmon or trout shall be fished for or taken in any way except by single rod and line between 6 a.m. on Saturday and 6 a.m. on the succeeding Monday morning..." (Salmon Fishery (Ir.) Act, 1863, s. 20). Weekly close season.
—Penalty, forfeiture of net or engine, and fine not less than £10 or more than £50 (ib.; Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1850, s. 46).

Not maintaining a clear opening of at least four feet in width in the pouches, traps, chambers, or eyes of nets and head-weirs; not raising and keeping out of the water the netting of the leader of every fixed net; not removing all nets and baskets, save those used for taking of eels; not removing the inscales, gates, or framework of all cribs, boxes, and cruives for catching salmon; not maintaining a clear opening of at least four feet in width from bottom to top through such cribs, boxes, and cruives during the weekly close season—Penalty, forfeiture of net or instrument; fine not less than £10 or more than £50 (Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1842, s. 40; Fisheries (Ir.) Act, 1850, s. 46).

Close seasons,

It is no defence for an occupier of a weir to prove that a failure to comply with this section was due to the default of his servants in charge of the weir, and that he had instructed them to conform to the statute (Fitzgerald v. Hosford, (1900) 2 I.R. 391).
